Now it is claimed that the power company will compensate the Bureau for the losses sustained if construction on this line is discontinued. Who is going to determine this? What is the compensation going to be? And who is going to reimburse the farmers who will be compelled by the power company's action to spend thousands of dollars more than would be necessary if the Havre-Shelby line were completed? It seems to me that is something which has not been properly adjusted by the conference committee. There ought to be some way of weighing the company's proposals and determining whether they are sufficient actually to compensate the Government for the total losses it will suffer.

If the company had made an offer of an agreement after the action of the Congress last year and could offer complete service to the REA's, it would have been a different story. But they waited until the last minute, when the line is nearly completed. So now the Government stands to take a heavy loss if the proposed action is carried into effect. We would not have been here last year fighting for this appropriation if the Montana Power Co. had at that time offered the rate which they are now proposing to offer. It seems to me the point I make to the effect that it results in giving a monopoly to the Montana Power Co. is something which should be taken into consideraiton by the conference committee. I think that the power company, by its neglect and delay in presenting any proposal until after the line had been partly constructed, has waived any right to depend on any so-called understanding, and the committee is released from obligation under the alleged understanding arrived at in the conference last year.

I regret exceedingly to see this struggle between the power interests of my State and the people again resurrected. Last year we thought that the fight had been finished and that we would now begin to witness a long period of progress and cooperation in the development of rural electrification in Montana. I think the power company is making a grave mistake in again reopening this bitter feud. There is not enough at stake to justify the power company in seeking to deprive the farmers of northern Montana of the right to have this transmission line and have access to a full supply of power from the Fort Peck project.

The power company knows that it is not adequately equipped through its present transmission lines to furnish the Havre-Shelby area with sufficient power to fulfill all requirements. The power company stands to profit enormously as a result of its control of the public power generated at Fort Peck, which the taxpayers of our State have helped to bring into existence. The power company has also been greatly benefited by the development of the Hungry Horse power project in Montana, which they tried to obstruct for years, and will now witness a great expansion of its business.

The company is expanding its business tremendously and is going to make huge profits. Already its stock has jumped on the stock exchanges because of the enormous expansion of business which will result to the company because of the fight we made in Congress for the Hungry Horse Dam and the other developments in our State. The company fought us in connection with the transmission line from Kerr Dam to Anaconda claiming that it was not necessary. They fought us for several years and tried to block the development of the Hungry Horse project. Finally Congress took action with respect to the project. After that the company came here last year and admitted that the Kerr-Anaconda power line was necessary. The company is going to benefit from it because it carries power from the Hungry Horse Dam to the Montana power centers where they are going to obtain a huge amount of that power. It seems to me that the power company should be satisfied with the tremendous growth and profits it stands to make through its expanding operations under this power development program, and not waste its time trying to crush the little group of farmers who seek to get the meager benefits of low-cost power on their farms, to which they are entitled under the national policy.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. The distinguished Senator from Montana will remember that at the very time the Hungry Horse Dam project came before us for consideration for the first time, when former Sentor Wheeler and the distinguished senior Senator from Montana appeared and asked for the initial appropriation of a million or a million and a half dollars to make a study of the project, even then the power companies protested and opposed the request.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. And now after the project has been completed the company takes advantage of it.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes. Undoubtedly the Hungry Horse Dam should have been constructed long before it was. It should have been constructed before the last war. By reason of the failure to construct the dam, big floods occurred in the Lower Columbia. The dam helps to hold back those waters, and contributes greatly to flood control in the Columbia Basin. So it seems the Congress acted unwisely in delaying that project, as it did several years ago.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. As a matter of fact the construction of the dam changed the entire situation around Kalispell, Mont., did it not?

Mr. MURRAY. Yes. It has changed the entire situation in the whole State of Montana as well as in the Dakotas. In that section of the country we were losing population. Just before the project was begun we had fewer people in Montana than there were in Montana 30 or 40 years before.

The population had greatly dwindled because we had no balanced economy. All we had was an agricultural economy. After the young people had gone through school and graduated from college, they were obliged to leave the State and go to other sections. As a result of this development, however, people are coming into Montana seeking to obtain the power created by the project, to use it for industrial purposes.

Yesterday I had a conversation with a man who represents a concern which wants to construct an aluminum production plant in Montana. Mr. Raver, of the Bonneville Power Authority, has been negotiating with him. That is one illustration of what is occurring. Hundreds of similar illustrations could be given. Such construction will develop Montana's internal economy. Montana is the third largest State in size in the Union. It could maintain a population of many hundreds of thousands more than it has now. Instead of the population increasing in Montana, it has been dwindling.

Another factor that I believe is of major importance to the Senate is the possible losses that will be incurred by the Government as a result of failing to appropriate funds to complete the Havre-Shelby line. We are not assured that the company will stand all the costs as a resulting of stopping construction, although company officials have indicated their willingness to reimburse the Government for materials involved. Expenditures by the Bureau of Reclamation, as of June 30, 1950, are $526,090. Obligations, as of July 1, 1950, will total $828,522. The estimated expenditures by July 31 will be $892,000 and the estimated obligations, $535,000. As of July 10, 10.5 miles of structures have been erected and 17.5 miles of structures framed. By July 31 it is estimated that 55 miles, or over one-half of the structures, will be erected and 58 miles of structures framed.

Should the Bureau of Reclamation now be required to terminate the construction contract and dispose of the material, it would stand to lose approximately $200,000 for designs, surveys, engineering and administration, and right-of-way acquisitions. Termination of the contracts would probably result in a loss to the Government of from $400,000 to $800,000 for settling the claims which, no doubt, the contractors for materials and construction will seek for such termination. The amount of the loss is contingent upon final determination of the disposal or use of materials and the resulting salvage value. The direct and immediate loss to the Government would as a minimum be $600,000 and may reach as much as a million dollars.

What will be the status of the structures already in place? Salvage would be costly. If the company offers to take it over, it will be an admission that the line is required in spite of testimony to the contrary. The Congress will also have to decide the question of disposal. We cannot abandon these works by merely saying, "Stop—no more work is to be done."

Mr. President, this is a tragic matter. I am confident that the conference committee which will handle this bill will not be jockeyed into this muddle of confusion which was concocted by some smart lawyers and lobbyists. No, Mr. President, this so-called offer of the company to assume the loss caused by the termination of construction of this line is not worth a penny. Such an arrangement would be contrary to public policy. It seems to me that some sort of deception must have been perpetrated on the committee to induce it to peremptorily terminate the construction of this vitally necessary line which will not cost the Government a single dollar.

In view of the present emergency confronting the country, Congress must act in this matter with caution. We can not afford to see this property and the labor which has been expended on it recklessly wasted. There can be no doubt but that the Havre-Shelby line is necessary to carry the load required to serve that area. If it was not built this year, it would have to be built in a year or two by the Montana Power Co. if it should undertake to fully serve the area.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURRAY. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Is it not true that the President today, in his emergency message to the Congress, took pains specifically to point out that the limitation of expenditures ought not to be applied to power, and that he named it as such?

Mr. MURRAY. That is correct. The Senator from Washington made a statement for the RECORD to that effect this afternoon.

Now to destroy the line after it has been almost completed would be a piece of vandalism hard to understand. It would be a flagrant and criminal destruction of property at a time when the country is facing a great emergency.

I cannot understand why anyone would propose completely to destroy a line which has been constructed and will be available for service within the next month. Certainly that is not the proper thing to do.

Furthermore, this action forced on the farmers of Montana will be the beginning in our State of a perpetual fued which will never subside, and in the long run it will be a very costly performance on the part of the power company and a great injury to the citizens of Montana.

When the power company says it will compensate the Bureau for the loss sustained by the destruction of the line, what does it mean? It means that the taxpayers of the country will be called upon to pay for it—not the Montana Power Co. Any funds paid out by the Montana Power Co. to compensate for the destruction of the line, if the courts would permit such a fraud on the Government, would be a deductible item in the company's income-tax reports; and, therefore, the taxpayers of the country would be paying for the loss that would be sustained. Also, Mr. President, the consumers will suffer, because, of course, higher rates will be charged.

If the action of the committee is reversed, the farmers of Montana, who will be the purchasers of the power supplied, will pay every nickel of the costs of the line, and the Government will not lose one cent. At the same time, the Montana Power Co. will not lose anything, either. As a result of the great power development in Montana, it stands to make fabulous profits. This seems evident from the way in which the price of its stocks and securities is jumping up in Wall Street, as I mentioned a few minutes ago.

A further matter to consider is the fact that if the Havre-Shelby line were not completed, and the Government were compelled to sell all its Fort Peck power to the Montana Power Co. at the dump rate of 2.5 mills, the Government would lose annually over a quarter of a million dollars. Without the Havre-Shelby line, it would be deprived of a profit of 3 mills on every kilowatt of power it would be able to sell to the REA's over that line, all of which would go to pay for the cost of the Fort Peck Project and transmission lines and provide for other reclamation projects.

Who will profit by such arrangement? The Montana Power Co. will get the differential between the dump rate and the firm rate for merely providing transmission service to the cooperatives' load centers. It is hard to believe that the Senate would ever condone such a staggering loss to the Federal Treasury in order to provide a profit to private interests.

I might add that, should the company be in the position of being the sole source of supply to the cooperatives, there would be no assurance that the company would provide capacity in its facilities to meet the load requirements, even though it has recently raised the voltage of certain sections of its line. I make this point since I have been informed that the Hill County Cooperative has discussed with the Bureau of Reclamation the possibility of temporarily using the Havre-Shelby line before the substations are complete, to assist in meeting its peak loads this winter, which cannot be provided for by the facilities of the Montana Power Co.

Furthermore, Mr. President, if the Havre-Shelby line is not completed, and if the Government is required to sell whatever facilities it has completed, the private power company will have a monopoly, as I have previously stated on several occasions.

In addition, if the private power company is the sole source of supply of electricity, there is no assurance that it will not raise its rates at a later period of time.

Mr. President, I realize how difficult it is to thrash this matter out on the floor with only a few Senators present. It requires the most careful attention. It seems to me that this matter could be handled more effectively in the conference committee, as has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from Arizona, who is handling this portion of the appropriations bill. I understand that it is the purpose of the Senator from Arizona to have this matter fully considered by the conference committee.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is my desire; and I am quite sure that when we reach the conference we shall have definite information down to date from both the Reclamation Service and the Montana Power & Light Co. in regard to this situation.

Mr. MURRAY. I am glad to know that the Senator from Arizona agrees with me about this matter. This is a most unusual situation. In view of all that the able Senator from Arizona has said, and in view of the facts developed in the RECORD here today, this matter should be given the most thorough and careful consideration by the conferees on this bill, with the result that the Congress will be prevented from making a serious blunder, costly to the Government, and at the same time will protect the farmers of Montana from a grave injustice by the destruction of this line after it has been almost completed.

Mr. President, the other item which is affected by this matter is the Canyon Ferry-Great Falls transmission line.

Mr. HAYDEN. Let me state briefly what the committee has done in that regard:

The committee concurs with the House in omitting the foregoing transmission lines and substations from the bill.

In addition, the committee recommends that $365,000 included in the 1951 budget estimate and allowed by the House for the Canyon Ferry-Great Falls 115-kilovolt transmission line and substations be deleted. The committee expects the Reclamation Bureau and the Montana Power Co. to negotiate, giving appropriate weight to the distances involved, a wheeling agreement for the disposal of Canyon Ferry power. If the facts show next year that the company has not acted in good faith, the committee will be willing to recommend appropriations for the construction of these facilities. The Montana Power Co. has given assurances that it will build the Canyon Ferry-East Helena section of the Canyon Ferry-Great Falls line and will include the right to use this line in the agreement being negotiated with the Reclamation Bureau for the use of the company's two existing 100,000-volt lines between Great Falls and East Helena.

Again that is a matter which we shall take to conference. It is involved in the total amount to which this item relates.

I can assure the Senator from Montana that if a proper wheeling agreement of that kind is not made, he will not have to make any argument with me.

On the other hand, if one is made, and if it is made in a manner which is satisfactory to the Bureau of Reclamation—and from what I could learn from the Chief Engineer of the Bureau of Reclamation, the negotiations are now in progress, and those in the Bureau believe they will be fully satisfied with the agreement—then I understand that the Senator from Montana himself will be satisfied.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes. If the transmission line is not carried through as proposed in connection with the appropriations, there should be a wheeling agreement which will prevent the Montana Power Co. from having a monopoly of the power from the Canyon Ferry project.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is distinctly understood by everyone, and we shall do our best to find out about it.

I hope that at the time when we take up this item in the conference, we can dispose of both of these matters in that way. If it can be handled in the way it was handled in the case of the Southwestern Power Administration and between the Montana Power Co. and the Bonneville Power Administration in reference to power from Hungry Horse Dam, and it can be handled in a way that is fair to both the company and the Government, I hope that will be done.

Mr. MURRAY. Yes. I should like to point out that the action of the Senate committee in eliminating funds for initiating construction of the Canyon Ferry-Great Falls transmission line and substations will have a serious effect on the Canyon Ferry unit of the Missouri Basin project. This unit includes the Canyon Ferry Dam and power plant of 50,000 kilowatts capacity, capable of producing over one-quarter billion kilowatt-hours of salable energy annually.

Senators no doubt will recall the action taken by the Congress several years ago when a restrictive provision barring the installation of generating facilities at Canyon Ferry power plant was contained in the Appropriation Act. It was pointed out last year that this would have a serious effect on the repayment ability of this unit, which should be a heavy contributor toward the repayment of the Missouri River Basin development. The Congress removed this restriction last year after it realized the serious implications involved in eliminating the power-generating facilities.

The elimination of the Canyon Ferry-Great Falls transmission line is of equally serious import. This line is the outlet for power to be produced at Canyon Ferry power plant and will interconnect with the Fort Peck project system at Great Falls, Mont. Should the committee's action be sustained, and the Canyon Ferry-Great Falls line be eliminated from the program of the Bureau of Reclamation, the Montana Power Co. then will be placed in the position of being the only customer or outlet for power to be produced at the Canyon Ferry power plant—unless, as the Senator from Arizona has pointed out, a satisfactory wheeling agreement is reached.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is thoroughly understood by all concerned, I assure the Senator.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, with the understanding that this entire matter is going to be considered by the conferees, it seems to me it is not necessary for me to go much further into this question.

If the company is not willing to lease a portion of its facilities to permit the Bureau of Reclamation to utilize these facilities to integrate its operations with the Fort Peck system and thus provide an outlet for the power there produced, it is obvious that the Government will realize a serious loss in revenue. Under the proposal of the committee, the Montana Power Co. will construct a segment of line from its East Helena substation to the Canyon Ferry bus bar. This will place the company in a position to monopolize the entire output of the project. Should the company refuse to lease its facilities at a reasonable cost, the only alternative would be to sell the entire output to the company or deliver power over its system under a wheeling agreement. The wheeling agreement would be entirely unsatisfactory, since it would not permit the free integration of energy with the Fort Peck project system, and the annual cost of wheeling one-quarter of a billion kilowatt-hours would be prohibitive unless such costs were merely nominal or were equivalent to a license for the full use of its line capacity.

The other alternative is even more serious. As stated previously, the Montana Power Co. has with the Bonneville Power Administration a firm power contract whereby the company will receive 50,000 kilowatts, delivered at Anaconda, at an average rate of approximately 2.5 mills. The rate for firm power from the Missouri Basin project is 5.5 mills per kilowatt-hour, or a differential of 3 mills per kilowatt-hour between the Bonneville rate and the Missouri Basin rate. The company, being in a position to monopolize the output, would be in a good position to demand an equivalent rate for Canyon Ferry power. If the company should take such a position—and it appears quite certain that it will—the total anticipated revenue from the Canyon Ferry project would be approximately $600,000 annually. The operating costs and provision for replacement would require approximately $190,000 annually, leaving a net of $410,000 annually available for interest and amortization.

Let us analyze the situation further. The tentative allocation of cost to be repaid from power revenues for the Canyon Ferry unit is approximately $18,200,000. The interest alone for 1 year on this amount at 3 percent would be $546,000, leaving a net loss of $136,000 annually to the project, without considering repayment of the original investment. By not approving funds for the construction of the necessary transmission facilities to provide an outlet for power, the Congress manifestly places the Government in such a position that it cannot seek the best arrangement for disposing of Canyon Ferry power at the established Missouri Basin rate.

If such action is sustained by the Congress, it will in effect, be placing the Bureau of Reclamation in such a position that it cannot carry out the provisions of reclamation law requiring repayment under stipulated conditions. Here, again, Congress, by refusing to appropriate a relatively small amount of money to provide these necessary facilities, will be placing the Government in a position to continually lose, year after year, part of the interest on its original investment, and also will deny it any means of returning the investment itself. I think it would be proper to characterize this as a fraud on the United States Government. It is certainly contrary to the national policy and the intent of Congress that the expenditure of public funds should be made for the sole and exclusive profit of an individual corporation. This is especially true when the returns from such investments as reclamation projects are for the development of the West. The most widespread benefit and use of the projects' products, both irrigation and power, are a part of that national policy.

Upon careful consideration of this matter, the conclusion is inevitable that the funds should be restored for the construction of the necessary facilities to provide an outlet for Canyon Ferry power in order to place the Bureau in the best position to bargain with the Montana Power Co. for the most satisfactory arrangements to dispose of Canyon Ferry power in keeping with reclamation law.

Mr. President, I think this matter cannot be fully and effectively handled on the floor with only a few Senators here. This, again, is a matter which requires careful study by the conference committee when the measure goes to conference. I should like to ask the able Senator in charge of the measure if he does not agree with me in these observations.

This is a matter which has very serious implications, and I am sure that no one would want to see the Government defrauded or imposed upon as a result of any oversight or neglect or failure to give the questions involved the fullest consideration.

Again I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona if it is his intention to have these matters—both the Havre-Shelley problem and the other problem—worked out with proper agreements which will not give the Montana Power Co. the entire advantage and will not destroy the efforts of the farmers to obtain low-cost power on their farms in Montana?

Mr. HAYDEN. That will be our effort, I am sure.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, to permit me to insert in the RECORD some matters in connection with this item?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PEPPER in the chair). Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, I had promised to yield for a moment to the Senator's colleague, the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], to permit him to discuss a matter relating to this portion of the bill.

Therefore, I now yield to the junior Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, in the report of the Committee on Appropriations on the general appropriation bill, 1951, the following appears on page 150:

JAMESTOWN UNIT, MISSOURI-SOURIS DIVISION, MONTANA-SOUTH DAKOTA

The 1951 budget estimate for this project under phase B (planning) is $105,000. In view of the recent devastating floods in this area, the committee recommends that construction work on the Jamestown project be started at the earliest possible date. The committee, therefore, has approved the transfer of this project from phase B to phase A (construction) and recommends that the appropriation be increased from the House allowance of $105,000 to a total of $750,000.

Mr. President, I should like to make a statement to the chairman of the subcommittee dealing with Interior Department appropriations and I wish to ask whether he agrees with it:

In order that the record may be clear as to the intent of the Senate, it is my understanding that the Bureau of Reclamation is to proceed at the earliest possible date to construct the Jamestown Dam for flood protection and, because of the urgency of providing this protection for life and property in the city of Jamestown, the Secretary of the Interior should make appropriate allocations of the costs to flood control and other nonreimbursable purposes. The costs of space in the reservoir are to be allocated to irrigation and municipal water supply, to be reimbursable under contracts to be negotiated; but construction of the flood-control features shall not await the completion of these contracts.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, my answer to the question is yes, because the committee held very careful and extensive hearings on this question. The situation is desperate, and requires prompt action; and the only manner in which it can be properly handled is by means of the action proposed by the Senate committee.

Mr. YOUNG. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at this time?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say that I join my colleague in regard to the Jamestown Dam.

In addition, I have received telegrams and letters relative to the Havre-Shelby line. I should like to read those communications into the RECORD, if the Senator from Arizona will permit me to do so at this time.

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. LANGER. The following telegram has come to me from Medicine Lake, Mont., under date of July 7:

MEDICINE LAKE, MONT., July 7, 1950.

WILLIAM LANGER,
North Dakota United States Senator:

At special meeting July 6, 1950, board of trustees passed resolution to the effect that funds be allowed for completion of Havre-Shelby Bureau of Reclamation transmission line. Board definitely against Montana Power Co. buying Bureau line. Transmission lines are vital link in serving REA Co-ops. Montana Power always been hostile. Urge your support of funds to complete Havre-Shelby transmission line. Urge Montana Power Co. be stopped from buying Havre-Shelby line and retarding progress of REA Co-ops. Montana Power would like to control power source and in position to dictate to REA Co-ops.

SHERIDAN COUNTY ELECTRIC CO-OP, INC.

I have also received the following letter:

HUNTLEY, MONT., July 5, 1950.

HON. WILLIAM LANGER,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: I sincerely hope the Appropriations Committee approves sufficient funds for the completion of the Havre-Shelby (Mont.) transmission line. This.

and other like projects, must remain in public ownership if our REA cooperatives are to get power at lowest possible cost.

Very respectfully,

PLATO PICKENS.

In addition, I have received the following telegram:

INVERNESS, MONT., July 3, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM LANGER:

Government control and ownership of the Havre-Shelby transmission line is necessary for the existence of our electric co-op. We ask your support to obtain additional funds to complete the line.

Mr. and Mrs. EMIL STROVIK.
Mr. and Mrs. BERNARD STROVIK.
Mr. and Mrs. HOWARD HALL.

I also have a letter from Pendroy, Mont., dated July 7, which reads as follows:

PENDROY, MONT., July 7, 1950.

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: I am insisting that sufficient funds be appropriated for completion of the Havre-Shelby project of the REA.

I think everything should be done to keep REA throughout the Nation every home in the United States of America should have the benefit of electricity and how else will they get it, unless there is a REA. The big companies never worried about farm homes until REA came along.

I want to say, Mr. President, that that is true. At the time I was governor of my own State I could not even get a little line built to the farm home in which my sister lived. It took 7 years to get it, and the price was the great sum of $1,300, merely for putting in five posts and the wire. If a sister of the governor of the State could not get electrical service, Senators can imagine what chance the average farmer has of getting it. The situation there is disgraceful. The letter continues:

They never put electricity in the farm homes that their lines passed by. So see that the REA has sufficient funds to continue their good work.

That is in connection with the Havre-Shelby project.

I have a telegram from Havre, Mont., reading as follows:

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Urge sufficient appropriations to complete Havre-Shelby transmission lines.

COTTONWOOD FARMERS UNION,
LOCAL 145,
H. J. HANSEN, Legislative Chairman.

I have another letter, from Circle, Mont., dated July 5, 1950, reading as follows:

DEAR SENATOR LANGER: I am sending you my protest against the Montana Power Co. owning our electrical transmission lines. I fully endorse and ask our representatives to help forward the Havre-Shelby and public transmission lines.

My neighbors and fellow citizens of this part of the State are of the same opinion.

Trusting you will give your fullest cooperation in this project, I am

Yours respectfully,

WILLIAM GASS.

I have another letter, Mr. President, also from Montana, from the Park County Trades and Labor Council, Livingston, Mont., under date of July 3, 1950. It reads:

DEAR SENATOR: The action of the Senate Appropriations Committee in failing to provide funds for completion of Havre-Shelby, Mont., transmission lines project; and the Montana Power Co. offering to buy up the Government's obligations was a terrific shock to all members of our council.

Every one of you Senators remember how the private power companies insisted upon the Government allowing them to build dams, handle the transmission lines; and that they would provide the power necessary, for operation of all plants in the United States.

You well remember, that if the Government had heeded their requests we would have lost the last war, as there was and still is a shortage of cheap power; not alone in the Western States; but in the Middle West and New England States.

Instead of curtailing Government dams and power transmission lines, our council feel that we may be on the verge of world war III and the Government should immediately hasten the construction of more power dams and transmission lines; so that, if war does come, we will not be unprepared.

Therefore the council in regular meeting July 3, instructed me to request your assistance upon the floor of the Senate to see that ample funds are provided for completion of the Havre-Shelby transmission lines; but that you do everything within your power to speed up the construction of all construction work on all dams and transmission lines.

Sincerely yours,

W. J. PRIEST,
Secretary, Park County Trades and Labor Council.

This trades and labor council is made up of the affiliated unions of bakers, barbers, bartenders, boilermakers, carpenters, clerks, retail culinary workers, electricians, firefighters, firemen and oilers, hodcarriers, building and general laborers, lathers, laundry workers, machinists, musicians, painters, operative engineers, plasterers and cement finishers, plumbers, sheet metal workers, State, county and municipal employees, and teamsters. Cooperating, not affiliated: Blacksmiths, carmen, clerks, railway conductors, railway engineers, locomotive firemen and enginemen, letter carriers, trainmen, railway, and typographical.

Mr. President, I have another telegram which is from the Mayor of the city of Havre, Mont., dated July 5, which reads as follows:

HAVRE, MONT., July 5, 1950.

Senator WILLIAM LANGER,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

Request you establish funds for the Bureau of Reclamation to complete and operate the Havre-Shelby transmission lines. This line necessary to progress of north central Montana and bureau operation necessary in order to insure low rate of rural electric cooperative and other public bodies who need low cost power. Please keep faith with the people of Montana who need low-cost power for development of this area.

HARRY SODERBERG,
Mayor, City of Havre, Mont.

Mr. President, I took up with the Department of the Interior, through the Bureau of Reclamation, every one of these communications. I have here a letter dated July 13, 1950, which I desire to read into the RECORD. It is signed by the Acting Commissioner, and reads as follows:

MY DEAR SENATOR LANGER: Reference is made to your letter of July 10, advising that the board of trustees, Sheridan County Electric Cooperative, Inc., Medicine Lake, Mont., has passed a resolution urging that funds be allowed for completion of the Havre-Shelby Bureau of Reclamation transmission line.

I call this particularly to the attention of the members of this committee:

As of July 10, 1950, 10½ miles of this transmission line had been completed and practically all material required for its construction has been delivered on the site. The contractor's schedule calls for completion on September 6, 1950.

Mr. President, that is a matter of but 6 weeks from now. In 6 weeks it is going to be done, if it is not stopped by the Congress. The letter continues:

However, it is with deep regret that I inform you that the Senate Appropriations Committee has not only failed to provide funds for fiscal year 1951 for the completion of this line but also has stipulated that any money not obligated out of 1950 appropriation be returned to the Treasury.

This action by the Senate Appropriations Committee, if sustained by the Congress, would prohibit the completion of the Havre-Shelby Transmission Line by the Bureau of Reclamation and would be a very serious blow to the cooperatives who are relying on the completion of this line to meet their power requirements.

He says, Mr. President, that it would be a very serious blow. Then he goes on to say:

Furthermore, if the Bureau of Reclamation cannot complete these facilities it will result in a direct loss to the Government of from $600,000 to $1,000,000 as a result of having to terminate construction and material contracts already in force. In addition, if the Havre-Shelby line is not constructed by the Government the Fort Peck project will lose a principal outlet for firm power. This may well result in requiring the project to sell firm power which has a value of 5.5 mills per kilowatt-hour at a rate for dump energy, or 2.5 mills, a loss of 3 mills. After the load has been built up over a period of 10 years, it will result in an estimated annual loss of almost $250,000.

If construction is permitted to proceed—

For which my distinguished friend from Montana has so eloquently argued—

If construction is permitted to proceed repayment of the costs of these facilities are assured.

I say to my friend from Montana, how are we saving one single penny? It is said that we are saving a million dollars when, as a matter of fact, the Bureau of Reclamation says:

If construction is permitted to proceed repayment of the costs of these facilities are assured. The original repayment studies indicated pay-out with an investment of $2,800,000, which has now been reduced to $1,995,000, as a result of very favorable bids. The Government's investment will be amply protected under these circumstances.

Sincerely yours,

KENNETH MARKWELL,
Acting Commissioner.

Mr. President, I submit that here is a project which will be completed by September 6, approximately 6 weeks. Certainly Congress ought to be jealous of the fact that by previous action it has authorized its construction. It has led thousands of farmers to believe that REA would control the transmission line. We have spent millions of dollars to build the Fort Peck project, and certainly every taxpayer in the country, whether he lives in Montana or in some other State, ought to be anxious to see to it that no single outfit, such as the Montana Power Co. or any other, should have a monopoly on that power. Certainly after the Government has spent all this money to build the dam, we should spend more money to build a transmission line to get the power to the farmers, because that, in essence, is the entire REA program.

I yield the floor.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a group of telegrams which I have received from persons in Montana. The first telegram is from the Governor of Montana, which reads as follows:

HELENA, MONT., July 14, 1950.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.:

I sincerely hope you are successful in your fight for the restoration of the Shelby-Havre transmission line before the United States Senate. I was keenly disappointed that the Appropriations Committee eliminated this line because it is of vital necessity to the people of this State. We need this line if Montana is to prosper and I feel so deeply about it that I made a State radio address the day before yesterday urging the people to wire you urging that the Senate restore the appropriations for the line. The response which I have received because of the radio address has been most gratifying and I assume that you have received many telegrams of the same nature. Best wishes for your success in this most worthy endeavor.

Regards.

JOHN W. BONNER,
Governor of Montana.

Mr. President, I ask that the other telegrams which I hand to the official reporter may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Washington, D. C.:

Urge you to use all your influence to secure funds for completion of Havre-Shelby and Canyon Ferry transmission lines. This plea comes from more than 300 farm families and REA patrons meeting in Great Falls tonight whose welfare is at stake. We demand an end to the exorbitant power rates now levied by a private power company that takes Government power from Fort Peck at a low rate and sells to our rural electric cooperatives. Give us a chance to live decently with low-cost power and lights on our farms.

CASCADE COUNTY FARMERS UNION,
FRED NICHOLSON, Jr., Secretary.

GREAT FALLS, MONT., July 15, 1950.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Washington, D. C.:

Saving the Havre-Shelby and Canyon Ferry Government power transmission lines is vitally important to thousands of farm families in northern and central Montana who are dependent on rural electric cooperatives for their power and lights. These Montana people need low-cost power to enable them to stay on their farms and live decently. They also need low-cost power to make their cooperatives pay out. As taxpayers they are entitled to access to Government energy available at Fort Peck and Canyon Ferry on an equal basis with other power users, and that means freedom from exorbitant middleman charges by private power companies. The Havre-Shelby transmission line is a self-liquidating project designed to bring cheap Fort Peck power to the people in northern Montana. Destroying that Government power line will put the people in the area at the mercy of the Montana Power Co. in the years ahead. The announced reduction in rates by the company carries retarding conditions that more than offset the announced improvement in costs and forecloses on further advantages for the people now demonstrated by the Bonneville Power Administration and TVA. The Canyon Ferry line will firm up farm power in central Montana and bring the same benefits for patrons of rural electric co-ops as the Havre-Shelby line. Furthermore, land improvement through irrigation will be considerably increased through more low-cost power.

Irrigation planned in the Helena Valley, Crow Creek, and Chestnut Valley will be well-nigh eliminated if Government sale and distribution of power from Canyon Ferry is stopped. Irrigation phases of the project are feasible only through the revenue possible from sale of Government power and a schedule of low power rates for pumping water: The one to make the whole project pay out and the other to make it possible for farmers to operate irrigation pumping stations without going bankrupt. Congress contemplates no additional appropriation for irrigation, we are told, and there is little hope for such action in the foreseeable future. The charge that more Government power lines means duplication of lines is not a fair nor accurate argument because present distribution facilities are not able to deliver firm power to all customers, and the power demands in Montana are increasing every year. There is need for much more Government generation and distribution of hydroelectric energy in the State, and even a considerable increase in Government power facilities would still leave ample opportunity for existing private power companies.

Besides blocking the low-cost power program in Montana, the efforts of the Montana Power Co. against the Government transmission lines, if successful, will seriously impede further irrigation developments.

Great numbers of Montana farm people are depending on your able leadership and the efforts of your coworkers to restore the funds for the Havre-Shelby and Canyon Ferry lines.

Editor, Montana Farmers Union News.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate,

Urge that nothing be put in the way of construction and completion of the Havre-Shelby transmission line because it is of vital importance to the people of this State. Its abandonment would be a serious blow to the prosperity of Montana and the future growth of Montana.

JOHN W. BONNER, Governor.

BUTTE, MONT., July 13, 1950.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Washington, D. C.:

Rocky Mountain Sportsmen's Association, being fully cognizant of what completion and operation of Havre-Shelby lines as a public-power project means in ensuring a large and stable supply of inexpensive power for Montana industry and consumers alike, urges that necessary appropriations for this project be restored by the United States Senate. Havre-Shelby, Canyon Ferry, Hungry Horse, and other public-power projects, when completed and in operation, will prove Montana's greatest attraction to out-of-State industries. In providing low-cost power for their operations, this in turn means thousands of new jobs for Montana workers, a greatly expanded market for the products of Montana farmers, and little-business men, and likewise a greatly broadened tax base so vitally needed for successful operation of Montana schools, city, county, and State governments.

ROCKY MOUNTAIN SPORTSMEN'S ASSOCIATION,
JOHN STANTON, President.

Urge no eliminating of funds appropriated for Havre-Shelby transmission line. This line necessary to serve electric energy in the State of Montana for developments.

PAUL BRISSONNEAUD.

CHINOOK, MONT., July 13, 1950.

Senator JAMES MURRAY,
Senate Building, Washington, D. C.:

Request that you use all possible means to keep the Havre-Shelby transmission line from falling into the hands of private utility interests. Be sure that funds to complete this line are added to the budget. Do not let these utilities take this line as it will mean a tremendous loss to the taxpayers whose money is invested in the Fort Peck Dam and who stand to gain by the sale of Fort Peck power at 5.5 mills to REA instead of 2.5 mills to the Montana Power Co. We ranchers and farmers served by REA lines realize that without public power we would never have the advantage of electricity we now have. Do not let private interests rob those of us who do not yet have electric service. We know this is a difficult battle but you have our endless support.

Hon. JAMES E. MURRAY,
United States Senate:

We, the undersigned, respectfully request that sufficient appropriations be made to complete the Havre-Shelby power-transmission line, and that the Federal Government operate this power line permanently in the interests of the people of Montana.

Appropriation for Havre-Shelby transmission line as a public project last year gave new hope to REA cooperatives and farmers of Montana. It must not be allowed to be abandoned as it approaches completion. Do everything possible to have the appropriation for construction of this vital project restored.

SHELBY, MONT., June 30, 1950.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MURRAY: This cooperative has been advised that the Montana Power Co. is offering to buy and is trying to secure control of the Havre-Shelby 115-kilovolt transmission line and facilities now under construction by the Bureau of Reclamation. The contractor expects to have this line completed by October 1 of this year. The members of this cooperative are strongly opposed to any action that would take control of this line from the Reclamation Bureau and place it in the control of the Montana Power Co. or any private utility. According to sworn testimony of Montana Power Co. officials in previous hearings before your committee, the Havre-Shelby transmission line is entirely unfeasible and is an indefensible waste to taxpayers money. Now we are informed the same Montana Power Co. offers to buy out the contractor, the Reclamation Bureau and the United States Government itself insofar as the aforesaid line is concerned. The complete reversal of power company statements and action at this time amounts to an admission that it was wrong in its previous testimony, and establishes beyond question that the Havre-Shelby line will, upon construction, become a very valuable asset and a key to open up the resources of the area in eastern Montana, and will be the means of giving the people of this area a plentiful supply of low-cost electric energy. In view of the value and importance of this transmission line and its facilities, it becomes apparent that it would be an indefensible act to turn it over to any private utility. In an address given by Regional Director Vernon last fall in Havre, the statement was made that this line will pay for itself and return to the people of the United States a surplus of many millions of dollars. This plain fact explains the desire of the Montana Power Co. to secure control of the line. The membership of this cooperative strongly urges the Congress to continue in force appropriations already made for this line as it is critically needed in this area.

Respectfully yours,

E. J. BYRNE,
Vice President, Marias River Electric Cooperative.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Bureau of Reclamation contractor on Havre-Shelby line personally informed me today that construction is proceeding and by end of July 53 miles of poles will be erected, 58 miles of poles framed, 63 miles of poles hauled. Also wire stringing will start soon, not later than August 1. All material on the job for this 99-mile line. Line will be complete about September 15, 1950. All persons contacted on our REA project by letter. Everyone urges that this line be completed, owned, and operated by Bureau of Reclamation, not Montana Power. Labor unions, farmers' unions, REA cooperatives, and other persons interested in this line urgently request that the appropriations requested by the Bureau for completion of this line be granted. Request you carry the fight as far as necessary. The people of Montana want this line to remain as the key to the development of Montana's resources and for military defense if the need be.

KALISPELL, MONT., July 12, 1950.

Senator JAMES E. MURRAY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

The board of trustees of the Flathead Electric Cooperative Inc. urge appropriation of necessary additional funds for completion of the Havre-Shelby transmission line. We respectfully call your attention to the necessity of this line. Even Montana Power Co. now admits this when they believe transmission line within their control. This evidence alone is enough to condemn these people and their plans to own or control this and other transmission lines in the State of Montana that are needed for the development of Montana through abundant low-cost power. We ask construction of this line in order that wholesale power may be made equally available to the cooperatives as it is to the Montana Power Co.

Let this point be definite and clear once and for all. The cooperatives unlike Montana Power Co. do not want monopoly of power. They only demand an equal right to the power resources of the Nation which in this case is only possible through the construction of the Havre-Shelby transmission line. This is not a gift if Montana Power can pay out here cooperatives will do equally well.

Our people, as citizens of Montana and the United States have this right of development and use through the facilities of our Government when necessary. Will you grant them this right?

Respectfully,

CHAS. A. GREEN,
President, Flathead Electric Cooperative, Inc.

Western Montana council for CVA vigorously opposes abandonment of Havre-Shelby transmission line. The line is a vital link in providing service for northern Montana ranches and towns and tends to prevent complete monopoly control of power resources of the State. Sincerely hope congressional action will not stop the completion of the line which is already under construction.

LEIF ERICKSON.

I wonder if the able Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and my colleague from Montana [Mr. MURRAY] would like to hear a telegram which I received from Livingston, Mont. The Senator from North Dakota mentioned a long list of persons and read a very long telegram. I also have a telegram from Livingston, Mont, which I think will explain why so many telegrams were sent with reference to this particular line. The telegram is dated July 12, 1950, and reads as follows:

LIVINGSTON, MONT., July 12, 1950.
Hon. ZALES N. ECTON,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Impelled by MVA and western council of CVA broadcasts am wiring you urging that you continue to back action of Appropriations Committee and the standing taken by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers as well as CIO in cutting appropriations for Havre-Shelby line and Canyon Ferry-Great Falls line, which would only be duplicating existing lines at expense of taxpayers and throwing Government into competition with free enterprise. Labor eagerly watching this in Montana.

WILBUR M. RANEY,
Business Manager,
Local Union No. 341, IBEW.

Mr. President, that explains why there has been an avalanche of telegrams sent here to Senators representing other States, with reference to this line.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ECTON. For what purpose?

Mr. MALONE. For a statement.

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Nevada to make a statement without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Nevada may proceed.

IMPORTANCE OF REORGANIZATION IN WINNING THE WAR

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, we are committed to the Korean war, and we shall all make any sacrifice to win that war. That does not, however, take one iota from the stigma of the stupidity on the part of our officials who made it necessary for us to get into this predicament.

The President has asked for $10,000,000,000 as a starter. We will ask the taxpayers for that amount, but no one is naive enough to believe it is the final cost. We still have no definite foreign policy. We will, I hope, scrutinize very carefully any blanket authority since he has shown little judgment in past performances in such matters.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada in an address delivered on this floor on March 4–5, 1948, said:

PEACE AND SAFETY OF THE UNITED STATES

1. The peace and safety of this Nation is seriously threatened, through the complete absence of a definite foreign policy, telling our own people and the nations of the world what we consider will threaten our ultimate peace and safety, and the complete absence of a military organization spearheaded by an air corps to enforce our pronouncement.

2. The basic subject of foreign policy has never been discussed with the American people, through two world wars, and now the Marshall plan is in the same category. The basic subject at issue (as it was in 1823 when the Monroe Doctrine was established to protect South America and the Western Hemisphere from encroachment from the European empire-minded nations) is what areas—and naming the nations in the European and Middle East countries, including Asia and the South Seas—is it necessary for us to currently protect for our own ultimate safety? Until this decision is made no plan to make it effective can be intelligently discussed.

I challenge the State Department to name the nations of the 56 member countries of the United Nations organization, whose integrity we must currently protect for our own ultimate safety, to tell the world and the American people the truth, so that any empire-minded nations may be apprised of our intentions and thus avoid what could well develop into a third devastating world war, and that our own people may prepare for their own defense, through rebuilding our military organization spearheaded by an air corps that could keep any other nation on the ground in the event of war.

HUNGRY PEOPLE—COMMUNISM—REHABILITATION OF INDUSTRY

3. It is impossible to consider the feeding of hungry people—the stopping of communism—and the rehabilitation of industry as one subject. We only confuse ourselves.

As a result we mix our emotions with the facts and become unwilling victims of the greatest propaganda machine ever established in Washington; let us take them one at a time:

(a) Feeding emergency hungry people of Europe or of any other area is a matter of charity and must be so considered apart from other considerations. The Congress of the United States has appropriated nearly $1,500,000,000 during the last 12 months for that purpose alone, and has appropriated $24,000,000,000 and handed it to the nations of the world without hope of repayment since the close of World War II in 1945.

The December 1946 appropriation of $597,000,000 is expected to last into March of this year; and the Congress is ready to consider further reasonable gifts for food, until Europe completes its third crop, to the extent that our own resources will withstand the impact without further inflation.

(b) Stopping communism through protecting the integrity of the nations of the world that we decide, after full discussion and study, we must currently protect for our own ultimate safety, is a matter of our own integrity and frankness with our own citizens—and with the nations of the world.

If we should decide, after full consideration of our experience through two world wars—and our improved methods of defense and offense—that a threat to the integrity of any member nation of the United Nations organization, by any other nation would constitute a threat to our ultimate safety—then President Monroe's exact words could be utilized in announcing an extension of the established Monroe Doctrine, leaving out any reference to the Western Hemisphere, and say, in effect, to the world and to the American people that:

"We owe it therefore to candor, and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those powers, to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system, as dangerous to our peace and safety."

We should then build at once a military force, spearheaded by an Air Corps that would bear silent evidence to all concerned that we were ready and able to enforce the extended doctrine, just as we have enforced the original Monroe Doctrine covering the Western Hemisphere for more than 125 years, and which kept us out of a major war for more than 75 years.

The Congressional Air Policy Board has recommended a long-range military plane purchase program, which would provide a 35,000-plane striking force costing $16,800,000,000 over a 5-year program. The President's Air Policy Board's recent report closely parallels this document.

The Armed Services Committees of Congress should immediately check these reports and if found correct recommend their adoption and the appropriation of the necessary funds by the Congress of the United States for the entire 5-year program.

Congress could apply the Marshall plan 4-year funds of $17,000,000,000 to the $16,800,000,000 5-year plane purchase program and have approximately enough left to continue the necessary European nations' feeding program until they raise a third crop and to furnish the necessary funds to the RFC or the World Bank for the rehabilitation of the European nations' industry under the Reconstruction Finance Corporation rules, as applied to American citizens.

(c) The rehabilitation of the industries of the 16 Marshall plan European countries, entirely separate from feeding hungry people, can then be accomplished as a purely business transaction in the same manner as such industrial plants were financed in this country by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation during depression and World War II years.

A reasonable amount of money, say $1,000,000,000, could be appropriated and made available to the RFC or to the World Bank for that specific purpose, simply providing that the RFC rules and regulations be applied to any foreign-business loans.

Their rules provide for an investigation of the feasibility of such an industry by an experienced investigator in the respective field, with an estimate of cost, together with a list of the needed machinery and supplies. They further provide for a lien or mortgage to be taken on such equipment—the stock or shares of the existing organization to be hypothecated as additional security for such loan, and then the signature of the applicant is required.

It will prove a pleasant surprise to both the Congress and to the State Department the relatively small amount of funds that the European nations will require for industrial plant refinancing, if such loans must be secured on a business basis.

4. The entire thesis and point of my argument is that the feeding of hungry people, whether located in this or any other nation—the international policy of protecting the integrity of foreign areas in the interest of our own ultimate safety—and the rehabilitation of industrial plants in such foreign nations, must be considered separately to make sense and to be understood by our own people.

The extent that we can and should feed the hungry people of the world—and the amount of money we may loan for rehabilitation of industrial plants on a business basis throughout the world—is the particular business and responsibility of the Congress of the United States—while the international policy, the determination of the areas and nations of the world that we must currently protect for our own ultimate safety is a State Department matter.

Mr. President, just common, ordinary horse sense would dictate that the executive branch of our Government, which is charged by the Constitution with fixing foreign policy, would do just that within the 5 years since the close of World War II and prepare to defend the doctrine established. No one, least of all the State Department, seems to have any definite idea of what lies ahead.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nevada insists that the proper procedure at this time is for the Secretary of State, Dean Acheson, to resign because of his stupid bungling in foreign policy which has brought this country to its present plight.

The Department which carries on our diplomatic relations should be completely reorganized.

In World War I, when the fighting was toughest for the British, the scandal of ammunition shortage and incompetent thinking by the top officials caused a collapse of the Government and put Lloyd George in power. Thus, there is a good precedent for reorganizing to win.

There is little confidence in Secretary Acheson or the State Department anywhere in this country, either to keep us out of war or to win such a war with a minimum cost in lives and property once we are committed.

REPORT OF AVIATION COMMITTEE, 1948

Mr. President, at that time there was a report available from two aviation committees, one appointed by the President and one appointed by the Congress of the United States. They agreed that approximately $17,000,000,000 was necessary to be spent over a period of 5 years to build an air corps that could keep any nation on the ground that doubted our ability to defend the areas named as important to our ultimate safety, and to put the foreign nations on notice so that they would not try out their strength to see what we would do in such a case.

UNPLEASANT EXPERIENCES WITH STATE DEPARTMENT

The many unpleasant chapters of American diplomacy in the Far East, of which Korea is the latest but probably not the last, are the direct sequel to amateurish bungling, which, in retrospect, actually seems to have been designed to make the Communists dominant in Asia. Very recently we were informed by a prominent State Department official that a group in our State Department believed that a dose of communism would be "good for Asia." These men are still in responsible positions in our Government.

The junior Senator from Nevada wonders if the attachment of some of our State Department officials, including Secretary Acheson, for Great Britain had its basis in the fact that those officials approved Great Britain's assistance to the Communists.

Mr. President, let me read a brief news item. It is an Associated Press dispatch which appeared in the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin and other newspapers on July 17:

HONG KONG, July 17.—Shipping between Hong Kong and Communist China is stepping up.

About 20,000 tons of cargo is scheduled for Shanghai, Tientsin and Tsingtao within the next few days.

The cargo is mainly industrial chemicals, paper, copper wire, steel bars, cotton, medical supplies, and petroleum.

Shippers here are reported looking forward to full-scale resumption of trade with Red China now that the Chinese Nationalists air and sea arms have been restricted in their operations against the Chinese mainland by presence of the United States Seventh Fleet in the Formosa Strait.

OUR FLEET STOPPING NATIONALIST CHINA'S INTERFERENCE WITH ENGLAND'S SHIPMENTS OF WAR MATERIAL TO COMMUNIST CHINA

It will be well to remember that the President's direct orders were for the Seventh Fleet to stop the Nationalist Government from interfering with this shipping (Englands shipping of war material to Communist China). Therefore, it is understood that "20,000 tons in a few days" would make up a lot of steel bars, copper wire, medical supplies, cotton, and petroleum that are necessary for these areas to ship on to North Korea to use against American troops.

Today's Wall Street Journal says:

Britain announced she has shut off all oil shipments to Communist China.

Apparently she is still furnishing the Communists with chemicals, paper, copper wire, steel bars, and cotton, as well as other supplies, all of which are necessary to continue the war in Korea.

JOINT RESOLUTION TO STOP AID TO RUSSIA

Mr. President, I may mention further that on January 24 of this year the junior Senator from Nevada introduced a joint resolution which would have stopped any assistance from this country to any of the 16 Marshall-plan countries who furnished war materials or materials which would be helpful in consolidating the gains of the Communists and in preparing them for world war III in eastern Asia and China. Mr. President, that joint resolution is still buried in a Senate committee controlled by the Democratic Party.

Mr. President, those treaties are still in full force and effect, and no indication has been had that those countries are not shipping goods as usual. Those goods include all the materials, such as ball bearings, tool steel, and electrical equipment, heavy road machinery to build roads and airports, and heavy farm machines to step up food production. They include all the material that is necessary for the Russians to consolidate their gains and to fight world war III with us. It is the State Department that has said Russia is backing the North Koreans in this war.

Mr. President, these shipments have been going forward for 5 years, and are still being delivered to Russia and the iron-curtain countries. We say we are going to contain Russia. Contain her with what? By shipping her every known material that we have in the United States of America and in the 16 Marshall-plan countries to whom we are furnishing the industrial machinery with which to make all kinds of war material. That is the State Department's idea of containing Russia.

DIPLOMATS GET US INTO WARS

Someone once said that our diplomats get us into wars and our Armed Forces fight them. In our present trouble in Korea, let us face the facts. This is the third world war a Democratic administration has gotten us into, and the junior Senator from Nevada, speaking for himself, would like to say that if they save him from about two more wars it will be too late.

KOREA RESULT OF STUPID POLICY

We are now having trouble in Korea because of our stupid foreign policy. We would probably never have had to face what President Truman calls this threat to the peace of the world, at least it would have been long delayed, had it not been for the gross blundering by the administration in the field of foreign policy.

YALTA—ACHESON AND HISS

At Yalta, with the advice of Dean Acheson's friend, one Alger Hiss, since labeled "a Red traitor," our ailing President bribed Stalin to intervene in the far-eastern war.

This was quite unnecesary, for, as Mr. Hiss no doubt well knew, Japan was then on its last legs and had already made several unofficial overtures for peace.

Manchuria was handed over to the Reds at Yalta, and this paved the way for the Red advance into China and Korea.

MR. ACHESON—RECOGNITION OF RED CHINA

Mr. Acheson's recent statement that the United States would not use its veto power in the United Nations to block recognition of the Communist regime in China was a weak-kneed position to take against the advancing aggressor, and was virtually an invitation to the Reds to go further.

We are encouraging the United Nations to accept Communist China as a member, and to displace the Nationalist Government of China, at a time when Communist China, supplied by our supposed ally, is obviously sending important war supplies into North Korea to fight against American boys and girls—material being furnished Communist China by England through Hong Kong. Obviously these supplies are reaching there, and the additional manpower is being furnished from China and Russia.

We have no direct information—at least the State Department has not given it to us—whether the troops are coming from Russia or China or both, but they are well-trained troops.

There is 75,000,000 available manpower in Communist China to throw against America when the time comes.

STATE DEPARTMENT NEITHER SUPPORTED NOR OPPOSED KOREA

Mr. President, either the State Department should have clearly abandoned southern Korea, or should have done the things necessary to make it clear that an attack on southern Korea would be opposed by us. It did neither. Why? Partly because our foreign policy is both casual and improvised, and partly because the State Department is unwilling to tell the American people to what it has committed them.

DEFICIT DIPLOMACY—ACHESON-LATTIMORE POLICY

It is imperative that a stop be put to the State Department's deficit diplomacy. The administration has allowed our commitments to increase while our power to meet them has been allowed to decline.

Obviously, General MacArthur did not prepare for the Korean campaign because our State Department had never informed him that it had made commitments which might require such a campaign.

In fact, the junior Senator from Nevada is informed that the State Department was responsible for the military abandonment of Korea in the first place, in accordance with recommendations which were admittedly made by Lattimore to the State Department.

STATE DEPARTMENT NEVER CONSULTED MACARTHUR OR BADGER

Our State Department never once consulted either of the two persons best qualified to advise us on our far-eastern policy, General MacArthur and Admiral Badger.

In November 1948, the junior Senator from Nevada visited both of these men, whom he regards eminently qualified, and the junior Senator from Nevada got the same story then, a year and a half ago, which was told to our military officials on their recent visit to Japan.

The story, of course, was that we could defend Japan, Formosa, Okinawa, Guam, New Guinea, and the South Seas at a tremendous increased cost in manpower and equipment following the loss of China—but that psychologically and economically we were suffering an irreparable loss.

The American people must pay the penalty in bloodshed, loss of life, and damaged prestige throughout the world because of incompetence and lack of foresight on the part of our State Department.

STATE DEPARTMENT ASSISTED BY COMMERCE DEPARTMENT IN LOSS OF CHINA

Our stupid foreign policy has not been limited to the State Department, unfortunately. There is evidence to the effect that the Far Eastern Division of the Office of International Trade in the Department of Commerce held up the shipment of gasoline and other war supplies to China in 1948 until too late for the National Chinese Government to use them effectively.

The evidence shows that because of that delay General MacArthur sent approximately 100,000 barrels of gasoline from his own short supply to China in order to make up for what this Congress had appropriated money, and the sending of which was being held up for 30 to 60 days in the Department of Commerce.

In other words, one of our Government offices is added to the Government personnel which aided the Communists to overrun China. Heading that division was an official whose background is interesting to observe. This United States Government official was a man who was born in Asia of Russian parents and who had been denied American citizenship three times on the ground that he was not of good character and not attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States. There is evidence to show that this man, whose name was Ephriam Liberman before he changed it to Michael Lee, associated with known Communists here. He finally succeeded in gaining American citizenship, and a few months later he headed a vitally important Government office in Washington.

It is not recorded at just what point it became respectable in this country to be suspected of being a traitor to your country.

There are plenty of ex-GI's—good loyal Americans, whose integrity and ability is unquestioned—to fill the responsible jobs in this Government of ours. I understand that this man is on sick leave right at this moment, but still is technically the head of that great division.

Mr. President, the Chinese blame this man more than any other Government official for delays in vital shipments of ethane gasoline and other war supplies to war-swept China until too late for the National Government to use them effectively against the Reds.

SHOOTING WAR—POLITICAL FIGHT AGAINST RUSSIA

We went into this shooting war to wage a political fight against the Russians. Today it looks like the shrewd Russians may simply ignore the challenge, neither backing down nor openly fighting. As in Greece and in the Berlin airlift, we may be left to expend our energy while the Russians rest and continue their preparations, preparations made with materials coming from the 16 Marshall-plan countries in Europe which we are financing, and supplies coming from England, through Hong Kong, into Communist China, much of which is finding its way to the battle front, some of the material probably with the trade-mark left on them with our boys catching the stuff in their bare hands in Korea; it is not a nice picture.

NINETY-SIX TRADE TREATIES—MARSHALL-PLAN COUNTRIES—RUSSIA

I repeat, the Marshall-plan nations are shipping to Russia, or her satellite countries in Europe and Communist China, materials needed to wage war.

Through 96 trade treaties between Marshall-plan countries and iron-curtain countries we are even today arming Russia to wage world war III, and have been shipping them the needed manufactured and processed materials to consolidate their gains. It is not raw materials like those we used to ship to Japan before World War II. That went on for 5 years prior to 1941, and every veterans' organization in the country cried to high heaven about it, yet nothing was done to stop it. But at least the Japanese were paying for the materials here in the United States, and they were left to manufacture and fabricate the materials. This time we have moved a long way ahead; we are doing that job for the Communists.

RUSSIANS TRYING US OUT

Perhaps in Korea the Russians were trying to see how far they could go. If our foreign policy is not more clearly designed, these tests will continue. It ought to be determined what this country can do and what it is willing to do, and those things should be told to the world in clear terms. What areas are important to our ultimate safety?

THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH CHARGED WITH FOREIGN POLICY

The Constitution of the United States fixes the responsibility in the executive department to fix the foreign policy for this Nation. Congress cannot do it. So what are the areas we are to defend for our own ultimate safety? Let the administration name them so that the nations in Europe, Asia, and Africa, in addition to those in the Western Hemisphere, where we have made use of the Monroe Doctrine for 126 years, will know what we will fight for. So our own people, the boys and girls who came back from World War II, many of them since married and starting new businesses, are on the verge of going back. I doubt if any of them would mind going back. I would not mind going back myself, but I would like to know, and they, as citizens and taxpayers of this Nation, would like to know, what they are to fight about, what they are to defend, whether they are to defend the whole world, or the areas necessary for us to defend now for our ultimate safety.

What is to be our policy regarding the continuation of arming Russia through the Marshall-plan countries? What is the Korean war intended to accomplish? What do we do after we have pushed the North Koreans back across the thirty-eighth parallel? Do we intend to leave our troops on the thirty-eighth parallel? Do we intend to continue through North Korea and garrison all of Korea for the indefinite future? Are we going right on after we get to North Korea? The people of this country would like to know. I, myself, as a Member of the Senate, would like to know.

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

Is the sending of our troops to Korea to be regarded as a precedent. If so, of what? Despite our low opinion of the State Department, we find it hard to believe they got into this thing without an idea of what they mean to make of it. They at least owe the soldiers, their wives and parents and the taxpayers an explanation that so far has not been forthcoming.

Mr. President, I should like to read briefly from a column written by Dorothy Thompson, which appeared in the Evening Star on July 17. It says in part:

President Truman has decisively committed himself and ourselves to something undecisive. We are not, he says, at war. But Americans in Korea may reasonably wish to know when shooting is not shooting, and when war is not war.

And perhaps the President, whose international acrobatics are astounding, may be able to tell us the objective of this shooting that is not war.

The aim, we are told, is to deter aggressors and reestablish the status quo. Since United Nations exhortation has failed to deter, we are now out to destroy—just what ultimate forces is not clear.

Yet we are committed in principle to the unification of Korea. Our object is merely to prove (by force of arms) that unification may not be accomplished by force of arms.

I submit that the nightmare world in which we live is the direct result of fighting a world war for no comprehensible objective. Some of these leaders today are the same persons who got us into this mess and who now ask us to trust them not to get us into another.

By another of his remarkable somersaults, the President has reversed his recent opinion and decided to defend Formosa. But he has forbidden the Chinese Nationalists in Formosa to continue fighting Chinese Communists on the mainland. Thus communism in Korea is apparently sinful, but communism in China is legitimate.

As a direct result, according to what I have just read into the RECORD, the President's order stopping the Nationalist Government from attacking shipping on the Communist China coast has cleared the way for England's shipping to continue carrying war supplies into the Communist China area, which are immediately available to North Korea to be used against American troops.

I quote again from the column of Miss Thompson:

It would really be a brilliant Russian move to order the North Korean armies to return to the thirty-eighth parallel in exchange for moving Red China into the Security Council—relinquishing the invasion of South Korea for another invasion of New York.

STRATEGY OF RUSSIANS—ADMIT COMMUNIST CHINA TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. President, that is exactly what the junior Senator from Nevada thinks they are doing. In other words, the note to Mr. Nehru, of India, simply says that before they would discuss ending the war in Korea, we must admit Communist China to the United Nations.

We have in a grandiose manner refused to do that, which I think is highly proper, but at the same time and out of the same mouth comes the statement from the Secretary of State that we will not oppose the Communists becoming members of the United Nations and displacing Nationalist China.

That opens the way for us to recognize Communist China, by the same excuse, through the back door, a little later.

ACHESON COMMITTED US TO RECOGNIZE RED CHINA

Mr. President, I wish to repeat what I said on the Senate floor in September of last year, 1949, when England, Canada, and the United States were meeting here in their great conference. The conference to divert public attention from the most important debate in a century—extending the 1934 Trade Agreements Act. It is my humble opinion that at that moment we agreed to recognize Communist China and follow England and India into that recognition.

Mr. President, the State Department has not given up this idea of recognizing Communist China. It simply does not tell the American people the truth. It does things through the back door which it does not openly deny, and puts out tons of propaganda every day, camouflaging its actions.

STUPID HANDLING OF EVENTS LEADING TO THE KOREAN MENACE

Mr. President, the stupid handling of the Korean situation, culminating in the North Korean thrust, is but another instance proving the unfitness of Mr. Acheson for his high position. His administration has been wholly unsatisfactory and should be renovated from top to bottom.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I yielded a while ago to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] under a unanimous-consent agreement that I not lose the floor thereby.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Montana that he was not then in the chair, and did not know of the arrangement.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Montana.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, what is the situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The arrangement was that the Senator from Montana would yield to the Senator from Nevada without losing his right to the floor.

QUESTIONS ON THE KOREAN CRISIS

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a brief statement and a unanimous-consent request, with the understanding that the Senator will not lose the floor?

Mr. ECTON. I yield with that understanding, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from Montana yields to the Senator from New Jersey, without losing the floor.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, confronted as we are with a war crisis in the Far East and perhaps disaster elsewhere in the world, as emphasized by the President's message of today, it is incumbent upon all of us to do a little soul-searching to ascertain the truth in respect to both the causes and effects of our dilemma.

I hold before me a brief article entitled "Korea" in which eight very pertinent questions are asked, and because I think it would serve a good purpose for every Member of the Senate to read these questions and endeavor to find the answers, I ask unanimous consent that this article be placed in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KOREA

Why did Intelligence fail? If it did not fail, why were we not ready?

Why a handful of untrained youngsters on the front line?

Why are our tanks inferior to the Russian?

Why are we using our old-style recoilless weapon and bazooka?

Why do we not have a good supply of heavy artillery?

Why the lack of combat planes of the right type, both old and new style?

Why are we without unit task forces of landing craft and surface ships?

Why did we not have a completely equipped, balanced fighting force in Japan ready for instant use?

The American people after two generations of failure can no longer accept military incompetence in the field of preparation and readiness. The disgrace of Korea following the submarine disasters and fiascos of the First World War, the submarines again in the Second World War, Pearl Harbor, Bataan, Corregidor, is more than the public can bear. We have spent untold billions during the recent war and since—far more than would have been necessary to have had a relatively small number of highly trained men with the world's latest and most effective weapons ready for instant use anywhere.

These questions must be answered.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. I thank the distinguished Senator from Montana for his courtesy.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Snader, its assistant reading clerk, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

The message also announce that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7477) providing for the conveyance to the town of Nahant, Mass., of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I believe all of us who are Members of the Senate and work on committees usually look over very carefully the reports on all bills submitted to the committees from the various departments of the Government. I know I do, and I know the other members of committees on which I am placed do the same. We hardly ever pass a bill in the Senate without having received a favorable report from one of the governmental departments concerned. It seems to me that when the Congress passes a bill, and specific instructions respecting the bill appear in the committee report and in the debates in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the department concerned should read the report of the committees and the debates in Congress before it proceeds to act.

I wish to congratulate the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] for mapping out and defining a power policy which seemed to be fair and which seemed to be workable a year ago. The instructions in the report and as they appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD were explicit when the appropriation measure was passed by Congress a year ago.

Had the Bureau of Reclamation looked over the report and read the colloquys which took place between Senators on the floor of the Senate before they let the contract, we would not be here debating this question this afternoon. From all appearances the Bureau of Reclamation was a little overanxious to proceed, enter into a contract and get things moving irrespective of the instructions specifically set forth in the report and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a year ago which were set aside.

Mr. President, I should like to relate in chronological order a few of the things that happened in respect to the Havre-Shelby line. Before I proceed further let me say that if I thought one single farmer in Montana would be deprived of obtaining electricity on his farm by virtue of discontinuing this line at this time, I certainly would vote against the committee's proposal. But I am thoroughly convinced that no farmer in Montana is going to be deprived of electricity by curtailing this line at this time, and that the farmers are going to receive electricity just as cheaply, whether the line is built or whether it is not. I hope to be able to prove that in a few minutes.

I have always been interested in REA. I have done everything I could to assure the farmers of the Nation that they would have electricity on their farms as soon as it was possible for them to get it. I have worked diligently during the last 3 years to get the rates lowered to the REA co-ops in the State of Montana. That objective has now been attained. I certainly would not want to deprive any farm or any farmer from receiving that service at the lowest possible rate.

It will be recalled, Mr. President, that on May 26, 1948, the House committee report on the Interior Department bill for the fiscal year 1949 disallowed a request for the $1,035,000 for construction of the Havre-Shelby transmission line and substations, and further rescinded a carry-over of funds of $560,197 which had been appropriated the previous year for the line. Congress in passing the Interior Department's appropriation bill sustained that position.

Then on March 28, 1949, the House committee disallowed $1,300,000 requested for initiating construction of the Havre-Shelby transmission line, and initiating construction of the Havre-Shelby and Rudyard substations.

On July 13, 1949, the Senate Appropriations Committee reported the Interior Department appropriations bill for the fiscal year 1950, and in that bill the $1,300,000 disallowed by the House was not restored.

We must remember, Mr. President, that there was no appropriation by the House last year for this line. When it was considered by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate that committee still turned it down. But it was put in the bill on the Senate floor a year ago, with instructions which were placed in the RECORD by the distinguished and able Senator from Arizona that it was to be used as a bargaining power primarily between the Reclamation Bureau and the power companies for wheeling agreements to get service to REA's and to the farmers at the lowest possible figure.

After the House refused to place the item in the bill last year, after the Senate Appropriations Committee refused to consider it, it was added to the bill on the floor of the Senate and the conference committee agreed to it.

On August 25, 1949, when the bill was before the Senate for consideration, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] on the floor of the Senate stated:

> I suggest to them that the Senate disagree to the Senate amendment (regarding the Anderson Ranch Dam—Mountain Home transmission line in Idaho), with the understanding that the Bureau of Reclamation will do as we have instructed it to do, both with respect to Southwestern Power Administration and Montana Power, that is, seek to enter into negotiations with the Idaho Power Co. with respect to the transmission of this power.

Mr. President, what the Senator from Arizona intended and what the Senate voted at that particular time is as plain as the nose on one's face.

The bill was passed on October 12, 1949, after the Senate had restored funds for the Havre-Shelby transmission line, with the understanding that the funds would not be used if a wheeling contract could be arranged for transmission of power to the REA cooperatives in that area. This question is important, because I believe it was stated here in the Senate this afternoon that the power company did not offer to make wheeling agreements. According to my understanding, however, on October 13, 1949, the Montana Power Co. notified the Bureau of Reclamation that the company was willing to negotiate a wheeling agreement to serve the REA cooperatives in the Havre-Shelby area.

On November 1, 1949, the Bureau of Reclamation announced a call for bids on the Havre-Shelby transmission line. Many persons in that area did not even know that negotiations were going on, until they saw the announcement in the newspaper.

On November 15, the Bureau of Reclamation announced a call for bids on substations at Havre, Shelby, and Rudyard.

On December 6, 1949, the Bureau of Reclamation received bids on the Havre-Shelby transmission line.

So, Mr. President, we see that on August 25 the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] made his statement, and on October 13 the company offered to negotiate for wheeling agreements, and on December 6 the Bureau of Reclamation received bids for the line.

On December 30, the Bureau of Reclamation approved a contract for construction of the Havre-Shelby line.

On February 20, 1950, representatives of the Montana Power Co. and the Bureau of Reclamation conferred in Butte, regarding negotiations for a wheeling agreement. I understand that at that meeting the Havre-Shelby line was discussed.

Sometime in March, the Bureau of Reclamation received bids for a substation near Havre.

On March 18, 1950, the Montana Power Co. executed with the Bonneville Power Administration a contract under which the company will purchase up to 50,000 kilowatts of power from the Hungry Horse Dam, and under which the company will serve REA electric cooperatives in western Montana for the Bonneville Power Administration.

The Bonneville Power Administration read the instructions and the statement of the congressional intent. The Bonneville Power Administration was not in a big hurry to build the line merely because it had the money with which to build it. On the contrary, the Bonneville Power Administration negotiated and entered into an agreement with the Montana Power Co., as was intended by the Senate when the appropriation bill containing provision for these lines was passed.

On March 20, 1950, representatives of the Montana Power Co. and the Bureau of Reclamation held a meeting at Billings, Mont., regarding negotiations for a wheeling agreement. That was on March 20, after bids for the line had been received.

On March 22, the contractor was directed by the Bureau of Reclamation to proceed with construction of the Havre-Shelby line as soon as conditions permit.

It was plainly evident then that there would be no possibility of entering into a wheeling agreement. Just 20 days elapsed—including 3 Sundays—between March 22 and April 12, when the Montana Power Co. adopted a new rate of schedule for service to REA cooperatives in Montana, east of the Continental Divide. When that was done, it became unnecessary to enter with the Bureau of Reclamation into a wheeling agreement to give the service at the lowest possible rate to the REA cooperatives and to the farmers in northern Montana. The schedule reduced the average rate to 5½ mills per kilowatt-hour, which is identical with the rate of the Bureau of Reclamation for Missouri Basin power.

Mr. President, I am not defending the Montana Power Co. A company which can negotiate a satisfactory agreement with the Bonneville Power Administration, and a company which has reduced its rate to such an extent that it is equal to the Government rate, I submit does not need any defense; it has put up its own defense.

However, perhaps the public power trust needs a little condemnation when a private company which pays taxes, builds its own lines, and gives a satisfactorily low rate to its customers.

Mr. President, we have heard talk about monopoly and about the possibility that the company will have a monopoly of power. We become unduly excited about the possibility that a power company will obtain a monopoly. In my State, for instance, we have a public service commission, composed of three members who are elected directly by the people of the State. That commission passes on the public utility rates, and sees to it that the people receive a just deal. If the people do not like what the commission does, all the people have to do is to change the membership of the commission at the next election—as is done in our representative government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, will the able Senator from Montana yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAGNUSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. ECTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is it not sometimes true that the so-called public utilities commissions are controlled by the power companies which they are supposed to regulate, so that those regulated actually become the regulators?

Mr. ECTON. Inasmuch as the members of the commission are elected, I do not see how they are controlled in the way the Senator has suggested, any more than any other elected officials are controlled. If the argument of the Senator were to hold, then it might be said that the Members of Congress are controlled because they are elected by the people.

Mr. President, there are three members of the public utilities commission. They are elected by the people. Certainly the people have a chance to catch up with them at some time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. For what length of time are the members of the Montana Public Utilities Commission elected?

Mr. ECTON. They are elected for a term of 6 years. However, they alternate in service; every 2 years the term of one member of the commission expires, and an election for that position on the commission must be held.

Mr. LANGER. So if the people did not like what one of the commissioners did, 2 years later the people would have a chance to elect someone else; and at the end of 6 years thereafter the people would have had a chance to elect an entirely new commission. So it would be 8 years before the people could change the entire membership of the commission, in view of the fact that at 2-year intervals an election is held to fill one or another of the positions on the commission.

Mr. ECTON. Of course, Mr. President, if the members of the commission were appointed, there might be some excuse for a charge that the members of the commission are controlled by the companies they are supposed to regulate. However, when the people elect the members of the commission directly, there is no excuse for such a charge.

All three members of the Montana Public Utilities Commission are Democrats, and I do not think anyone controls them.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator think they should be condemned ipso facto because they are Democrats?

Mr. ECTON. No. I think they are good Democrats.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Montana for the tribute he has paid to the Democratic Party in his State.

Mr. ECTON. I wish to say to the Senator that I was a member of the Montana Legislature for many years, and I always got along very well with the upright and honorable Democrats.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, let me inquire whether they were formerly Republicans, and later became Democrats.

Mr. ECTON. Some of them may have flopped over, away back sometime. I do not know, and I cannot vouch for that.

So on April 12, the Montana Power Co. adopted a new rate schedule for the service to REA co-ops in Montana, east of the Continental Divide. As I stated, this schedule reduced the rate to the identical rate charged by the Bureau of Reclamation for the Missouri Basin power accounts. So no one in that vicinity can gain anything by buying Government power. It is impossible to get it any cheaper than the price at which it can be bought directly from the private company. I admit that some of the people think they prefer to deal with the Government. They prefer to get their electricity from the Government line rather than from a private line. Such an attitude, perhaps, may be compared to that of an individual who wanted to go to San Francisco, but would not get on a train because the Government did not own it. There would be just as much sense in that. In other words, if a person needs something and can get it just as cheaply from a private company, why demand that the Government own it instead of someone else?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ECTON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. Twice the distinguished Senator has stated that it would be possible to get a rate of 5.5 mills.

Mr. ECTON. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator not know that in the Missouri Basin the Montana and the Dakota utility companies buy all the power they furnish, at that rate, but that at the place where they sell electricity, where there is no REA line, they get 2 for 1? I want to ask the Senator whether that is not true in the State of Montana, the same as it is in North Dakota.

Mr. ECTON. No, not under the Bureau of Reclamation, not in the Missouri Basin, and not in the case of the Montana Power Co.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ECTON. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. It is true in the Missouri Basin, in North Dakota.

Mr. ECTON. But it is not true in Montana.

Mr. LANGER. Is the Senator certain of that?

Mr. ECTON. Yes. I have the contract here, if the Senator would be interested in it. The Montana Power Co. takes only the excess electricity from Fort Peck, which the Government does not use to supply its preferred customers. The power company purchases it at a certain rate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. If the Montana utilities companies get their power from Fort Peck, they have to get it over a line which is 200 miles long, and yet, for every single kilowatt-hour furnished them, the price could be doubled somewhere else, could it not? They keep track of the number of kilowatt-hours. I cannot believe that the situation in Montana is any different from what it is in North Dakota.

Mr. ECTON. I might give the Senator an idea of what the Montana contract provided. There has been a contract since July 1, 1943, under which the Montana Power Co. buys from the Fort Peck project all the power which is available, after supplying firm requirements of the Fort Peck project, and that can be used by the company itself, or by any other companies with which it is interconnected.

Mr. LANGER. What does the power company pay for it?

Mr. ECTON. I do not know what is paid for it, but that makes no difference.

Mr. LANGER. At what price does the power company sell it?

Mr. ECTON. In the last 5 years, I may say to the Senator, the company has paid the Government $1,814,670 for this power, and the amount of the payments has risen steadily from year to year. In 1945 the Government received $219,951; in 1946, $229,462; in 1947, $321,283; in 1948, $472,254; and in 1949, $571,720. So the Senator will see that in a period of 5 years it has more than doubled.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Of course that was due to the fact that REA was extended in those localities and used more power.

Mr. ECTON. Let me say that the Senator is talking about a Government power line, which pays no taxes to the State, county, or city in which it operates. The Montana Power Co., last year, distributed through 40 counties of the State of Montana $2,044,087.89 in property taxes. That was a part of the $6,140,823 which was its total tax bill.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. The Senator does not want to tell the Senate, does he, that the $2,000,000-plus which was paid in taxes was not added to the bill of the consumers?

Mr. ECTON. I may say to the Senator that when it is known that the State of Montana has as low a rate as any of the other 17 western reclamation States, I do not think we need worry about how much the companies make.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I return to my question whether it is not true that, in some other places where there is no competition, the private companies make good this so-called cheap rate—and it is a cheap rate—by charging two for one?

Mr. ECTON. In the suit of clothes which the Senator is wearing, a great many taxes are tied up. Does the Senator advocate that the Government should make his clothes, so that he would not have to pay taxes?

Mr. LANGER. Oh, no.

Mr. ECTON. The proposition is the same.

Mr. LANGER. There is no analogy.

Mr. ECTON. Oh, yes, there is. It is the same thing. The private-business enterprise pays taxes. When the Government goes into business, it operates tax-free. My point is that, if the State and counties of Montana had to lose $2,044,087, and the National Government had to lose the difference between that sum and $6,140,000, the Senator's taxes and mine would be that much higher.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Is it not true that the Government has built the dam at Fort Peck at its own expense?

Mr. ECTON. Yes. That is all right; I do not object.

Mr. LANGER. Why should the Montana Power Co. or any other power company buy that power, getting it from a dam built by the people, and sell it at a profit to farmers and others who pay taxes?

Mr. ECTON. I do not know whether it is sold at a profit. If the Government does not make a profit at 5.5 mills, I do not see how it can be argued that the company makes a profit.

Mr. LANGER. Does the Senator maintain that, if the Government pays $100,000,000 to build a dam, it would not be appropriate for the Government to spend an additional $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 to build a transmission line for the purpose of delivering the power to the farmer at cost?

Mr. ECTON. No, the Government is getting entirely out of its sphere and beyond its prerogative. I believe the Government should do only those things which individuals or private companies are not able to do. Let the Government build the dams, and then let private companies distribute the power and give the service, and pay the taxes. We must have taxes from some source.

Mr. LANGER. If I correctly understand the Senator, he believes in the people furnishing the money to create the power, but when it comes to distributing the power, we should let private concerns distribute it at a profit.

Mr. ECTON. Why not? If we find they are making too much money, let us tax them further. If we do not get taxes from them, where are we to get them? Are we merely to appropriate the money? Is that the way to get them?

Mr. LANGER. I submit that when the Government builds a dam and creates power and the farmers and businessmen pay the entire cost of the project, they certainly should get the power distributed to them at cost.

Mr. ECTON. They are getting it distributed to them at cost. It costs the Government 5½ mills now, and the power is going to be distributed at the rate of 5½ mills by a private company which will build its own line. Why pay for a Government line?

Mr. LANGER. How much does the Montana Power Co. pay the Government to get the power at Fort Peck?

Mr. ECTON. Since it is not firm power, I imagine it gets the power for approximately 2½ mills.

Mr. LANGER. They charge the farmers twice as much as they pay for it at Fort Peck.

Mr. ECTON. No. They do not get firm power; they get surplus power. They get the extra power which the Government does not need at Fort Peck.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Could not the Government give the surplus power directly to the farmers at the rate of 2½ mills per kilowatt?

Mr. ECTON. I do not know. Maybe we shall reach the point where we will give it to them for nothing.

I shall not take much more of the time of the Senate, Mr. President——

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ECTON. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, it is amazing to someone from New England to hear the Senator from North Dakota and the Senator from Montana arguing over whether 5½-mill power is too high. If they lived in New England or in the State of New York, where the minimum price is at least twice 5½ mills, they might better realize the value of competition in the power industry.

Mr. ECTON. I thank the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. Whether the power comes from public or private sources, both Senators are very fortunate to be even able to talk about 5½-mill power.

Mr. ECTON. I think so, too, because I know many people have to pay 20 cents and other people complain about 5½ mills. What do they want? Shall we hand it to them on a silver platter?

On April 20, 1950, J. E. Corette, Jr., testified before the Senate Subcommittee on Interior Department Appropriations, explaining the 5.5-mill rate available to REA cooperatives, pointing out that capacity has been doubled on company transmission lines serving the Hill County REA and reiterating the company offer to double capacity to the Marias REA.

This should eliminate any argument that the cooperatives cannot have all the electricity they want.

Up to April 20, the same date on which Mr. Corette, vice president of the Montana Power Co., appeared before the committee, I understand no work had been done on the Havre-Shelby line, except that some of the right-of-way had been purchased and some easements had been filed.

During Mr. Corette's testimony before the Senate subcommittee H. F. McPhail, of the Bureau of Reclamation, stated the situation. The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] asked:

What is the status of that line?

Mr. McPhail replied:

The status of that line is that the contract has been let. The contractor has been accumulating his materials. * * * The actual notice to proceed was not given until the weather conditions had approached a condition where the contractor could actually get to work in the field.

On May 19, 1950, Harold E. Aldrich, acting manager of the Bureau of Reclamation, upper Missouri district, announced that the Smith Construction Co. had started work on the Havre-Shelby line in April and that it expected to complete its part of the work by September 6.

Aldrich said contracts for substations at Shelby and Rudyard were still to be awarded and that bids were expected in July.

So, Mr. President, every effort was made to shove this contract along and get it underway, even after it was known that the rate had been reduced to the Government rate and there was a possibility of serving the cooperatives at the lowest possible rate the Government could offer. The Senate's policy that no money should be spent for Federal transmission lines if arrangements could be made to get the power to the people was reaffirmed last April during the hearings.

On April 20 Mr. Corette, vice president of the Montana Power Co., stated:

Money was appropriated for the Havre-Shelby line last year. We thought it was with the definite understanding in light of your statement, Senator HAYDEN, that it would not be spent if a wheeling agreement could be made and these REA's could be supplied at the Bureau of Reclamation rate.

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] replied:

That was my understanding.

Mr. Corette then said:

But in December we read in the paper that a contract had been let for the transmission lines and we now read that a contract has been let for some of the substations.

The Senator from Arizona asked Mr. McPhail, of the Bureau of Reclamation, this question:

What is the necessity for the Havre-Shelby line under these circumstances?

Mr. McPhail replied:

Unquestionably, the necessity would be reduced to some extent. However, I don't know what the reaction of the REA's that are directly affected may be. We have heard no word from them since this rate announcement. So I have not had any idea as to what the local reaction might be.

Mr. President, that is from the Senate subcommittee hearings, part I, page 1416.

Mr. President, I again submit that if the Bureau of Reclamation had read the report and what took place on the floor of the Senate as recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD all this confusion might have been eliminated.

Up to this time the Montana Power Co. has offered to take all the materials which have been placed in the project off the hands of the Government at cost, so the Government will not lose any money.

Mr. President, I have a few telegrams which I have received from labor unions. There are many labor unions in Montana which have been much concerned over the building of this particular line. As early as last December they read in the newspapers that the Bureau was contemplating letting the contract, and after the contract has been let I received communications from labor unions in Montana protesting the letting of the contract on the ground that it was unfair to organized labor in the State.

I ask unanimous consent to insert these telegrams in the RECORD. They come from labor unions in Montana. I ask that they be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ECTON. In that connection I ask unanimous consent that the policy as set forth by D. W. Tracy, international president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, be inserted in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ECTON. Also, Mr. President, I ask that there be printed at the conclusion of my remarks a news release issued by the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, dated May 25, 1950, in substantiation of the statement made by their president, Mr. Tracy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 3.)

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Arizona for his untiring efforts to live up to the policy which was clearly stated last year on the floor of the Senate. I believe that the recommendations of the Senate committee should be sustained.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS, LOCAL NO. 552,
By A. D. EDWARDS.

MISSOULA, MONT., July 12, 1950.

Senator ZALES ECTON,
Washington, D. C.:

The Montana State Council of Electrical Workers composed of the 17 Montana IBEW unions have instructed this office to vigorously protest any appropriation of funds for the construction of the Havre-Shelby transmission line under the present circumstances. The contract has been let to the Smith High-Line Construction Co., of Tennessee, notoriously unfair to organized or unorganized labor. His methods of operation are to the utter detriment of Montana labor; that this contractor has no intention of hiring Montana labor is shown by the thirty-odd Negroes imported from Tennessee that are at present at the site of the job. This has forced our electricians to seek employment outside of the State of Montana in Idaho and Washington where conditions like those in Montana are not tolerated. We are aware of the Davis-Bacon Act but due to the fact that classifications are not included in this act the contractor will not hire our skilled craftsmen.

The Montana State Council of Electrical Workers has no desire to impede progress but if Government power projects are to be built and maintained on cheap and unfair labor as proposed in this case of what benefit is this to the workmen of Montana; the present Montana utilities use Montana labor; pay a fair living wage, and sign and maintain the provisions of work to the mutual benefit of utilities and Montana labor.

If you are friends of organized labor you will do all in your power to prevent this appropriation and help your Montana citizens maintain their standard of living.

INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS,
Washington, D. C., March 27, 1950.

Mr. WILLIAM C. WISE,
Acting Administrator, Rural Electrification Administration, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. WISE: I am hereby entering an urgent protest on behalf of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) against the latest developments in the anti-union policy of the Rural Electrification Administration.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) which represents more than 75 percent of the unionized workers in the electric light and power industry, both private and public, has been shocked and surprised at the antilabor actions of the Rural Electrification Administration. These actions are all the more grievous because they strike at organized labor which participated in the effort to bring the Rural Electrification Administration into existence. Labor was a staunch supporter of the proposal to establish the Rural Electrification Administration because it believed that the Administration as originally set up would function in the public interest. We now find that the Rural Electrification Administration has taken such a narrow and backward view of its responsibilities and duties that it is bringing serious harm to the important section of the public interest represented by labor.

On December 17, 1949, an international representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) wrote the Montana State Water Conservation Board a letter setting forth the facts that the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) had entered into bona fide collective bargaining agreements with seven Rural Electrification Administration cooperatives in Montana and such agreements included a clause guaranteeing that work let by contract would be performed under International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) union conditions. The international representative of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) suggested to the Montana State Water Conservation Board that it would be in the interest of preventing confusion if the proper authorities would notify contractors that the cooperatives are under union agreement when the invitation to bid is sent out. This letter was forwarded by the State water conservation board to the Rural Electrification Administration in Washington for comment. On March 6, 1950, you, as Acting Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration, replied to the State Water Conservation Board of Montana and forwarded a copy of your letter to me in my capacity of international president of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL).

Your letter pays lip service to the maintenance of a policy of good labor relations and concedes the legality of the union clause in REA cooperatives bargaining agreements. You then go on to throw the entire weight of the administrative discretion of the Rural Electrification Administration against the actual operation of the union clause. You say:

"While, as I stated, it is satisfactory to the REA for its borrowers to include any legal provision in the construction contract relating to labor problems, it should be pointed out that any provision in a contract which has the effect of preventing free competitive bidding may well result in a cost of construction to the borrower which will make it impossible for us to approve the award of the bid, due to the effect of high cost upon the feasibility of our loan. We, of course, have to scrutinize all awards most carefully to make certain that the cost of construction will not be so excessive as to endanger the repayment of a loan. This is especially true in areas in which the Montana borrowers operate, where the consumer density is low, and all possible savings have to be effected in order to make the project feasible from a financial standpoint. It should be pointed out that we cannot approve awards of a bid in the event that the number of bidders is so low as to not constitute true competitive bidding. The possibility of this danger always exists whenever any kind of restrictive provisions are inserted in the construction contract."

The REA policy, as stated in your letter, is in complete contradiction of the policy of promoting and advancing labor standards through union agreements. Your emphasis on the matter of "high cost" as a reason for opposing labor standards established by union agreements and in favoring lower wages paid by nonunion contractors, is a throw-back to the days of the "sweat shop" employer who justified his position on the ground that he sold his products to the consumer at a cost lower than the cost of legitimate union employers. The REA is not advancing sound public policy when it seeks to develop a financial record for itself at the expense of the men and women whose work is essential to the bringing of electricity to the farms.

I am in complete accord with all efforts to secure a sound and economic expenditure of Government funds which are drawn from the taxes paid by all parts of the population, including labor. I would respectifully recommend, however, that the REA would do better, if it were to begin to apply itself to the task of increasing efficiency in the management of cooperatives and reducing its own high administrative expenses rather than to continue its present policy of destroying union conditions of labor. In this connection, I have noted with interest the report of the House Committee on Appropriations in explanation of the appropriation bill for the several branches of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951. (81st Cong. 2nd Sess. Report No. 17973, p. 140). The Committee approved a total of $8,150,000 for the administrative expenses of the Rural Electrification Administration during 1951. No criticism was offered in the report with respect to wages paid to the working men and women who perform useful services for the cooperatives and their members. The committee, however, did criticize the Rural Electrification Administration and its officers for exorbitant fee paid for engineering and legal work. The committee stated as follows:

"In the opinion of the committee (House Appropriations Committee), [fees paid for engineering and legal work in connection with the larger loans are too high]. It is believed that such fees should not be established strictly on a percentage basis but maximum limits should be fixed which would in the cases pointed out to the committee [reduce the fees paid substantially. These costs are passed on to the consumer.]" (Matter in brackets supplied.) (A reference is made on p. 1036 of the Hearings of the House Committee on Appropriations to an appendix including information requested on the above subject by the committee. The note in the hearings states that the appendix may be found at the end of the hearings but it appears that the appendix is not available.)

It is apparently a fact that the concern voiced in your letter on the effect of union conditions on costs has not registered itself with equal force in keeping down the excessive fees for engineering and legal work, which have been criticized by the congressional Committee.

Insofar as your statement on "free competitive bidding" is concerned, I wish to point out there is no Federal statutory requirement for such bidding on the part of such cooperatives since the cooperatives are not agencies of the Federal Government. The cooperatives have the legal power to enter into the agreements which they have made for union conditions on contract work and I believe they should be applauded and not discouraged from entering into such agreements by a Government which is committed to a policy of collective bargaining.

Your letter is written in banking terms. The Rural Electrification Administration, however, is not a banking program. If it were, there would be no need for Federal action in this field. Private money could be secured for development of the cooperatives. The specially favorable terms of interest and amortization provided in the Rural Electrification Administration Act have been adopted by the Congress because it is deemed wise from the standpoint of the public interest to give assistance to the worthy cause of bringing electricity to the farms. It ill behooves the Government officers engaged in the administration of this public policy program to close their eyes to this fact and refuse to give consideration to the needs of labor for proper labor standards. Your letter is a far cry from the policy of the Rural Electrification Administration as stated in its memorandum of understanding with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) entered into August 4, 1941, which provides that "The REA agrees to promulgate a list of labor standards embodying the spirit and letter of this general policy [and assumes the obligation of winning REA cooperatives to the acceptance of these labor standards]."

I have commented fully on the status of this understanding and the failure of the Government to implement its general statement of policy in a letter of February 2, 1950 to a State fact finding board of Minnesota, copy of which was transmitted to the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration. Today we find the REA, in the case of the Montana cooperatives, not only refusing to assume its obligation of winning REA cooperatives to the acceptance of labor standards but, on the contrary, doing its utmost within the limits of its power to win such cooperatives away from those labor standards which the REA cooperatives themselves are willing to adopt pursuant to collective bargaining agreements with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL).

The time has come to look through slogans and fine words to the actual facts. The union clause which is the subject of your letter of March 6, 1950, is not unusual. It is not a special favor the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) is seeking to secure from the REA cooperatives—it is a standard clause in our agreements with private companies in the electric light and power industry.

We do not run into the complicated considerations set forth in your letter in securing such clauses in our agreement with private companies nor in securing the good faith application of the clause. Labor is getting a fair deal from these private companies but we cannot secure equal treatment from the Rural Electrification Administration. This is an alarming fact which must become known to organized labor and all others concerned with the problem.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL) has patiently tried to secure relief from the antilabor policies of the Rural Electrification Administration by conferences and communications. I have become convinced that the condition cannot be corrected through such means. I am, therefore, releasing this letter for public information so that all fair-minded people may judge for themselves whether the labor policies of the Rural Electrification Administration are in the public interest.

Sincerely,

D. W. TRACY,
International President.

EXHIBIT 3

THE INTERNATIONAL EXECUTIVE COUNCIL OF THE INTERNATIONAL BROTHERHOOD OF ELECTRICAL WORKERS ENDORSES THE ACTION AND POLICY OF INTERNATIONAL PRESIDENT D. W. TRACY IN OPPOSING PUBLIC-OWNERSHIP TREND IN THE ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER INDUSTRY

In the interests of the commonweal there is no more pressing need than provision for flood control, irrigation, navigation, and the prevention of soil erosion.

By reason of geography and the topography of the land such provision and prevention is necessary and inescapably within the realm of Federal obligation.

In the fulfillment of such obligation our Federal Government properly conceived the idea of utilizing hydropower for the purpose of generating electricity as a byproduct of soil conservation and irrigation. The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, AFL, heartily endorsed and diligently supported the idea.

However, in the interval since the inauguration of this program there have been developed and instituted procedures engendered by a false concept of the fundamentals of Americanism.

The Rural Electrification Administration was brought into being for the purpose of facilitating the transmission of electricity into rural sections. Under the Government power program, however, the facilitating intent has been substituted for by a plan involving what could well be and assumes all the aspects of the first step in the evolution of governmental ownership of the generation, transmission, and sale of electricity to the individual consumers. Under this program the operations of the Rural Electrification Administration combined with the functioning of the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, and the Army engineers have extended the scope of the program to a point that threatens peril to legitimate free enterprise.

The scope of the program now embraces the generation of electricity by power other than that procured through irrigation and flood control, steam as an instance; the distribution of electric power and the sale of electric power in direct competition with privately owned electric utility companies.

The Rural Electrification Administration through its financing of cooperatives, has proceeded to the extent of using public moneys supplied by the taxpayers for the building of electric transmission lines parallel to existing privately owned distribution systems. The progress of this procedure is such as to clearly indicate complete duplication of transmission facilities in competition that can only lead to extermination of private utility companies. Such complete extermination has been accomplished in the State of Tennessee and is rapidly approaching completion in the State of South Carolina and is making rapid progress in the State of Nebraska.

In pursuing the above policy the Rural Electrification Administration has lowered the quality of work standards and ignored the rights of electrical workers to bargain collectively.

The resulting situation is anomalous indeed. In the first instance while the fundamental policies of the Federal Government champion the rights of labor to organize and bargain collectively, the administration of the Rural Electrification completely ignores these rights of labor. In the second instance one branch of government is engaged in the prosecution of trusts and combines on the premise that the operation of such trusts is inimical to the commonweal. At the same time a department of the Government is nurturing a governmental monopoly of the generation, distribution, and sale of the greatest power man has mastered for industrial production, home necessities, and public convenience.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers does not raise its voice on the subject of public power in behalf of private companies or their management. We have met the abuses of power by these companies in the past and have achieved substantial correction. Today 90 percent of the workers in the privately owned electric light and power industry are covered by union contracts and the IBEW itself represents more than 75 percent of the organized employees in this industry.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers raises its voice on the subject of public power at this time in the interest of organized labor in the electric light and power industry. The subtle transformation of the Government program from the proper purposes of providing power as a byproduct of the initial program and of furnishing a yardstick for private utilities has reached the stage where it threatens free enterprise in this industry. We support free enterprise not only in our capacity as citizens of the United States but also in our capacity as representatives of organized labor. The increase in the area of government and quasi-government ownership operation in utilities necessarily carries with it a decrease in the area of freedom for labor as well as other groups.

Labor cherishes its right to bargain collectively for wages, hours, and working conditions. It fights the abrogation of such rights whether in the form of antilabor laws or in the more complicated form of transferring their status to employees of the government without any rights to bargain collectively or otherwise exercise their economic strength.

The International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has had drastic experience with the effect on its interests resulting from the transfer of utilities from private to public or quasi-public ownership.

In a recent case where the ownership of a utility was transferred to a municipality the IBEW was deprived of collective bargaining rights by an order of the court even though the majority of voters of the municipality had enacted an ordinance requiring their officials to bargain with the union.

Labor does not choose to have its welfare determined by the administrative orders of government officials no matter how well intentioned they may purport to be.

Under fascism, nazism, and communism the people work for the state. Under the policies inaugurated by the Rural Electrification Administration those employed on electrical properties work for the government under the guise of cooperatives. It is a distinction without a difference.

That the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers has been cognizant of these developments for some time was indicated by its expressed concern in 1948, when its international president, D. W. Tracy, in an address before the members of the Edison Electric Institute, in the course of his remarks, said:

"I would not be talking heart to heart in a manner consistent with my expressed desire in my earlier remarks if I did not say: We need and must have more democracy in government and more democracy in business with less government interference in business and in labor. In an effort to prevent possible misunderstanding of my statement I emphasize the fact that the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers endorses, advocates, and defends the profit system. Call it capitalism if you will but the fact remains the system is an element of Americanism because it is the economic system of our land and has contributed to the higher standard of living in this country which at once becomes the envy and the hope of common people in foreign lands."

The International Executive Council of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers today endorsed the action of International President Tracy and unanimously subscribed to this public release in defense of freedom of labor, in defense of freedom of legitimate enterprise, and in defense of freedom of cooperation between both to the benefit of the commonwealth through safeguarding the elements of Americanism, against assault, by authoritarian or state power on the liberties that have identified America as the country where labor has an effective voice in the establishment of conditions of its employment.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I wish merely to say that I am wholly familiar with the facts developed with reference to this particular matter, and I join the chairman of the subcommittee in urging the Senate to approve the action reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 247, line 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

REDUCTION IN NONDEFENSE SPENDING—STATEMENT BY SENATOR BYRD

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement prepared by me dealing with reductions in nondefense spending.

There being no objection, Mr. BYRD's statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HARRY F. BYRD

I will support the President in all necessary appropriations for the military. I will support reasonable and practical measures to control inflation.

I am very much disappointed that the newspapers today report that the President has requested the majority leader, Mr. LUCAS, to oppose reductions in nondefense expenditures. The President should realize that financial preparedness and the ability to pay are the source of all preparedness. With colossal new expenditures facing us, we cannot preserve our solvency unless we reduce in every possible way nondefense spending.

In 1948 we expended more than $6,000,000,000 for domestic-civilian expenditures, exclusive of the military, of interest on the debt, veterans' expenses, and foreign aid. The President now recommends about $12,000,000,000 for domestic, nondefense spending. This represents an increase of about 100 percent within this period.

I hope the President will reconsider his decision and cooperate with the Congress in reducing nondefense spending.

The President says he will ask for $10,000,000,000 of additional military appropriations. It is significant that he used the term "appropriations" instead of authorizations. This means he expects actually to spend $10,000,000,000 additional in this fiscal year. If this is done the total expenditures will approximate $52,000,000,000 and, of course, further requests may be made, as the President has indicated.

The highest estimate of income under the present revenue system, and allowing for increased prosperity, is about $40,000,000,000 for this fiscal year. This leaves a deficit of $12,000,000,000 without further requests.

If we continue to add such sums to a public debt now approaching $260,000,000,000, it will not be long until we go over the precipice of financial disaster.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on July 17 considerable discussion took place on the floor of the Senate between the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] pertaining to the language in the committee report on the general appropriation bill with reference to the Rural Electrification Administration. The language in the report which was discussed is as follows:

The committee believes that no loan should be made for construction of such facilities unless in areas where private power companies cannot or will not furnish adequate power at reasonable rates and within a reasonable time.

I have had a large number of calls in reference to this particular committee language. Also I have received a number of telegrams and other communications from persons in the farm areas in the State of Minnesota who are very much concerned over the application of this language as it would pertain to the rulings and decisions of the Administrator of REA. Therefore, Mr. President, I wish to state on record my position on this issue, and also wish to incorporate into the RECORD some of the telegrams and messages which I have received from persons and organizations in my own State.

The public law pertaining to REA has already been interpreted by precedent, tradition, and experience. I do not believe that the language of the committee's report should in any way be controlling. It may be a statement on the part of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, but it does not represent, at least up to this date, the considered judgment of the Congress of the United States. The public law pertaining to REA was passed by the Congress. It had been considered by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. It has been debated at length for many years. The objectives of REA legislation are clear and unmistakable. Any attempt in any way to thwart the efforts of the REA cooperative development should be strongly resisted and protested. I urge the conference committee on this bill to make it unmistakably clear that the Congress has no desire to impair the development of REA generation or transmission. I take that position and shall continue to maintain it.

Mr. President, for example, I have a telegram from the president of the Border Counties Power Corp., Warroad, Minn. This is one of the fine cooperatives in our State. To quote just a few passages from the telegram, I should like to read the following:

Language in Senate report on general appropriations bill for 1951 could be very detrimental to Rural Electrification Administration especially to generating and transmission cooperatives, and could impose restrictions on authority of REA· Administrator which would be damaging to entire program.

Toward the end of the telegram appears the following:

In our opinion this is very loose language and we urge that you work against this proposed change.

Mr. President, I ask that the telegram be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

WARROAD, MINN., July 14, 1950.
Hon. HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
United States Senator from Minnesota,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Language in Senate report on general appropriations bill for 1951 could be very detrimental to Rural Electrification Administration especially to generating and transmission cooperatives, and could impose restrictions on authority of REA Administrator which would be damaging to entire program. We object to the following proposed language. "The committee believes that no loan should be made for construction of such facilities unless in areas where private power companies cannot or will not furnish adequate power at reasonable rates and within a reasonable time." In our opinion this is very loose language and we urge that you work against this proposed change.

NORMAN CLEMENTSON,
President, Border Counties Power Corp., Inc.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I also have a telegram from Mr. E. L. Smith, president, and A. E. Lee, secretary, Western Minnesota Power Cooperative. I ask that it be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BENSON, MINN., July 16, 1950.
Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We seriously object to portion of Senate Appropriations Committee report on H. R. 7786, whereby they recommend restrictions of REA loans for construction of generation-transmission facilities. Can see no justification either moral or economic for strengthening position of private power companies and weakening position of farmers cooperative in power supply matter. Please do everything possible to exclude any language from omnibus appropriations bill that will restrict generation-transmission loans to cooperative or weaken Administration's authority to make such loans.

E. L. SMITH, President,
A. E. LEE, Secretary,
Western Minnesota Power Cooperative.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a telegram from the directors of the Carlton County Cooperative Power Association, signed by C. W. Maki, secretary, which I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MOOSE LAKE, MINN., July 17, 1950.
Senator HUMPHREY,
Washington, D. C.:

We request you do everything within your power to remove restrictive language in Senate committee report on the appropriations bill for 1951 that might be interpreted to restrict or stop granting of generation or transmission loans.

C. W. MAKI,
Secretary, Board of Directors, Carlton County Co-op Power Association.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a similar message from the Minnesota Valley Cooperative Light and Power Association, of Montevideo, Minn. I ask that it be printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MONTEVIDEO, MINN., July 17, 1950.
Senator HUBERT HUMPHREY,
Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.:

May we have your support for the generating and transmission bill giving the REA administrator authority to make such loans.

MINNESOTA VALLEY COOPERATIVE LIGHT AND POWER ASSOCIATION.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a telegram from the president of the Minnkota Power Cooperative, from Grand Forks, N. Dak., which I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAND FORKS, N. DAK., July 14, 1950.
Senator HUMPHREY,
Washington, D. C.:

Language in the Senate report on general appropriations bill for 1951 regarding construction of REA generating facilities should be clarified so as not to hinder program. Will you please do what you can to avoid the inclusion of any unnecessary provision which might hinder or hamstring the Administrator.

VICTOR M. EDMAN,
President, Minnkota Power Cooperative.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a telegram from Roy E. Wiseth, president of the Minnesota Farmers Union, which I ask to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WILLMAR, MINN., July 3, 1950.
Senator HUBERT HUMPHREY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We must have public transmission lines to safeguard Government investments in REA cooperatives. Urge you to oppose appropriation cuts for transmission lines.

ROY E. WISETH,
President, Minnesota Farmers Union.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I have a letter from Mr. Victor Hanson, manager, Agra Lite Cooperative, Benson, Minn. I wish to read two paragraphs of the letter, because I think it is quite pertinent:

From sad experience we know what the private power monopolists mean when they talk about adequate power supplies and reasonable rates. We have found that they actually mean inadequate supplies and unreasonable rates.

We cannot think of a single good reason why the farmers of America, through their REA cooperatives, should be further hampered by legislation in their long battle to obtain electric power in adequate supply, and at cost of production. They have developed their own loads, and have every right to serve those loads if they wish to do so. To deny them that right, by whatever means that may be used, would be rank injustice.

Mr. President, I ask that the letter be incorporated in the body of the RECORD at this point in my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AGRA LITE COOPERATIVE,
Benson, Minn., July 17, 1950.
Senator HUBERT H. HUMPHREY,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: The attempt to restrict use of REA loan funds for development of generation-transmission facilities as proposed in the Senate committee's report on the appropriations bill for 1951 is of vital concern to our cooperative.

From sad experience we know what the private power monopolists mean when they talk about adequate power supplies and reasonable rates. We have found that they actually mean inadequate supplies and unreasonable rates.

We cannot think of a single good reason why the farmers of America, through their REA cooperatives, should be further hampered by legislation in their long battle to obtain electric power in adequate supply, and at cost of production. They have developed their own loads, and have every right to serve those loads if they wish to do so. To deny them that right, by whatever means that may be used, would be rank injustice.

Please use your influence and vote in the Senate to defeat the present attempt to hamstring the REA GT program.

Sincerely yours,

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I should like to call to the attention of the Senate the fact that a recent survey of power development in this country indicates that the Federal power projects have in no way thwarted or injured the development of private power facilities. In fact, the tempo at present is one of increase in private power facilities as compared to public power. A tremendous investment of money is going into this field. It is a lucrative investment. I think proper tribute should be paid to the private companies who make power available at proper and reasonable rates. I do feel, however, that the facts today set aside all these spurious and propaganda charges that somehow or other the activities of the Federal Government are threatening the private investment field and private activity within the field of generation of electric power and its transmission.

The facts are crystal clear that nothing like that has happened. In fact, private companies are expanding their kilowatt-hour capacity at an ever-increasing rate. The Government is engaged in power projects in areas where private facilities are not available, or where power is not adequately available. Finally, no matter how much power we develop we shall always have too little. Let us make it quite clear, as we mobilize the Nation for national defense that this is no time to say that we are developing too much power or spending too much in public funds for it. Recently, I heard the Secretary of the Interior testify before the committee headed by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. He said that in 1939 we had a 40-percent power reserve. In 1950 we have a 15-percent power reserve. We have had a loss of power reserve of 25 percent in a period of a little more than 10 years, and at a time when we are looking forward to a great national defense program. The President's message is before us. In it he asks for increased production and asks our country to turn out unprecedented quantities of materials in order to maintain our domestic, civilian, and international commitments.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, at this point in my remarks, an article entitled "Private Utilities Step Out Ahead," printed in the June 30, 1950, issue of United States News and World Report.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRIVATE UTILITIES STEP OUT AHEAD—SPENDING $3 FOR PLANT TO EVERY PUBLIC DOLLAR

Federal power projects, growing fast, still lag far behind private producers. Expansion programs are booming.

Private firms are outspending Government 3 to 1 in the race to keep up with electric-power demand. They still furnish most of the juice for industry.

Final decision in issue of private versus public power is not in sight. But private companies, now, are holding their own.

Private utilities, once the scapegoats of the New Deal, are in the midst of a vast program of expansion. Private power, as a result, is at least holding its own in the continuing struggle with public power for a market that is expanding by leaps and bounds.

The flow of money from Federal, State, and local governments into power development and distribution is breaking all records. Yet the flow of private capital into the power industry is running far ahead of investment of Government capital. The ratio is about 3 to 1, with $3 of private capital going into modernization and expansion for each Government dollar.

A demand that appears insatiable lies back of the booming expansion of power resources. That demand, on basis of conclusions reached both by private utility managers and by Government planners, is expected to double electric-power requirements during the 10 years ahead. In the contest to gain and hold this market, the private utilities are maintaining their position relative to governments, after losing—relatively—during the 1930's.

Expansion records show what is happening.

In generating capacity, privately owned utility companies are making much larger increases than publicly owned systems. The chart on page 37 tells this story. Private utilities' generating capacity in 1951 is to reach 61,000,000 kilowatts, on basis of present plans. That will be 20,700,000 more kilowatts than these companies had in 1945, or a 50-percent increase in capacity.

Public power agencies, in contrast, will add only 5,200,000 kilowatts of new capacity by 1951, in their postwar building program. This means that during the early postwar period, at least, the share of United States electric power in Government hands is remaining the same, instead of increasing as in prior years. In 1920, Government systems controlled 5 percent of the power supply. By 1940, they had 14 percent. By 1945, their share was up to 20 percent, but it has not increased since then.

Spending totals, for new plant and equipment, also point up the trends in power development. Spending figures are illustrated by the chart on this page. It shows private companies' investment of about $8,050,000,000 in new generators, transmission lines, other facilities in the 1945–50 period. Federal expenditures by unofficial estimate, amount to about $1,597,000,000 in this same period. Cities, States, other power units invested around $1,500,000,000 during these years.

In other words, electric-power companies are building new plants, putting up lines about three times as fast as all the city, State and Federal agencies combined. That is the national, over-all picture, and it is encouraging to advocates of private power. The situation and future outlook are entirely different in some areas. This shows up from a closer look at power programs around the country.

Northern United States, from Illinois to the Atlantic, is the scene of the greatest building activity in power. Industrial States of this region are demanding and getting about $1,000,000,000 worth of new facilities a year. Around half of the dollars are being spent in five North Central States—Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin. About a third of the money goes into increased power for New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania; the remainder to New England plants.

Private utility companies account for nearly all the expansion. Federal activity is at a minimum in this area.

Major work centers on steam plants, using coal and oil for fuel. These modern plants are marvels of engineering. They are changing old ideas about practical limits on size of steam units. Some newer ones rival the immense hydroelectric projects of the West.

An example is the new plant opened at Sunbury, Pa., by the Pennsylvania Power & Light Co. It is one of the largest coal-fired power plants in the world. First units will have 250,000 kilowatts' capacity when completed. The plant can be enlarged later to 550,000 kilowatts, half the total for Hoover Dam. This hints at the scale of things in the power industry that private companies are creating.

The South also is getting enormous new blocks of power from private-utility building programs. Outside the TVA region, private companies provide virtually all the electric energy. They are spending in the neighborhood of $350,000,000 this year in the South Atlantic States, along the coast from Delaware to Florida, and in Kentucky, Mississippi, Alabama, and Tennessee. One item in this year's schedules: Around 5,000 miles of new transmission lines.

Federal activities are growing in this region, however. TVA construction expenditures in 1950 are at a record level. TVA gets 85 percent of its power from hydroelectric plants now. Two additional steam plants are under way, and, by 1953, around 30 percent of TVA power will be supplied by steam.

A new Federal agency, the Southeast Power Administration, is setting up shop in the South, also. It will sell the power generated at Federal dams that are built outside TVA's domain. Now, SEPA has only two projects going, with 72,000 kilowatts capacity. Plans are under way for other projects that will bring SEPA capacity to 3,000,000 kilowatts. Interior Department estimates that SEPA will be marketing one-tenth of all the power produced in Southeastern United States within a few years.

West of the Mississippi, utility-company expansion goes forward in every area except Nebraska, the one State where all power has been taken over by public agencies. Private investment will approach $250,000,000 this year in six North Central States—North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Iowa, Kansas, and Missouri. Much of the money will go for additions to steam power plants.

Farther South, in Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana, and Texas, utilities are spending about the same amount, building 4,500 miles of transmission lines plus substations and power generators. Here federally financed co-ops are setting up very extensive networks of transmission lines that will compete with private companies.

Far western utilities carry on a larger building program than is generally realized. In 1950 they are spending more than $300,000,000 in Washington, Oregon and California. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., in California, is doing more construction than any other utility company in the Nation. It has spent more than half a billion dollars, provided 850,000 kilowatts of capacity since 1944. In 1950 and 1951, this one company will spend another $300,000,000 and add 450,000 kilowatts to the West's power supply.

Washington and Oregon utilities are active, too, though most of the power there eventually is to be produced in Federal projects on the Columbia River.

Power supplies, as a result of these vast expansion efforts, improved markedly during 1949. The Nation's reserve margin—percentage of power available above peak loads—moved up from 6.6 percent at the end of 1948 to 14.2 percent at the end of 1949. That is considered adequate, except in isolated regions where power can't be borrowed quickly from neighboring sources in emergencies.

Threat of power shortages in most parts of the country is removed, in consequence, for the first time in many years. A prolonged drought can cause troubles where water power is the main source. In most places, business and residential customers need not fear brownouts or other restrictions this year. The Pacific Northwest still rations industries, but that is the only area of shortage.

Rises in demand are phenomenal. Residential use averaged 897 kilowatt-hours in 1939, was up to 1,655 in 1949. Industrial load rose 22 percent in the last 3 years; farm load, 91 percent.

There isn't any end in sight. Just a few of the things forcing electricity's use upward are frozen-food lockers, clothes dryers, television sets, electric bed coverings, air conditioners, air cleaners, automatic soft-drink dispensers, electric stairways, thousands of new power-driven machine tools, and electrical implements on farms.

Forecasts agree on a need for at least 120,000,000 kilowatts capacity by 1961. This means doubling the size of the generating plant—building 60,000,000 kilowatts of new capacity—in the next decade. The issue is how much of this vast new industry will be built and controlled by private companies, how much by Government groups. The private uutilities feel they have made some gains on their competitors, but they know the struggle for leadership is only starting.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This is a time when we ought to recognize that no matter what we do, it will not be enough, and surely Congress should not be guilty of "too little and too late." So I surely support the program for the project developed along the lines suggested.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate at an appropriate time reconsider the action by which it approved committee amendments on the following pages and lines: Page 188, line 6; page 195, line 1; page 197, line 14; page 208, line 20; page 212, line 6; page 223, line 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate reconsider its action on certain amendments enumerated by him. The motion will be entered.

The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The next amendment was, on page 247, in line 5, after the word "which", to strike out "$22,897,700" and insert "$25,135,700".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 247, in line 6, after the word "fund", to insert "and in addition thereto the Commissioner of Reclamation is hereby authorized to incur obligations and enter into contracts for additional work, materials, and equipment in an amount not exceeding $3,000,000 for power transmission lines and substations in the fiscal year 1951;".

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 247, in line 19, after the word "fund", to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That $1,000,000 of the funds provided in this paragraph for the construction of transmission lines in South Dakota shall be available only for connecting the load centers of Armour with Watertown via Sioux Falls, and of Midland with Rapid City, and of Winner with Randall Dam.

And to insert:

Provided further, That $3,000,000 of the funds provided in this paragraph plus $3,000,000 contract authority shall be available for construction of transmission lines and substations in South Dakota, to include a transmission loop from Fort Randall through the load centers of Armour, Huron, Aberdeen, Andover, Watertown, Brookings, Sioux Falls, and Gavins Point to Fort Randall, and lines from Fort Randall to Winner and from Rapid City to Midland.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, some Senators wanted to speak on some of these amendments, and did not know that we were to continue the session. If we are to continue longer, I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask the Senator to withhold the suggestion. I am going to change signals in the middle of the stream.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I withhold the suggestion.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MAGNUSON in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States withdrawing the nomination of LuElla M. Thompson, to be postmaster at Darwin, Calif., which was ordered to lie on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no reports, the clerk will proceed to state the nominations on the calendar.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first nomination.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Hawthorne Arey to be member of the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank of Washington, for a term of 5 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, at the opening of my remarks, I ask consent that the nominations to the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be considered en bloc.

The Export-Import Bank nominations considered en bloc are as follows: Hawthorne Arey, of Nebraska; Herbert E. Gaston, of New York; Clarence E. Gauss, of Connecticut; Lynn U. Stambaugh, of North Dakota; to be members of the Board of Directors for term of 5 years expiring June 30, 1955.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to report that this afternoon the junior Senator from Oregon met with the Committee on Banking and Currency, in accordance with the understanding which was reached in the Senate last night, in respect to the relationship of these nominations to certain loaning policies of the Export-Import Bank which the junior Senator from Oregon wished to discuss with the committee.

I desire to say that the junior Senator from Oregon received from the members of the committee a very fair and courteous hearing, as he knew he would once he appeared before the committee. He said then, and he wants to repeat on the floor of the Senate, that he certainly appreciates the consideration and courtesy extended to him by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], in making possible the discussion that took place in the committee hearing this afternoon.

At the hearing the junior Senator from Oregon raised certain objections to certain of the loaning policies of the Export-Import Bank, as he understands those policies to be. He made special reference to the Argentine loan, which he thinks is deserving of a most careful investigation by the Banking and Currency Committee, and he made reference to certain loans which, up to date at least, have been denied by the Export-Import Bank, which he thought should be inquired into in order to determine just what the policies of the bank are.

However, he made clear before the committee that he is satisfied that the individual nominees now before the Senate are men of fine character. There can be no question as to their integrity or their honesty or their devotion in carrying out their public duty in accordance with the policies they are called upon to execute as members of the board of directors of the bank.

It is not with the qualifications of the nominees that the junior Senator from Oregon has any quarrel or difference, but only in connection with the policies he thinks the members of the bank have been called upon to administer. Therefore, as he told the committee this afternoon, he intends at this time to vote for the confirmation of these nominees.

He wishes to report to the Senate that the chairman of the committee, in the presence of the junior Senator from Oregon, took up with the Banking and Currency Committee the request of the junior Senator from Oregon that there be an inquiry into the loaning policies and practices of the Export-Import Bank, and it was agreed that such an inquiry should be held. Not only that, but the junior Senator from Oregon was told that it would not be necessary to press for the adoption of the resolution which he submitted on June 27 calling for such an inquiry, but that the committee would proceed with such an inquiry on its own initiative, which it has the power to do, and the resolution to that effect would not be necessary.

I was satisfied, Mr. President, that all that was needed was just such a conference as we had this afternoon, because I knew that the members of the committee would want to join with the junior Senator from Oregon in finding out what the facts are. That is all I seek in regard to the policies of the Export-Import Bank, and if those facts disclose a need for a change in the policies of the bank, then I am sure necessary legislative action will be taken to bring about such a change.

I now yield the floor.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to the Senator from Oregon that it was a distinct pleasure for the committee to have him before it this afternoon. I assure him that we shall ask the questions he desired to be asked, in executive session, that we shall have replies, and that we shall conduct whatever investigation may be necessary in line with the provisions of the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I cannot let this occasion pass without expressing my feeling respecting two of the gentlemen whose nominations have been sent to the Senate and are on the Executive Calendar, to be directors of the Export-Import Bank, men whom I have known for a long time. The Senator from North Dakota and I have been for many years acquainted with Mr. Lynn Stambaugh. In fact, I grew up with him. I have always considered him to be a man of good character, of high integrity, and of great ability. The same is true with respect to Mr. Herbert Gaston, whom I have known since childhood.

I know not what their policies have been, except in a general way, but I hope that the situation which has arisen with respect to that subject will be worked out satisfactorily. I am sure that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and the Senator from Oregon can have a satisfactory discussion of the matter of policies.

I was very pleased, however, to hear the junior Senator from Oregon say today that there was no question about the integrity or the ability or the energy of the two directors whom I know. I presume the other two are of the same high caliber.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that the Senate is about to take action upon the nominations of members of the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank. I have had the privilege of long friendship with one of the Directors, Mr. Herbert Gaston. Mr. Gaston came into the service of the State of New York in 1931 as Secretary and later as deputy commissioner of the New York State Conservation Department. He then came to Washington, where he filled many offices of responsibility and importance, including that of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, and later Director and Vice Chairman, and then Chairman of the Export-Import Bank.

I consider Herbert Gaston to be a man of the highest character. He is hard-working, of unquestioned loyalty, and of unimpeachable integrity. I have never heard a single word against his character. I know that he has rendered splendid service to the people of his State and to the people of the Nation, and that he will continue to render similar service, if his nomination is confirmed by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I join with the distinguished Senator from New York in expressing my high regard for Mr. Gaston. For many years he was editor of a newspaper in the State of North Dakota. He is a man of outstanding ability. He was one of the best editors we have ever had in my State. He is considered to be absolutely honest. In my opinion, he has made a very good Chairman of the Export-Import Bank. I hope his nomination will be confirmed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). The question is on the confirmation en bloc of Hawthorne Arey, of Nebraska; Herbert E. Gaston, of New York; Clarence E. Gauss, of Connecticut; and Lynn U. Stambaugh, of North Dakota, to be members of the Board of Directors of the Export-Import Bank of Washington for the term of 5 years expiring June 30, 1955.

The nominations were confirmed.

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS

The legislative clerk read the nomination of William Henry Hastie, of the Virgin Islands to be judge, United States Court of Appeals, Third Circuit.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, I feel highly honored today to stand upon the floor of the Senate to speak a few inadequate words of commendation on behalf of the distinguished citizen of the United States whose name is now before us for confirmation. I take the liberty of infringing upon the time of this body for I have long numbered William Henry Hastie as one of my close friends and associates.

At the beginning of his remarkable career of public service, Mr. Hastie dedicated his outstanding talents to the youth of New Jersey by serving as a teacher at the Bordentown Industrial School in Bordentown, N. J. During his service at that fine institution he helped mold the characters of many of my fellow citizens of my State and his host of friends from those days still are his heartiest admirers and most unselfish supporters. I hasten to associate myself as both an admirer and a supporter.

I wish to assure my colleagues in the Senate that I urge the forthright approval of this nomination for I know that Judge Hastie possesses the character and the ability to serve with distinction on the Third Circuit Court of Appeals serving my own State. This he has shown beyond question throughout his entire life, but particularly during his term as Federal district judge and as Governor of the Virgin Islands. But, Mr. President, there is even added merit for favorable action on this confirmation, for by such action we prove conclusively to the Nation and to the world that there is no color line hindering personal progress and the recognition of personal ability in the United States. By action and not by words alone will we confound the propaganda of totalitarian groups and countries throughout the world and demonstrate beyond peradventure that America is still the home of opportunity and freedom.

Mr. President, it gives me a great deal of pleasure and it is a great privilege for me to stand here today and move the confirmation of the nomination of Hon. William Henry Hastie, of the Virgin Islands, to be judge, United States Court of Appeals, Third Circuit.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the distinguished Senator from New Jersey in expressing great satisfaction at approval by the Judiciary Committee of the nomination of Judge Hastie.

Judge Hastie has been a friend of mine for many years. He is a man of the highest character, and of great attainments in the legal profession. He has made a splendid record as Governor of the Virgin Islands and as a Federal judge. During the short period of time in which he has served as judge of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit he has also displayed great ability and an unquestioned sense of justice and fairness.

I think the country is fortunate in having the services of a man of such outstanding character and ability, and I shall be very proud indeed to vote for confirmation of the nomination of Judge Hastie.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit embraces New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware. So I am happy to have this opportunity this evening to vote for confirmation of the nomination of Judge Hastie to be a judge of the Third Circuit Court of Appeals.

I may say that Judge Hastie's entire record is one of great distinction. I know that his colleagues on that court not only look upon him as a man who is learned in the law, but welcome him as a colleague, because he has a fine sense of decency and justice.

I have heard the other judges of the court say—not once, but on numerous occasions—that they welcome with open arms Judge Hastie to be one of their colleagues.

I believe it might be apropos at this time to read a short biography of this distinguished American.

Judge Hastie was born in Knoxville, Tenn., on November 17, 1904. He was graduated from Amherst College with a bachelor of arts degree in 1925. He was awarded a bachelor of law degree by Harvard University in 1930, and a degree of doctor of juridical science by Harvard University in 1933.

After teaching for 2 years, as the junior Senator from New Jersey has just stated, at Bordentown, N. J., Judge Hastie came to Washington, and engaged in the private practice of law. While in Washington he was a member of the faculty of Howard University school of law.

From 1933 to 1937 he was Assistant Solicitor of the Department of the Interior.

From 1937 to 1939 he was judge of the district court for the Virgin Islands. Reference has already been made to his service in that position.

Thereafter he became dean of Howard University law school, and served in that capacity from 1939 to 1946.

During the early part of the war, he was the civilian aide to the Secretary of War, working closely with Under Secretary of War Patterson on racial relations and other important questions.

In May 1946, President Truman appointed Judge Hastie to be Governor of the Virgin Islands. In that position Judge Hastie made many outstanding contributions to the advancement of the Virgin Islands and to the development of better relations between Washington and the Virgin Islands.

Judge Hastie was appointed by President Truman to be one of the American members of the Caribbean Commission, working with similar groups from Great Britain, France, and The Netherlands in seeking a solution of the economic and social problems of the Caribbean area.

So, Mr. President, I believe Judge Hastie has earned for himself the respect, the esteem, and the affection of all who know him.

I know he will make a very able judge on the third circuit, a court which has considerable business, and, in fact, is one of the busiest circuit courts in the land.

Therefore, Mr. President, I am most happy to have this opportunity to vote for confirmation of the nomination of Judge Hastie.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to this nomination?

Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE—NOMINATION PASSED OVER

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, United States Army, retired, to be Under Secretary of Commerce for Transportation.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, before the nomination of General Fleming is voted upon, I should like to make a few remarks, because this matter involves the maritime industry of the Nation and involves several incidents and hearings which occurred not only before the Subcommittee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, but before the full Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

As many of us know, Gen. Philip Fleming has had an able and a distinguished career in the service of the Government of the United States. Prior thereto, he had a long and distinguished career as one of the very brilliant engineers in our Army.

He was called into the service of the Government by President Roosevelt, and served for a long period of time as Public Works Administrator, in which capacity he had charge of public roads and a great number of other engineering matters.

Without going into detail, let me say that, as many of us know, the record is replete with evidence not only that our late Maritime Commission proved itself to be, in my opinion, very inefficient and very inadequate to cope with the great postwar problems of the merchant marine, but also that many other criticisms have been leveled at the Maritime Commission.

In an effort to see whether it was possible to obtain better administration in the Maritime Commission, in order to clear up some of these matters, and in hope that it might become a strong arm in bolstering our disappearing merchant marine, following the termination of the war and after the resignation of the then Chairman of the Maritime Commission, the President of the United States saw fit to call on General Fleming again because of his recognized ability as an administrator.

I recall that at the time, when he was called before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the Senate, in connection with the question of confirmation of his nomination to be chairman of the Maritime Commission, the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], and myself were present, and both of us asked, "General, what do you know about maritime matters?"

He replied, "I know nothing whatsoever."

Some of us ventured the opinion that in view of the conditions then existing in the Maritime Commission, he might be well qualified for that post. Of course we wanted a good administrator in that position.

His nomination was confirmed, and he served in that position. At the time when he took it, the law in relation to the Maritime Commission was such that the Chairman of the Commission was chairman in name only; he had no authority to do what he thought should be done there to clear up some of the feuds which were going on, some of the so-called inefficiency which has so well been pointed out by the General Accounting Office.

After General Fleming had been there a few months, and after determining in his own mind, I suppose, that most of the conditions still existed, although an attempt had been made to reorganize the entire Commission, it was thought best that the Congress enact legislation or suggest an Executive order giving the Chairman of the Commission more power. Such power was given to the Chairman. However, conditions did not improve a great deal. So the President of the United States, who had remained in constant touch with the matter with our committee and with others interested in maritime matters, including both labor and management, decided that the best thing to do would be to submit to Congress a reorganization order abolishing the Maritime Commission and placing it in the Department of Commerce, under a three-member Maritime Board.

That reorganization plan—plan No. 24, if I recall correctly—was approved by the Senate after some debate. The reorganization plan also provided that there should be established in the Department of Commerce an Under Secretary for Transportation. The nomination of that Under Secretary for Transportation is now before the Senate for confirmation, the President of the United States having taken General Fleming from the position of Chairman of the Maritime Board and placed him in this new position in the Department of Commerce. Although the Under Secretary of Transportation, under Mr. Sawyer's plan of organization and under the reorganization bill, would primarily devote himself to maritime matters, he would also have under his jurisdiction the CAA, Public Roads—with which General Fleming of course has had great experience and concerning which he is well qualified—and other matters pertaining to the Weather Bureau and the country's transportation system. So that his transfer from one spot to the other puts him in the position of having his nomination now up for confirmation for an office the duties of which are somewhat broader than the field of maritime matters alone. But when his nomination was considered at the hearing, our primary concern was with maritime matters. Without going into detail, there was a great deal of criticism leveled at General Fleming at the hearings, not as to his personal character, his integrity, or his record, but criticism somewhat similar to those heard here a few moments ago, regarding the policies of the Maritime Commission, particularly in relation to the foreign-flag transfers. Labor unions protested, as did several other organizations, not against General Fleming as an individual but on the basis of the general policies of the Maritime Commission.

The testimony was not exactly directed to him as an individual, but it was criticism of the whole Maritime Commission. That has now been changed, and I think in all fairness that some of the criticism as to the actions of the Maritime Commission, although justifiable, could not be laid directly at the door of the chairman, because he inherited a confused situation. He inherited problems which, due to the inadequacies of the chairmanship in one period, he could not solve. After that, he was only in office for a short period of time, possibly not long enough to do the right kind of job or the kind of job he might have liked to do. As I say, that situation has been changed, and I am sure that those who are critical of those policies will find that General Fleming, in his new position, will carry out not only the mandates and the intentions of Congress, but the best interests of the entire maritime industry of the Nation, which needs a friend in court, because of its condition, particularly in these times when it becomes so important and so integral a part of our national defense.

Although I had originally intended to say more about this nomination when it came up for consideration today, it is important in these times that the nomination of General Fleming be confirmed, so that the Secretary of Commerce may function in respect to vital transportation matters.

I merely wanted to clarify the record by these remarks. I hope the Senate will confirm General Fleming's nomination, and at this time also will realize that the situation in the old Maritime Commission was probably not entirely of any one man's making.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a few moments ago, before the Senator from Washington began to speak, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] came over to me and requested that this nomination go over. I am serving notice now that we shall move to take it up tomorrow afternoon and make final determination.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I hope the Senator will do that, because delay would be rather serious because, until the nominee is confirmed, I do not suppose there will be an appointment to the Maritime Board. It is vital that that board begin to function as soon as possible.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination will go over.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Is the Senate still in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is still in executive session. Without objection, the Senate will resume the consideration of legislative business.

THE KOREAN CRISIS

Mr. HENDRICKSON. Mr. President, as I listened to the reading of the President's message, I could not help but be reminded again and again of the highly dangerous and tortuous road which lies ahead for the free nations of the world.

In the main, I commend the President for the very sound and sensible program which he has outlined, but I would remind him that the cooperation which will be required to carry forward such extensive emergency functions of government, cannot be a "one-way street." I remind him of this fact because on the domestic front he again recommends rigid economies and yet in my 2 years in Congress, I have seen very little cooperation from the administration in attempting to effect these long overdue economies. Whether war comes or not, whether war is here or not, they are essential, but they now become a "must." National security is as fully dependent upon economic stability as it is upon military preparedness.

I have never had any doubt as to the highly explosive course we were pursuing when we engaged as participants in the Korean crisis. I warned, on June 26, that a positive course of action would produce attendant risks of war, but I said that failure on our part to demand full respect for and compliance with the rules of the United Nations would be interpreted by our foes as a manifestation of cowardice and weakness. I said further that if we fail in one crisis, we shall fail in others.

And now, since all Members of the Senate must fully realize the import of the President's message and the extent to which it involves us, both at home and abroad, I would say to all critics, be they Republican or Democrat, that from here on we must not be less than constructive in our criticism, for by small talk and petty bickering, whether on the floor of Congress or elsewhere, we can only give our enemies fuel with which to build new fires.

MAIL DELIVERIES IN DALLAS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an article from the Washington Post of this morning, with this headline: "Two Mail Deliveries in Dallas Suburb Ordered by Court."

I call this to the attention of every Senator in connection with the resolution dealing with the curtailment by the Postmaster General of mail deliveries.

The article reads:

DALLAS, TEX., July 18.—The postman must call twice in Oak Cliff, suburb within the city of Dallas, a Federal circuit judge ruled today.

An Oak Cliff insurance man, Judge B. Fite, had complained his business suffered when the single mail delivery was instituted in the Oak Cliff district, while Dallas' main business section goth three deliveries.

Attorneys for the Postmaster General were expected to appeal the decision.

Judge Atwell, in making permanent an injunction against Dallas Postmaster J. Howard Payne to prevent the cut in mail delivery to Oak Cliff, said that "the postmaster has discriminated against the business section of Oak Cliff," which is, "in truth and in fact, a city in its own right."

COTTON PRODUCTION

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, in view of the fact that there has been some discussion this afternoon of increases in the price of cotton, I should like to state for the record some statistics in regard to cotton production. This year the cotton acreage was raised to 19,032,000. However, in the cotton belt there has been the worst growing season on record. The boll weevils have been abundant and have caused a tragic loss to the cotton crop, and the weather this spring has been terrible.

On July 10, the Department of Agriculture issued an estimate in regard to the conditions which resulted from that situation. That estimate was not in terms of bales of cotton, but it shows a dreadful loss. Private estimates which have been made indicate a loss that is very great indeed—a difference between last year's crop of 16,127,000 bales and a crop for this year which is estimated to be between 10,000,000 and 10,500,000 bales.

Mr. President, no one has suffered more from the cold spring, the rains, and the other hazards than has the cotton farmer. I simply wish the record to show the official estimate of the Department of Agriculture.

NEWS LETTERS FROM SENATOR HUMPHREY

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two news letters which I have prepared to send out to the people of my State be incorporated in the RECORD. One of these news letters pertains to the recent Korean crisis, and I call to the attention of the Senate the heading "Economy or false economy?"

That particular paragraph has something to do with what I call total defense. There seems to be an attitude in the country that the way to prepare for defense is through the armed services. But that is not my conclusion. I believe that national defense means more than the armed services. I believe it means hydroelectric power, I believe it means land irrigation and reclamation, I believe it means the health of the people and the education of the people. Every dollar we spend in these areas for strengthening the American economy is worth every bit as much as money we spend for atom bombs, reserves, or aircraft, or anything we might need in the armed services, because the strength of the country is not going to be found in how many divisions we may put into the field tomorrow, but how much we can prepare for the coming time to contribute to the over-all strength and confidence and power of the American people and the American economy.

Mr. President, I ask also that the second letter, pertaining to some observations on American agriculture and a review of the legislation we have discussed, be incorporated in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the news letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YOUR SENATOR REPORTS

(Weekly news letter from the desk of HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, week of June 18, 1950)

AGRICULTURE

On Wednesday, June 7, the Senate passed another important piece of legislation to bulwark the farm price-support program. I refer to Senate bill 2826, legislation increasing the borrowing power of the Commodity Credit Corporation by $2,000,000,000. This assures farmers that the farm price-support program will be backed up by sufficient funds. The Department of Agriculture will soon announce the loan and purchase programs for price supports on wheat, corn, rye, barley, flax, dairy products, hogs and other commodities. (Write for full report on this bill.)

It is estimated that price supports for next year will "cost" much less than in the past 2 years. Present estimates indicate price-support "costs" at between 550 and 600 million dollars. This is to be compared with an average of about 2 billion dollars a year in the past 2 years. The term "cost" should be used with caution since the money provided by the CCC for price supports is in the form of loans which may be redeemed through farmer or Government sales. The cost of price supports may well go down because of the following factors:

1. The rising prices on farm commodities.
2. Lower production because of acreage allotment and production controls.
3. Heavier consumer demand.

The estimated cost of farm price supports will be slightly over 1 percent of the Federal budget. A professional farm economist recently pointed out that $1 of farm income creates about $7 of income for people off the farm. Farm parity now stands at 97 percent. Any serious drop in farm income would have disastrous results on the entire economy.

It is believed that marketing costs at city marketing terminals is an important factor in the high cost of farm products to consumers. This point of view will be thoroughly explored in hearings on a House bill to improve marketing facilities. Congress is becoming more consumer conscious on agricultural products.

We still have not managed to perfect a program to properly meet the needs of perishable farm products. Curtailing production does not receive much support. The emphasis is upon increasing consumption.

NEW LAW FOR VETS' HOUSING

The Housing Act of 1950—the GI housing bill—makes several important changes in the home loan benefits for GI's.

1. Increase in the amount of guaranty on veterans' home loan to 60 percent of the loan up to a maximum guaranty of $7,500.

The original bill guaranty was 50 percent up to $4,000.

2. Unremarried widows of deceased veterans who died in service or from service-connected cause after discharge were made eligible for GI home loan benefits on the same basis as their husbands would have been.

3. Terms of loan extended from 25 to 30 years. This makes possible lower monthly payments.

4. The veterans' housing bill authorizes $150,000,000 for direct Government loans at 4 percent interest to veterans in areas where home financing is not available from private sources—these areas to be determined by the Veterans' Administration.

5. The new housing act includes provisions to make GI loans for farm homes more readily available.

Approximately 2,000,000 veterans have received the benefit of the Government guaranty program on GI loans for homes, business, and farm purposes. Here's the breakdown:

Type of loan:	Number of veterans
Home loan guaranty	1,818,000
Farm loan guaranty	55,000
Business loan guaranty	118,000

Approximate value of all loans, $11,000,000,000.

NOTE.—If you want more detailed information on this program, write to me.

ITEMS OFF MY DESK

1. The rent control bill authorizing 6 months' extension of existing rent control passed the Senate 36 to 25. I voted for it.

2. Social security extension is the pending business of the Senate. The Senate bill in some ways improves the program adopted by the House. It extends coverage and increases some benefits. Next week's Newsletter will carry full account. The Senate bill eliminated disability insurance. I am a cosponsor of an amendment to restore this provision to Senate bill and cosponsor of amendments to increase old-age assistance and medical service benefits. Congress will greatly improve the social security law. Old-age insurance benefits will be doubled and coverage extended to approximately 9,000,000 additional persons. Increased benefits for aid to dependent children and the blind will be provided.

3. Basing point: I joined with Senators DOUGLAS, HILL, SPARKMAN, and KEFAUVER in a visit to the White House urging President Truman to veto the basing-point bill. I was part of this team in our fight to defeat this bill on the Senate floor. The so-called basing-point bill represents another attack on our antimonopoly and antitrust legislation. This bill, if it becomes law, will seriously jeopardize independent business and the industrial development of the Midwest and South.

Basing point in a nutshell is the old "Pittsburgh plus" system, legalized so as to keep out competition.

The basing-point bill had the active support of big steel, the cement monopoly, and other big industries. It was opposed by every small business organization in the country. Copies of my remarks on this vital issue are available.

It is strange to note that very little was said in the press about basing point during debate, yet this is one of the most important issues that has faced the Congress. If big business wins this fight it will be a major victory for monopoly and economic concentration. Basing point to independent business would be as ruinous as the Kerr gas bill was to the consumers.

4. Small business: Speaking of small business, it was a year ago that I obtained passage of my amendment to the armed services appropriation bill providing assistance to American small business. Secretary Johnson has reported to me the activities of his Department in carrying out the purposes of my amendment. I quote from the Secretary's letter of June 5:

"In accordance with the legislative mandate, on December 22, 1949, I appointed the Honorable Paul H. Griffith, Assistant Secretary of Defense, as my small-business advisor. In this capacity, Mr. Griffith was responsible for the development of a cooperative agreement between the Department of Defense, the Department of Commerce, and the General Services Administration, which provides for the speedy transmission of procurement information to interested parties. While the original agreement provided for approximately 150 separate geographical places were businessmen would have direct access to this information, the program has been enlarged to the point that competitive bid information is now available through 931 separate outlets in 650 cities throughout the 48 States including the District of Columbia and the Territory of Hawaii.

"Through our educational and information program we have made an effort to acquaint all businessmen, and particularly small-business men, of their opportunity to participate in military procurement. Through their inquiries and correspondence with the military procurement agencies, purchasing and contracting offices of the Department of Defense have been provided with information concerning the commodities and services available from many small independent enterprises.

"It is my intention to continue our small-business program beyond the limits of the current fiscal year in an effort to insure small-business men the opportunity of participating in the military procurement program."

Slowly but surely, we are making progress.

The Senate has established a Special Committee on Small Business, of which I am a member. Senator TOBEY and myself are working with the Munitions Board and the Department of Defense to further the cause of small business in obtaining government contracts.

5. The Marshall plan: I thought you might want to see what Paul G. Hoffman, Administrator of ECA, had to say in his recent letter to me. Here's the copy—it speaks for itself:

"DEAR SENATOR HUMPHREY: I would like to express my appreciation of the fine support you gave to the ECA legislation during the recent Senate debates. At this point, as we begin the third year of the Marshal plan, it is particularly necessary that the accomplishments of the program and its significance be discussed accurately and thoroughly so that the issues may be widely understood. Your contribution in this regard, and particularly your presentation of the significance of the Marshal plan to the national security of the United States, was most constructive and, I am sure, exerted substantial influence in producing the vote of confidence in the European recovery program which was given by the Senate.

"Sincerely yours,

"PAUL G. HOFFMAN, Administrator."

MINNESOTA FLOOD RELIEF

The most critical problems facing Minnesota are the flooded areas of the Red River Valley of the north and the upper Mississippi around Aitkin. Eighteen counties are affected by the flood. Estimated damage is over $11,000,000. I have visited the flood area on two occasions—on April 24 to the Red River area and on June 5 and 6 to the Upper Mississippi-Aitkin region. Here is my program to aid flood areas:

1. Legislation to provide financial aid to counties, cities, villages, and townships for road repair, culverts, bridges, and other public properties.

2. A bill for the resurvey of all flood-control projects in the Red River and Upper Mississippi area.

3. Testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee urging immediate appropriation of $2,000,000 for the balance of this year to the President's emergency fund. This money could be made available for immedate assistance in Minnesota.

4. A bill to appropriate $10,000,000 to the President's emergency fund.

VISIT THE PRESIDENT

On Wednesday, June 14, the entire Minnesota and North Dakota congressional delegations visited the President. It was my privilege to be the spokesman for the group I presented to the President our program and described the flood conditions and the problems facing our people. The President promised his help in securing prompt action on our flood-relief and flood-control program. All members of the Minnesota and North Dakota delegations are working as a team on these problems.

PRESIDENT SUBMITS ADDITIONAL REORGANIZATION PLANS

The President continues to work in behalf of improving the efficient and economic operation of the Government. Six additional reorganization plans were submitted in the past week. One of these plans deals with the creation of a Department of Health, Welfare and Education. It was this proposal which was defeated last year with tremendous pressure being brought to bear by the American Medical Association.

The new plan seems to have satisfied much of the objection of some of the Senators who voted against the establishment of a Department of Welfare in the first session. It appears now that the creation of a new department in the Cabinet will be successful. It is my intention to support this proposal. It follows the basic recommendations of the Hoover Commission report and gives those functions of government which deal with health, welfare, and education their appropriate position in the Government, namely, a Cabinet post. Other reorganization plans deal primarily with the Federal loan activities such as the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and the Federal National Mortgage Association. These proposals are highly controversial and it is doubtful as to what will happen.

A BILL FOR ASSISTANCE IN THE ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMUNITY HEALTH CENTERS

Some months ago I introduced a bill, S. 1805, which would permit the Federal Government to make loans and grants for the purpose of establishing rural community health centers. This proposal would supplement the Hill-Burton Hospital Construction Act.

The Hospital Construction Act provides for Federal grants for the purpose of erecting hospitals. All hospital plans are cleared and approved by an appropriate State agency. Federal Government matches funds up to 50 percent. Minnesota has shared generously in the Federal funds and our State has been benefited by the construction of many hospitals in all sections of the State.

The need, however, is not for major hospitals but for community health clinics or centers in some of the less populated areas and, in particular, the rural areas of Minnesota and other States. The construction and maintenance of hospital facilities are very expensive, and many communities are not of sufficient size to afford them.

The bill that I have introduced, and upon which hearings have been held, would provide for the construction of clinic facilities, commonly known as out-patient departments. A small emergency ward of 6 to 10 hospital beds would be permissible. This number of beds would satisfy emergency needs of the smaller community and yet not work an undue financial burden. My bill makes it possible for any nonprofit or cooperative association to build these facilities. The nonprofit or cooperative association would contract for the loan and would be held responsible for the construction, administration, and maintenance of the rural health clinic. These facilities would be open to all doctors and to all people. There would be no discrimination. I make this point because certain people have attempted to interpret this bill as being a measure wholly directed toward benefiting the membership of a cooperative or a nonprofit group. This is entirely false. To be sure, the membership of such association would receive the benefits of the facilities of the health clinic. However, the health clinic would be open to all people and would serve the entire community. In other words, the principle used in this legislation is similar to the REA. Let me explain: REA funds are loaned to rural electrification cooperatives. The cooperative takes on the responsibility for borrowing the money, constructing the electric lines and generating plants, but it must serve all people who wish to use its services. The REA program has worked exceedingly well. The loans have been repaid. The people have been served. It is my opinion that the same principle would work with a rural health cooperative which would undertake the construction of a community health clinic.

The loan provisions under S. 1805 are (1) 35-year loans, 2 percent interest and (2) grants will be made only where the local community is totally incapable of financing all of the construction. The "grant feature" is a tentative proposal and may be removed from the bill by the time it gets through committee.

The opposition to this measure, strange as it may seem, came from the American Medical Association. I regret this, since the AMA has vigorously supported the hospital construction program which is not a loan but an outright 50 percent grant. The AMA called my bill a subsidy and a socialist proposal. It appears to me that the Hospital Construction Act is the subsidy measure and this, as I said, was supported by the AMA. It should be added that I have supported this program of hospital construction and helped write the amended bill in the Eighty-first Congress. In a later report I will tell you about the developments on S. 1805. This bill means a great deal to the rural areas. It is a forward step in bringing modern medical care to the people. The people will pay their own bill and will have their own doctors. There will be no subsidy and no government compulsion. My bill simply makes it possible for rural communities to have modern medical facilities, which will be paid for by the people who use them, and will mean that new doctors will come into rural areas and find a modern laboratory and clinic at their disposal.

YOUR SENATOR REPORTS

(Weekly news letter from the desk of HUBERT H. HUMPHREY, week of July 16, 1950)

ECONOMY OR FALSE ECONOMY?

The Korean crisis has brought foreign policy to the forefront. The people are asking questions about our national defense and the general conditions and strength of our Armed Forces.

The main points of our American foreign policy are based upon (1) the Marshall plan or ECA, (2) the North Atlantic Pact, (3) Military assistance, (4) the point 4 program for technological and scientific assistance to underdeveloped areas, (5) the Voice of America and other educational and informational services, (6) American participation in the United Nations and its support of UN agencies.

National defense of course, means more than appropriations for the Armed Services alone. World War II taught us that national defense is also based upon the conservation and development of our natural resources, such as our forests, mines, waterways, and land.

We learned the importance of hydroelectric power in World War II. In the beginning of that war, we had a 40 percent reserve in electric power; today we have a 15 percent reserve.

We learned the importance of adequate supplies of food in World War II.

Land reclamation and irrigation was a basic factor in our war effort. The production of sugar beets, for example, was vital not only for food purposes but also for munitions. Expanded sugar beet production was made possible by irrigation and land reclamation projects in Wyoming, Colorado, western South Dakota and other Western States. It is therefore very clear today that efforts to curtail our programs for conservation, inland waterways, public power, REA, agriculture, land reclamation, and irrigation were as short-sighted in the interests of our national defense as were efforts to cripple our armed services. The same can be said for efforts to cut the Marshall plan, the Voice of America, point 4, and our foreign information and educational services.

The economy experts, therefore, are now being severely criticized for short-sightedness and failing to realize that defense is a total concept.

American security is not fully protected by an Army, a Navy, and an Air Force alone. A militant, positive foreign policy is a fundamental part of our national defense. American military power is dependent upon the ability of our industrial economy to produce vast quantities of goods, and the ability of our agricultural economy to meet the requirements of total defense. Industrial production needs electric power and adequate transportation. The relationship of hydroelectric public power, water transportation, reclamation, and irrigation to American industrial and agricultural production is clearly evident.

All of these programs are vital to national security. Military power in great part depends upon long-range strength and productivity of industry, of land, and of people.

QUICK ACTION

With the Communist attack on South Korea the Senate quickly passed by unanimous vote (1) the extension of the draft and (2) the military assistance program as outlined under the terms of the North Atlantic Pact. The votes were unanimous. The President will use the selective service to fill the ranks of Army, Navy, and Air Force. The present program calls for limited use of selective service and a stepped-up program of voluntary enlistments. There will be extra pressure placed upon industrial firms to quickly fill the orders for military equipment both of our national defense needs and for assistance to the North Atlantic Pact countries. The word in Washington is that legislative proposals are ready for congressional action on (1) industrial mobilization, (2) civilian defense, (3) wage and price control, and (4) internal security measures.

THE INTERNATIONAL SITUATION

I strongly support the action taken by the President in compliance with the Security Council resolutions requesting assistance to restore the peace in Korea and to compel the North Koreans to retire to the 38th parallel. The President acted under the terms of our obligations to the UN and exercised his constitutional power to protect the security of our Nation and our interests. All the debate as to whether or not the President went beyond his constitutional powers is surely not substantiated by American history. The Library of Congress made available to the Congress a memorandum listing 100 instances where the President of the United States had used the Armed Forces to protect national security and defend American interests. The Charter of the United Nations places added obligations upon the President and the Congress to comply with requests of the Security Council.

The President also pledged American aid to the Philippines and to Indochina. The situation is particularly critical in southeast Asia, in the Indochina area. Indochina Communist forces are in active combat against government troops. America has an obligation to the Philippines, and I strongly support the President's proposal of military aid and other assistance to this new republic. The President's statement also included the use of the Seventh Fleet to "neutralize" Formosa until the status of this area is finally settled by the United Nations or by treaty with Japan.

AMERICAN POLICY IN THE FAR EAST

The North Korean Communist attack crystallized American policy in the Far East. The President's program is not a reversal of past State Department and Presidential policy; we have always been pledged to the aid of the Philippines; we have repeatedly assured the United Nations that we would support its efforts to maintain peace and order; the ECA authorization provided funds for the China area, which included Indochina; military assistance also provided such funds. The North Korean attack necessitated quick and positive action (this action followed the developments of policy in the Far East insofar as our commitments were concerned through treaty, UN, ECA, and military assistance). The President's statement of policy following the northern Korea attack is being altered and strengthened on a day-to-day basis as the military operations develop in that area. It is crystal clear that we are not going to be pushed around by Communist military pressure. It is equally clear that more attention will be paid to southeast Asia in the months to come. The Far East or Asiatic policy will include:

1. Our traditional policy of support for the territorial integrity and independence of the Asiatic nations.

2. Expanded and more generous economic assistance.

3. Military assistance in the form of supplies and key personnel.

4. Strengthening of bases in the Philippines, Japan, Okinawa, and Guam.

5. Closer collaboration with Australia, New Zealand, Great Britain, France, India, and other free countries.

6. Informational, educational, and propaganda offensive by the United Nations and Voice of America.

INDIA

On several occasions, speaking on the floor of the Senate, I have directed the attention of our Government to the newly founded Republic of India. India's decision in the UN Security Council to support the resolution calling for the withdrawal of North Korean troops and urging the military aid of UN members to accomplish this order was most significant. The Government of India has attempted to preserve the precarious neutrality in the UN in the struggle between east and west. The decision of the Indian Government to join with the United States and other powers to crack down on Communist aggression is possibly the most significant development thus far in the history of the United Nations and its efforts to preserve world peace.

Just a few facts about India: India has a constitution similar to ours. Its government is headed by Prime Minister Nehru, a man of democratic principles and thoroughly grounded in the practice of democracy as understood by the United States, Great Britain, and other western countries. India has a central government that can and does govern in all areas of the country. Her government has been undertaking vast programs of social welfare, health, education, land reclamation, development of hydroelectric power, and industrial development. The population of India is well over 300,000,000. In World War I and World War II her soldiers fought side by side with the Allies, giving a splendid account of themselves for their valor and courage. Indian governmental officials have been well educated in British and American schools, most of them speak English, and have a thorough knowledge of Anglo-Saxon law and political institutions. India possesses the second largest steel-producing plant in the British Empire. She has a well-trained Army, Air Force, and small Navy. Her position in the Asiatic continent is of vital strategic importance. This was proven in World War II, and it will become more and more apparent as the struggle grows more difficult between Russia and her satellites and the rest of the world. It is my judgment that our relationships with India are of the utmost importance for the present and the future.

India's political leaders represent the enlightened leadership of Asia. Prime Minister Nehru is looked upon as the foremost leader of democratic forces in the Asiatic area. The countries of Burma, Indonesia, Malay, Thailand, and others look to Nehru and his government for guidance in the development of policy and program for southeast Asia and what is termed as the subcontinent.

Recently I had the privilege of being host to Bishop Pickett, outstanding church leader in India. Bishop Pickett was on a visit to the United States giving lectures throughout the country on India and her relationships with the United States. The bishop heads the work of the Methodist Church in India and has lived in that country for 40 years. He was an intimate friend of the late Ghandi and is a close personal friend of Prime Minister Nehru. Bishop Pickett and I spent 2 hours with the Under Secretary of State, Mr. James Webb, discussing American relationships with India. I entertained the bishop at a luncheon attended by Vice President Barkley; the President's new foreign affairs adviser, Averill Harriman; and Senators McMahon, Douglas, Graham, Murray, Benton, Lehman, and Green. I have every reason to believe that in the months to come, American-Indian relationship will be in the news. Much more attention will be paid to the policy and decisions of the Indian Government both in the United Nations and in her diplomatic relationships with the United States.

WHERE DO WE GO FROM HERE?

Everyone seems to have suggestions as to what to do in the Korean crisis. Several things should be kept in mind however.

First of all, Chiang wants to send 30,000 Chinese troops into southern Korea. Our Government has rejected this offer. The reason? We do not want to give justification for the Chinese Communist armies on the Korean border to attack UN forces. If the Chinese Communists move into this war we will be headed pell-mell into world war III. Every effort is being made to keep the Chinese Communists behind their borders and away from the shooting in Korea. Only time will tell what will happen. Surely the President and his advisers are following a cautious policy in an effort to localize this conflict rather than have it take on the dimensions of a catastrophic world war.

Some people have asked for an immediate, all-out mobilization. The President and his advisors have proceeded cautiously. An all-out mobilization on our part could be interpreted by Russia as a signal to get the fireworks under way and attack now in Europe before we are able to strike back. It becomes increasingly clear that this is a most ticklish and difficult situation. To be sure, we must have sufficient mobilization not only to win in southern Korea but to fulfill our commitments in Europe and other parts of the world. Therefore, the President's program calls for voluntary enlistment, particularly of reserves and calling into service part of the National Guard. Selective service will be used to bring the Armed Forces up to the full quota. This would mean an additional 600,000 men. Additional manpower will be needed if we are to expand the naval units. America has numerous ships in storage that can be quickly put into action but manpower will be needed. I believe it safe to predict that much of the so-called moth-ball fleet, particularly carriers and cruisers, will be activated. I feel this should be done. Our supply lines are long. Fleet units are definitely needed. We ought to take every necessary step to have the fleet facilities throughouly prepared and ready for action. Reactivation of surplus reserve military aircraft is underway.

The task of statesmanship today is to keep the world from going into an all-out war. We're mighty close to such a situation. Any slip or ill-advised move would precipitate world war III.

President Truman and his national defense officialdom and the State Department advisers are moving along the following lines:

1. Relying upon General MacArthur and our forces in Japan to handle the North Korean attack. Supplies and manpower from continental United States are being shipped to strengthen MacArthur's position. Key personnel and new equipment is on the way. It appears that things will be worse before they get better. Our problem is not to get caught in Korea by diverting too much manpower and equipment there only to have another outbreak in Iran, Yugoslavia, Finland, Germany or somewhere else.

2. Military assistance to the North Atlantic pact countries in western Europe will be stepped up. It is safe to predict that American forces on the European continent will be strengthened and new equipment made available. Our North Atlantic allies will be asked to accelerate their own defense program as we pour in new arms and equipment.

3. Our Government will call upon American industry to give priority to munitions and armed services equipment. Plane production must and will be stepped up. The North Koreans have proven that the tank is still a formidable weapon. Our bazookas and other new antitank guns have not proven too effective. Emphasis will be placed upon production of new weapons, the need of which is being demonstrated in the Korean struggle.

4. It is the general consensus in Washington that we may be subjected to an epidemic of these international crises along the North Korean pattern. The Soviet Union does not need to use her own national forces. She has her satellites who will carry the burden of the fighting. It appears that Soviet troops will be used only when Russia is ready to enter in an all-out war. It becomes obvious that if the United States must take the responsibility for squelching every Communist uprising and attack all over the world, we will seriously weaken ourselves. This hard fact demonstrates the importance of the United Nations and the collective and combined effort of the members of the UN, other than the Soviet bloc, to stand together and to undertake responsibility in their particular areas.

We should make it crystal clear that American troops are in Korea as UN forces. If America attempts to police the world on her own, the Soviet can bleed us white while we fight her Communist satellite armies and she continues to develop her own national forces without additional strain on her economy.

THE UN—AN INTERNATIONAL FORCE

It is imperative that we as Americans recognize that the UN is our international force and international instrument to meet the conspiracy of international communism. Forty-eight nations are supporting the UN resolution on Korea. These 48 nations represent a great deal more strength than the Soviet Union and her satellite states. We as a people and as a government must do everything within our power to bring the other 47 nations to an understanding that world peace cannot be maintained by the United States alone. It can and will be maintained by the United Nations acting together. We have demonstrated in Korea that we will do our part, but we ought to make it clear that the struggle against international communism can be successfully made only when the freedom-loving people represented in the United Nations work as a unit, each doing what it best is able to do, each contributing what it is capable, and each undertaking responsibilities according to its strength of manpower, industry, and armed services.

I believe this concept of the UN enforcing world law and world order is the one means that we have of defeating the Communist plot to overwhelm the free and independent nations of the world.

FACTORS TO BE WATCHED

Neither our economy nor the economies of other nations have had a chance to fully readjust since World War II. We live under the burden of a tremendous war debt, a deficit in our Federal budget, unbelievably high commitments for our armed services, foreign aid, veterans' pensions and rehabilitation. We have endured a drastic rise in prices and wages, better known as inflation. Within the past 2 years the inflation cycle seemed to be running itself out and price readjustment was on the way. An epidemic of international incidents and small wars such as we now have in northern Korea would set the inflation spiral to work again. Right now our economic problems are as critical as our military problem, even if not so evident. If prices start to get out of hand, particularly as they refer to building and construction costs, steel, oil and fuel, strategic materials and manufactured heavy equipment, we will have trouble on our hands. Government economists are watching the economic picture very carefully. It appears that we can meet the Korean crisis without additional taxation or strict economic controls. More trouble along the Korean pattern would place a severe strain on the economy. We should be prepared to act quickly and decisively. Our whole economy can be seriously injured by run-away prices. No matter how you look at it, we face difficult times for some years to come.

We as Americans must recognize the fact that we are not living in a peaceful world. We must prepare ourselves for whatever sacrifices are necessary to maintain high budgets for military purposes, high budgets for foreign aid and high budgets to keep ourselves at a stage of alert preparedness at all times.

This is quite a change from our traditional attitude. We enjoy life and love the pleasures of good living. It is still a question as to whether we can have all we want of both "butter and guns." Fortunately, we have an expanding economy. We can absorb increased production of military equipment without drastically curtailing consumer goods. We must recognize, however, that we are in a struggle with a police state and a totalitarian economy. Russia and her satellite nations give little or no concern to consumer needs. Russia and her allies are creating a powerful force that threatens the peace and security and freedom of the rest of the world. We cannot meet this threat with half-hearted measures nor do we want to be guilty or having "too little too late." The swiftness of the North Korean attack should demonstrate to us for once and for all that the merciless aggressor has a tremendous advantage. What happened in northern Korea could happen in Europe—yes, could happen to Alaska.

It is almost unbelievable but the fact remains that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has decided to reduce the point 4 program of technological and scientific aid to underprivileged peoples and underdeveloped areas from $35,000,000 to $10,000,000. This vital program is an integral part of our struggle against communism. We need to clearly understand that communism finds followers in people who have been exploited, who are poor, hungry, and sick. The Communist promises have succeeded in undermining the confidence of these people in their governments, and the institutions of their society. We cannot check communism by arms alone. The United Nations Assembly has recognized this fact and has entered upon a program of technological and scientific assistance to the underdeveloped countries. This is a moderate program and one directed toward lifting the living standards and health standards of those people. The so-called point 4 appropriation would be used in part in cooperation with the United Nations agencies to send trained, professional people to areas such as Indochina and other lands to help people improve their agricultural developments, their health facilities, expand their educational programs, initiate new industry and other worthy projects. Again, I say it is incredible that the Senate should be considering a drastic reduction in point 4 funds at a time when we need to demonstrate to the world that our fight against communism is not only on the military side but also in the areas of social and economic activity.

The next news letter will carry a fuller account of the point 4 debate. It is my intention to do everything in my power to have the Senate restore the full amount of funds needed for this program.

If you wish for a copy of the full text of my speech on the point 4 program, please drop me a card or letter.

ADJOURNMENT

The congressional leadership is making a determined effort to adjourn the Congress by August 1. Needless to say, all plans and schedules are subject to sudden change because of the serious international situation. It is contemplated at this time, however, that the Congress will adjourn August 1 and if need be reconvene following a short recess. This was the plan as announced by the majority leader on Monday, July 10.

APPROPRIATIONS FOR 1951

All appropriations bill are being debated and voted upon. The 1951 appropriations bill amounts to approximately $34,600,000,000. The Senate committee has cut the President's budget by approximately $1,400,000,000, in cash and contract authority. There is yet to be considered the program of military assistance which will add approximately $1,300,000,000. Several proposals have been made to cut Government jobs. The Taber-Jensen-Thomas amendments requiring 10-percent reduction in Government employment has been rejected by the Senate committee as being unworkable and undesirable.

This meat-ax approach to reduction of Government employment could seriously injure Government services and thereby destroy the effectiveness of the appropriation made for the agency affected. Here's an example: A 10-percent reduction of the meat-inspection service would imperil the health-protection program of meat inspectors at slaughter and packing houses. Each meat carcass is individually inspected under present policy. A 10-percent employment reduction would mean that 1 out of 3 carcasses would be inspected. A 10-percent cut in the Soil Conservation Service would jeopardize soil-conservation programs. It has been my policy that employment reduction should be made not on a percentage basis but on an agency-by-agency and bureau-by-bureau calculation. This can be done by the Appropriations Committee in its recommendations to the Senate for the coming year.

It is too early to determine what will happen to the budget for the armed services. The Korean situation may require additional appropriations. Military assistance will take not less than $1,300,000,000. If we are to give military assistance to the Philippines, to Indochina and other southeastern Asiatic areas, we will have to expect greater outlays of money for these programs.

The next report will carry a complete review of the action of the Senate on appropriations. Following Senate action there will be a conference committee with the House of Representatives in order to finally determine the expenditures for the next fiscal year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

The social-security bill, H. R. 6000, is still in conference committee. The difference between House and Senate versions have yet to be ironed out. Certain conclusions, however, can be drawn. Detailed changes will be reported in a later news letter.

The debate over social-security legislation clearly demonstrates what has transpired in American political life during the past 15 years. When social security was proposed it was assailed as being "socialistic, uneconomical, regimentation, and destructive of the character and moral fiber of the people." The minority report of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, in 1935, signed by seven members of the committee, had this to say of the social security and insurance program:

"These titles impose a crushing burden upon industry and upon labor. They destroy old-age retirement systems set up by private industry.

"They establish a bureaucracy in the field of insurance in competition with private business.

"Never in the world has any measure been brought in here so insidiously designed to prevent business recovery, to enslave workers, and to prevent any possibility of the employers providing work for the people."

These are official statements from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 19, 1935, and Conference Committee Report 615 of the Seventy-fourth Congress.

Things do change. The prophets of doom, then as now, had poor vision. In the Eighty-first Congress the House of Representatives passed the social-security-extension bill by a vote of 333 to 13. The Senate voted 81 to 2.

The bill as it goes to conference will add approximately 11,000,000 more workers to the 35,000,000 now covered. Benefits will be increased anywhere from 70 to 90 percent. A married worker can receive as much as $120 a month as compared to $78 under the present law. Retired workers with dependents are eligible for benefits of $150, as compared to $85 now. Widows of insured workers will receive increased benefits. The bill as it goes to conference permits workers to earn up to $50 a month without loss of benefit. At present the worker is permitted to earn only $14.95. The new bill gives credit for military service on the basis of a wage credit of $160 a month for the time spent in service from 1940 to 1947. Employer and employee contributions are raised from 1½ to 2 percent. The House bill would apply the increased tax in 1951, the Senate in 1956.

SALUTE TO CITIES NAMED "WASHINGTON"

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, in connection with Washington's Sesquicentennial, a very important event took place today. There are 16 municipalities in the United States besides the city of Washington, D. C., having the name of Washington. The chairman of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, the very able and eloquent junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], presided at a luncheon held in honor of the representatives of these municipalities. The municipalities are located in Georgia, Iowa, Missouri, New Jersey, Wisconsin, Virginia, Utah, Nebraska, Texas, Indiana, and Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, the meeting was called to order by the chairman of the reception committee of the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission, Mr. Edgar Morris. I ask unanimous consent that his statement, which is very short, be printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SALUTE TO CITIES NAMED "WASHINGTON"

(By Edgar Morris, chairman, reception committee, National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission)

Distinguished guests, ladies, and gentlemen, it is my pleasure, as chairman of the reception committee of the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission, to welcome you today. These words of welcome are particularly for the mayors of the communities named "Washington" who are present, and their families, because this is the day of our sesquicentennial celebration which has been designated as the day to salute other Washingtons. It is a great pleasure to add a special word of welcome to our good friends from the Senate and the House who represent Washingtons in their own States. At least 16 such cities are represented here and I think that is impressive indeed.

Today we are paying a unique tribute to the memory of George Washington. I earnestly hope you will absorb all unconsciously something of our First President's inner serenity and moral worth during your visit among us.

What a wonderful bond of association we enjoy as fellow citizens dwelling in communities blessed with such an illustrious name. He kept calm as he steered the newly-born Nation in the first years of its destiny. We must follow his example in a changing world of which George Washington may even have dreamed.

As he rode across the mud flats of Anacostia with Maj. Pierre L'Enfant, who had been commissioned to lay out the new Federal city, President Washington envisioned a beautiful city of which his fellow countrymen would be forever proud. You and I are enjoying the fruit of that vision today as we meet in the Capitol Building for which he laid the cornerstone.

When the second session of the Sixth Congress convened here on November 17, 1800—the great event our sesquicentennial commission is celebrating this year—George Washington had been sleeping in his Mount Vernon tomb for nearly a year. The infant Nation that mourned him then, honors him today.

We who are the living embodiments of the communities bearing his name have a great heritage. May we always be worthy of it.

Our form of government in the city of Washington, D. C., is different from that of any other city. We do not have a mayor in the usually accepted meaning of that term, but we do have an unofficial mayor. He is the chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Committee. The chairman of the House District of Columbia Committee, Honorable JOHN L. MCMILLAN, also plays an important part in the government of the District of Columbia. We are proud to have both of these gentlemen with us today, and it is now my privilege to introduce, to preside at this luncheon, the chairman of the Senate District of Columbia Committee, Senator MATTHEW M. NEELY.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the very eloquent remarks of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] are not available, as he spoke extemporaneously, but he closed the meeting with an appeal to all these municipalities to emulate the work and the duties always performed by the Father of our Country, the man in whose name these various municipalities were named.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 49 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, July 20, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JULY 19, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Bernard Braskamp, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who wert the God of our fathers, in every generation Thou hast revealed Thyself as man's unfailing friend, his ever-present help and everlasting hope.

Grant that in these days, when the whole world is groping in darkness, we may validate this revelation by a calm and courageous faith in the guiding intelligence and invincible power of the Lord, our God.

May this be a day of unclouded vision for our President, for our Speaker, and all the chosen representatives of our Republic as they take counsel together and courageously seek to emancipate suffering and struggling humanity from the evil forces of aggression and aggrandizement.

Humbly and penitently we are invoking Thy blessing for we know that all our plans and efforts for the triumph of peace and righteousness will be futile and fruitless unless Thou dost gird us with divine wisdom and strength.

Hear us in the name of the Prince of Peace. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

THE KOREAN SITUATION—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 646)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am reporting to the Congress on the situation which has been created in Korea, and on the actions which this Nation has taken, as a member of the United Nations, to meet this situation. I am also laying before the Congress my views concerning the significance of these events for this Nation and the world, and certain recommendations for legislative action which I believe should be taken at this time.

At 4 o'clock in the morning, Sunday, June 25, Korean time, armed forces from north of the thirty-eighth parallel invaded the Republic of Korea.

The Republic of Korea was established as an independent nation in August 1948, after a free election held under the auspices of the United Nations. This election, which was originally intended to cover all of Korea, was held only in the part of the Korean peninsula south of the thirty-eighth parallel, because the Soviet Government, which occupied the peninsula north of that parallel, refused to allow the election to be held in the area under its control.

The United States, and a majority of the other members of the United Nations, have recognized the Republic of Korea. The admission of Korea to the United Nations has been blocked by the Soviet veto.

In December 1948, the Soviet Government stated that it had withdrawn its occupation troops from northern Korea, and that a local regime had been established there. The authorities in northern Korea continued to refuse to permit United Nations observers to pass the thirty-eighth parallel to supervise or observe a free election, or to verify the withdrawal of Soviet troops.

Nevertheless, the United Nations continued its efforts to obtain a freely elected government for all of Korea, and at the time of the attack, a United Nations Commission, made up of representatives of seven nations—Australia, China, El Salvador, France, India, the Philippines, and Turkey—was in the Republic of Korea.

Just one day before the attack of June 25, field observers attached to the United Nations Commission on Korea had completed a routine tour, lasting 2 weeks, of the military positions of the Republic of Korea south of the thirty-eighth parallel. The report of these international observers stated that the Army of the Republic of Korea was organized entirely for defense. The observers found the parallel guarded on the south side by small bodies of troops in scattered outposts, with roving patrols. They found no concentration of troops and no preparation to attack. The observers concluded that the absence of armor, air support, heavy artillery, and military supplies precluded any offensive action by the forces of the Republic of Korea.

On June 25, within a few hours after the invasion was launched from the north, the Commission reported to the United Nations that the attack had come without warning and without provocation.

The reports from the Commission make it unmistakably clear that the attack was naked, deliberate, unprovoked aggression, without a shadow of justification.

This outright breach of the peace, in violation of the United Nations Charter, created a real and present danger to the security of every nation. This attack was, in addition, a demonstration of contempt for the United Nations, since it was an attempt to settle, by military aggression, a question which the United Nations had been working to settle by peaceful means.

The attack on the Republic of Korea, therefore, was a clear challenge to the basic principles of the United Nations Charter and to the specific actions taken by the United Nations in Korea. If this challenge had not been met squarely, the effectiveness of the United Nations would have been all but ended, and the hope of mankind that the United Nations would develop into an institution of world order would have been shattered.

Prompt action was imperative. The Security Council of the United Nations met, at the request of the United States, in New York at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, Sunday, June 25, eastern daylight time. Since there is a 14-hour difference in time between Korea and New York, this meant that the Council convened just 24 hours after the attack began.

At this meeting, the Security Council passed a resolution which called for the immediate cessation of hostilities and for the withdrawal of the invading troops to the thirty-eighth parallel, and which requested the members of the United Nations to refrain from giving aid to the northern aggressors and to assist in the execution of this resolution. The representative of the Soviet Union to the Security Council stayed away from the meeting, and the Soviet Government has refused to support the Council's resolution.

The attack launched on June 25 moved ahead rapidly. The tactical surprise gained by the aggressors, and their superiority in planes, tanks, and artillery, forced the lightly-armed defenders to retreat. The speed, the scale, and the coordination of the attack left no doubt that it had been plotted long in advance.

When the attack came, our Ambassador to Korea, John J. Muccio, began the immediate evacuation of American women and children from the danger zone. To protect this evacuation, air cover and sea cover were provided by the Commander in Chief of United States forces in the Far East, General of the Army Douglas MacArthur. In response to urgent appeals from the Government of Korea, General MacArthur was immediately authorized to send supplies of ammunition to the Korean defenders. These supplies were sent by air transport, with fighter protection. The United States Seventh Fleet was ordered north from the Philippines, so that it might be available in the area in case of need.

Throughout Monday, June 26, the invaders continued their attack with no heed to the resolution of the Security Council of the United Nations. Accordingly, in order to support the resolution, and on the unanimous advice of our civil and military authorities, I ordered United States air and sea forces to give the Korean Government troops cover and support.

On Tuesday, June 27, when the United Nations Commission in Korea had reported that the northern troops had neither ceased hostilities nor withdrawn to the thirty-eighth parallel, the United Nations Security Council met again and passed a second resolution recommending that members of the United Nations furnish to the Republic of Korea such aid as might be necessary to repel the attack and to restore international peace and security in the area. The representative of the Soviet Union to the Security Council stayed away from this meeting also, and the Soviet Government has refused to support the Council's resolution.

The vigorous and unhesitating actions of the United Nations and the United States in the face of this aggression met with an immediate and overwhelming response throughout the free world. The first blow of aggression had brought dismay and anxiety to the hearts of men the world over. The fateful events of the 1930's, when aggression unopposed bred more aggression and eventually war, were fresh in our memory.

But the free nations had learned the lesson of history. Their determined and united actions uplifted the spirit of freemen everywhere. As a result, where there had been dismay there is hope; where there had been anxiety there is firm determination.

Fifty-two of the fifty-nine member nations have supported the United Nations action to restore peace in Korea.

A number of member nations have offered military support or other types of assistance for the United Nations action to repel the aggressors in Korea. In a third resolution, passed on July 7, the Security Council requested the United States to designate a commander for all the forces of the members of the United Nations in the Korean operation, and authorized these forces to fly the United Nations flag. In response to this resolution, General MacArthur has been designated as commander of these forces. These are important steps forward in the development of a United Nations system of collective security. Already, aircraft of two nations—Australia and Great Britain—and naval vessels of five nations—Australia, Canada, Great Britain, the Netherlands, and New Zealand—have been made available for operations in the Korean area, along with forces of Korea and the United States, under General MacArthur's command. The other offers of assistance that have been, and will continue to be made, will be coordinated by the United Nations and by the unified command, in order to support the effort in Korea to maximum advantage.

All the members of the United Nations who have endorsed the action of the Security Council realize the significance of the step that has been taken. This united and resolute action to put down lawless aggression is a milestone toward the establishment of a rule of law among nations.

Only a few countries have failed to support the common action to restore the peace. The most important of these is the Soviet Union.

Since the Soviet representative had refused to participate in the meetings of the Security Council which took action regarding Korea, the United States brought the matter directly to the attention of the Soviet Government in Moscow. On June 27, we requested the Soviet Government, in view of its known close relations with the North Korean regime, to use its influence to have the invaders withdraw at once.

The Soviet Government, in its reply on June 29 and in subsequent statements, has taken the position that the attack launched by the North Korean forces was provoked by the Republic of Korea and that the actions of the United Nations Security Council were illegal.

These Soviet claims are flatly disproved by the facts.

The attitude of the Soviet Government toward the aggression against the Republic of Korea is in direct contradiction to its often-expressed intention to work with other nations to achieve peace in the world.

For our part we shall continue to support the United Nations action to restore peace in the Korean area.

As the situation has developed I have authorized a number of measures to be taken. Within the first week of the fighting General MacArthur reported, after a visit to the front, that the forces from North Korea were continuing to drive south and further support of the Republic of Korea was needed. Accordingly, General MacArthur was authorized to use United States Army troops in Korea and to use United States aircraft of the Air Force and the Navy to conduct missions against specific military targets in Korea north of the thirty-eighth parallel where necessary to carry out the United Nations resolution. General MacArthur was also directed to blockade the Korean coast.

The attacking forces from the north have continued to move forward, although their advance has been slowed down. The troops of the Republic of Korea, though initially overwhelmed by the tanks and artillery of the surprise attack by the invaders, have been reorganized and are fighting bravely.

United States forces, as they have arrived in the area, have fought with great valor. The Army troops have been conducting a very difficult delaying operation with skill and determination, outnumbered many times over by attacking troops, spearheaded by tanks. Despite the bad weather of the rainy season, our troops have been valiantly supported by the air and naval forces of both the United States and other members of the United Nations.

In this connection, I think it is important that the nature of our military action in Korea be understood. It should be made perfectly clear that the action was undertaken as a matter of basic moral principle. The United States was going to the aid of a nation established and supported by the United Nations and unjustifiably attacked by an aggressor force. Consequently, we were not deterred by the relative immediate superiority of the attacking forces, by the fact that our base of supplies was 5,000 miles away, or by the further fact that we would have to supply our forces through port facilities that are far from satisfactory.

We are moving as rapidly as possible to bring to bear on the fighting front larger forces and heavier equipment, and to increase our naval and air superiority. But it will take time, men, and material to slow down the forces of aggression, bring those forces to a halt, and throw them back.

Nevertheless, our assistance to the Republic of Korea has prevented the invaders from crushing that nation in a few days—as they had evidently expected to do. We are determined to support the United Nations in its effort to restore peace and security to Korea, and its effort to assure the people of Korea an opportunity to choose their own form of government free from coercion as expressed in the General Assembly resolutions of November 14, 1947, and December 12, 1948.

In addition to the direct military effort we and other members of the United Nations are making in Korea, the outbreak of aggression there requires us to consider its implications for peace throughout the world. The attack upon the Republic of Korea makes it plain beyond all doubt that the international Communist movement is prepared to use armed invasion to conquer independent nations. We must therefore recognize the possibility that armed aggression may take place in other areas.

In view of this, I have already directed that United States forces in support of the Philippines be strengthened, and that military assistance be speeded up to the Philippine Government and to the Associated States of Indochina and to the forces of France in Indochina. I have also ordered the United States Seventh Fleet to prevent any attack upon Formosa, and I have requested the Chinese Government on Formosa to cease all air and sea operations against the mainland. These steps were at once reported to the United Nations Security Council.

Our action in regard to Formosa was a matter of elementary security. The peace and stability of the Pacific area had been violently disturbed by the attack on Korea. Attacks elsewhere in the Pacific area would have enlarged the Korean crisis, thereby rendering much more difficult the carrying out of our obligations to the United Nations in Korea.

In order that there may be no doubt in any quarter about our intentions regarding Formosa, I wish to state that the United States has no territorial ambitions whatever concerning that island, nor do we seek for ourselves any special position or privilege on Formosa. The present military neutralization of Formosa is without prejudice to political questions affecting that island. Our desire is that Formosa not become embroiled in hostilities disturbing to the peace of the Pacific and that all questions affecting Formosa be settled by peaceful means as envisaged in the Charter of the United Nations. With peace reestablished, even the most complex political questions are susceptible of solution. In the presence of brutal and unprovoked aggression, however, some of these questions may have to be held in abeyance in the interest of the essential security of all.

The outbreak of aggression in the Far East does not, of course, lessen, but instead increases, the importance of the common strength of the free nations in other parts of the world. The attack on the Republic of Korea gives added urgency to the efforts of the free nations to increase and to unify their common strength, in order to deter a potential aggressor.

To be able to accomplish this objective, the free nations must maintain a sufficient defensive military strength in being, and, even more important, a solid basis of economic strength, capable of rapid mobilization in the event of emergency.

The strong cooperative efforts that have been made by the United States and other free nations, since the end of World War II, to restore economic vitality to Europe and other parts of the world, and the cooperative efforts we have begun in order to increase the productive capacity of underdeveloped areas, are extremely important contributions to the growing economic strength of all the free nations, and will be of even greater importance in the future.

We have been increasing our common defensive strength under the treaty of Rio de Janeiro and the North Atlantic Treaty, which are collective security arrangements within the framework of the United Nations Charter. We have also taken action to bolster the military defenses of individual free nations, such as Greece, Turkey, and Iran.

The defenses of the North Atlantic Treaty area were considered a matter of great urgency by the North Atlantic Council in London this spring. Recent events make it even more urgent than it was at that time to build and maintain these defenses.

Under all the circumstances, it is apparent that the United States is required to increase its military strength and preparedness not only to deal with the aggression in Korea but also to increase our common defense, with other free nations, against further aggression.

The increased strength which is needed falls into three categories.

In the first place, to meet the situation in Korea, we shall need to send additional men, equipment, and supplies to General MacArthur's command as rapidly as possible.

In the second place, the world situation requires that we increase substantially the size and matériel support of our Armed Forces, over and above the increases which are needed in Korea.

In the third place, we must assist the free nations associated with us in common defense to augment their military strength.

Of the three categories I have just enumerated, the first two involve increases in our own military manpower, and in the matériel support that our men must have.

To meet the increased requirements for military manpower, I have authorized the Secretary of Defense to exceed the budgeted strength of military personnel for the Army, Navy, and Air Force, and to use the Selective Service System to such extent as may be required in order to obtain the increased strength which we must have. I have also authorized the Secretary of Defense to meet the need for military manpower by calling into active Federal service as many National Guard units and as many units and individuals of the Reserve forces of the Army, Navy, and Air Forces as may be required.

I have directed the Secretary of Defense and the Joint Chiefs of Staff to keep our military manpower needs under constant study, in order that further increases may be made as required. There are now statutory limits on the sizes of the Armed Forces, and since we may need to exceed these limits, I recommend that they be removed.

To increase the level of our military strength will also require additional supplies and equipment. Procurement of many items has already been accelerated, in some cases for use in Korea, in others to replace reserve stocks which are now being sent to Korea, and in still others to add to our general level of preparedness. Further increases in procurement, resulting in a higher rate of production of military equipment and supplies, will be necessary.

The increases in the size of the Armed Forces, and the additional supplies and equipment which will be needed, will require additional appropriations. Within the next few days, I will transmit to the Congress specific requests for appropriations in the amount of approximately $10,000,000,000.

These requests for appropriations will be addressed to the needs of our own military forces. Earlier, I referred to the fact that we must also assist other free nations in the strengthening of our common defenses. The action we must take to accomplish this is just as important as the measures required to strengthen our own forces.

The authorization bill for the mutual defense assistance program for 1951, now before the House of Representatives, is an important immediate step toward the strengthening of our collective security. It should be enacted without delay.

But it is now clear that the free nations of the world must step up their common security program. The other nations associated with us in the mutual defense assistance program, like ourselves, will need to divert additional economic resources to defense purposes. In order to enable the nations associated with us to make their maximum contribution to our common defense further assistance on our part will be required. Additional assistance may also be needed to increase the strength of certain other free nations whose security is vital to our own.

In the case of the North Atlantic area these requirements will reflect the consultations now going on with the other nations associated with us in the North Atlantic Treaty. As soon as it is possible to determine what each nation will need to do, I shall lay before the Congress a request for such funds as are shown to be necessary to the attainment and maintenance of our common strength at an adequate level.

The steps which we must take to support the United Nations action in Korea, and to increase our own strength and the common defense of the free world, will necessarily have repercussions upon our domestic economy.

Many of our young men are in battle now, or soon will be. Others must be trained. The equipment and supplies they need, and those required for adequate emergency reserves, must be produced. They must be made available promptly, at reasonable cost, and without disrupting the efficient functioning of the economy.

We must continue to recognize that our strength is not to be measured in military terms alone. Our power to join in a common defense of peace rests fundamentally on the productive capacity and energies of our people. In all that we do, therefore, we must make sure that the economic strength which is at the base of our security is not impaired, but continues to grow.

Our economy has tremendous productive power. Our total output of goods and services is now running at an annual rate of nearly 270 billion dollars—over 100 billion dollars higher than in 1939. The rate is now about 13 billion dollars higher than a year ago, and about 8 billion dollars higher than the previous record rate reached in 1948. All the foregoing figures have been adjusted for price changes, and are therefore a measure of actual output. The index of industrial production, now at 197, is 12 percent higher than the average for last year, and 81 percent higher than in 1939.

We now have 61½ million people in civilian employment. There are 16 million more people in productive jobs than there were in 1939. We are now producing 11 million more tons of steel a year than in the peak war year 1944. Electric power output has risen from 128 billion kilowatt-hours in 1939, to 228 billion hours in 1944, to 317 billion hours now. Food production is about a third higher than it ever was before the war, and is practically as high as it was during the war years, when we were sending far more food abroad than we are now.

The potential productive power of our economy is even greater. We can achieve some immediate increase in production by employing men and facilities not now fully utilized. And we can continue to increase our total annual output each year by putting to use the increasing skills of our growing population and the higher productive capacity which results from plant expansion, new inventions, and more efficient methods of production.

With this enormous economic strength, the new and necessary programs I am now recommending can be undertaken with confidence in the ability of our economy to bear the strains involved. Nevertheless, the magnitude of the demands for military purposes that are now foreseeable, in an economy which is already operating at a very high level, will require substantial redirection of economic resources.

Under the program for increasing military strength which I have outlined above, military and related procurement will need to be expanded at a more rapid rate than total production can be expanded. Some materials were in short supply even before the Korean situation developed. The steel industry, for example, was operating at capacity levels, and even so was not able to satisfy all market demands. Some other construction materials, and certain other products, were also under pressure and their prices were rising—even before the outbreak in Korea.

The substantial speed-up of military procurement will intensify these shortages. Action must be taken to insure that these shortages do not interfere with or delay the materials and the supplies needed for the national defense.

Further, the dollars spent now for military purposes will have a magnified effect upon the economy as a whole, since they will be added to the high level of current civilian demand. These increased pressures, if neglected, could drive us into a general inflationary situation. The best evidence of this is the recent price advances in many raw materials and in the cost of living, even upon the mere expectancy of increased military outlays.

In these circumstances, we must take action to insure that the increased national defense needs will be met, and that in the process we do not bring on an inflation, with its resulting hardship for every family.

At the same time, we must recognize that it will be necessary for a number of years to support continuing defense expenditures, including assistance to other nations, at a higher level than we had previously planned. Therefore, the economic measures we take now must be planned and used in such a manner as to develop and maintain our economic strength for the long run as well as the short run.

I am recommending certain legislative measures to help achieve these objectives. I believe that each of them should be promptly enacted. We must be sure to take the steps that are necessary now, or we shall surely be required to take much more drastic steps later on.

First, we should adopt such direct measures as are now necessary to assure prompt and adequate supplies of goods for military and essential civilian use. I therefore recommend that the Congress now enact legislation authorizing the Government to establish priorities and allocate materials as necessary to promote the national security; to limit the use of materials for nonessential purposes; to prevent inventory hoarding; and to requisition supplies and materials needed for the national defense, particularly excessive and unnecessary inventories.

Second, we must promptly adopt some general measures to compensate for the growth of demand caused by the expansion of military programs in a period of high civilian incomes. I am directing all executive agencies to conduct a detailed review of Government programs, for the purpose of modifying them wherever practicable to lessen the demand upon services, commodities, raw materials, manpower, and facilities which are in competition with those needed for national defense. The Government, as well as the public, must exercise great restraint in the use of those goods and services which are needed for our increased defense efforts.

Nevertheless, the increased appropriations for the Department of Defense, plus the defense-related appropriations which I have recently submitted for power development and atomic energy, and others which will be necessary for such purposes as stockpiling, will mean sharply increased Federal expenditures. For this reason, we should increase Federal revenues more sharply than I have previously recommended, in order to reduce the inflationary effect of the Government deficit.

There are two fundamental principles which must guide us in framing measures to obtain these additional revenues:

(A) We must make every effort to finance the greatest possible amount of needed expenditures by taxation. The increase of taxes is our basic weapon in offsetting the inflationary pressures exerted by enlarged Government expenditures. Heavier taxes will make general controls less necessary.

(B) We must provide for a balanced system of taxation which makes a fair distribution of the tax burden among the different groups of individuals and business concerns in the Nation. A balanced tax program should also have as a major aim the elimination of profiteering.

At an appropriate time, as soon as the necessary studies are completed, I shall present to the Congress a program based on these principles to assure the financing of our needs in a manner which will be fair to all our citizens, which will help prevent inflation, and which will maintain the fiscal position of the Nation in the soundest possible condition.

As a further important safeguard against inflation, we shall need to restrain credit expansion. I recommend that the Congress now authorize the control of consumer credit and credit used for commodity speculation. In the housing field, where Government credit is an important factor, I have directed that certain available credit restraints be applied, and I recommend that further controls be authorized, particularly to restrain expansion of privately financed real estate credit. These actions will not only reduce the upward pressure on prices, but will also reduce the demand for certain critical materials which are required for the production of military equipment.

Third, we must take steps to accelerate and increase the production of essential materials, products, and services. I recommend, therefore, that the Congress authorize, for national defense purposes, production loan guaranties and loans to increase production. I also recommend that the Congress authorize the making of long-term contracts and other means to encourage the production of certain materials in short supply.

In the forthcoming midyear economic report, I shall discuss in greater detail the current economic situation, and the economic measures which I have recommended. If these measures are made available promptly, and firmly administered, I believe we will be able to meet military needs without serious disruption of the economy.

If we are to be successful, there must be sensible and restrained action by businessmen, labor, farmers, and consumers. The people of this country know the seriousness of inflation, and will, I am sure, do everything they can to see that it does not come upon us. However, if a sharp rise in prices should make it necessary, I shall not hesitate to recommend the more drastic measures of price control and rationing.

The hard facts of the present situation require relentless determination and firm action. The course of the fighting thus far in Korea shows that we can expect no easy solution to the conflict there. We are confronted in Korea with well-supplied, well-led forces which have been long trained for aggressive action. We and the other members of the United Nations who have joined in the effort to restore peace in Korea must expect a hard and costly military operation.

We must also prepare ourselves better to fulfill our responsibilities toward the preservation of international peace and security against possible further aggression. In this effort, we will not flinch in the face of danger or difficulty.

The free world has made it clear, through the United Nations, that lawless aggression will be met with force. This is the significance of Korea—and it is a significance whose importance cannot be overestimated.

I shall not attempt to predict the course of events. But I am sure that those who have it in their power to unleash or withhold acts of armed aggression must realize that new recourse to aggression in the world today might well strain to the breaking point the fabric of world peace.

The United States can be proud of the part it has played in the United Nations action in this crisis. We can be proud of the unhesitating support of the American people for the resolute actions taken to halt the aggression in Korea and to support the cause of world peace.

The Congress of the United States, by its strong, bipartisan support of the steps we are taking and by repeated actions in support of international cooperation, has contributed most vitally to the cause of peace. The expressions of support which have been forthcoming from the leaders of both political parties for the actions of our Government and of the United Nations in dealing with the present crisis, have buttressed the firm morale of the entire free world in the face of this challenge.

The American people, together with other free peoples, seek a new era in world affairs. We seek a world where all men may live in peace and freedom, with steadily improving living conditions, under governments of their own free choice.

For ourselves, we seek no territory or domination over others. We are determined to maintain our democratic institutions so that Americans now and in the future can enjoy personal liberty, economic opportunity, and political equality. We are concerned with advancing our prosperity and our well-being as a Nation, but we know that our future is inseparably joined with the future of other free peoples.

We will follow the course we have chosen with courage and with faith, because we carry in our hearts the flame of freedom. We are fighting for liberty and for peace—and with God's blessing we shall succeed.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 19, 1950.

IRVING W. SWANSON

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a resolution (H. Res. 713) and ask for its immediate adoption.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That pursuant to the Legislative Pay Act of 1929, as amended, Irving W. Swanson is hereby designated a minority employee (to fill an existing vacancy) until otherwise ordered by the House, and receive compensation at the basic rate of $7,000 per annum.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION 120 OF THE INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 7303) to amend section 120 of the Internal Revenue Code.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, what does the bill do?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, section 120 of the Internal Revenue Code permits an unlimited deduction for charitable contributions in the case of an individual whose charitable contributions in the current taxable year and in each of the 10 preceding years, plus his income taxes paid during the year with respect to preceding years exceeded 90 percent of his net income.

The Current Tax Payment Act enacted in 1943 provided however that payments of income tax made during that year should be deemed to be on account of 1943 income tax and it therefore had the unintended effect of nullifying that part of section 120 which includes taxes paid during the year on account of preceding years as a factor in arriving at the figure which should constitute 90 percent of the net income.

This has been recognized as an oversight by Congress and accordingly H. R. 7303 merely provides that taxes paid not only with respect to the past year but also those paid for the current year may be used as a factor in arriving at the 90-percent figure for purposes of section 120. Thus, for example, if during the calendar year 1950 a taxpayer makes charitable gifts amounting to 20 percent of his net income and his payments of current taxes amount to 50 percent and payments of taxes for prior years amount to 25 percent, the 90 percent requirement of section 120 would be satisfied for such year.

In order to make the desired coordination of section 120 with the Current Tax Payment Act of 1943 the amendment contained in H. R. 7303 is retroactive to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

The present situation works a great injustice to the very few taxpayers in the country who have fully complied with the requirements of section 120 for 10 successive years prior to 1943, and then found that the tax benefit which had apparently been assured to them was taken away from them through their not being allowed in the eleventh year—1943—to include in the 90-percent limitation any taxes paid in 1943, since all of the taxes which they had paid in 1943 were treated as not payments on account of prior years taxes but of 1943 taxes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 120 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to unlimited deduction for charitable and other contributions) is hereby amended by striking out "in respect of preceding taxable years" and inserting in lieu thereof "in respect of such year or preceding taxable years."

SEC. 2. The amendment made by this act shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1942.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MUTUAL DEFENSE ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1949

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, with Mr. MILLS in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Time for general debate on the bill expired on yesterday. The Clerk will now read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Any such assistance furnished under this title shall be subject to agreements, further referred to in section 402, designed to assure that the assistance will be used to promote an integrated defense of the North Atlantic area and to facilitate the development of defense plans by the Council and the Defense Committee under article 9 of the North Atlantic Treaty and to realize unified direction and effort; and after the agreement by the Government of the United States with defense plans as recommended by the Council and the Defense Committee, military assistance hereunder shall be furnished only in accordance therewith."

Whenever the furnishing of such assistance will further the purposes and policies of this act, the President is authorized to furnish military assistance as provided in this act to Iran."

SEC. 6. Section 301 of such act is hereby amended by striking out the word "Iran" and the comma which follows it.

SEC. 7. Section 302 of such act is hereby amended by designating such section as subsection (a) and by adding thereto subsection (b) as follows:

SEC. 8. Section 303 of such act is hereby amended by designating such section as subsection (a) and by adding thereto subsection (b) to read as follows:

SEC. 9. Section 403 (d) of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) Not to exceed $450,000,000 worth of excess equipment and materials may be furnished under this act or may hereafter be furnished under the act of May 22, 1947, as amended: Provided, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, an additional $250,000,000 worth of excess equipment and materials may be so furnished. For the purposes of this subsection, the worth of any excess equipment or materials means either the actual gross cost to the United States of that particular equipment or materials or the estimated gross cost to the United States of that particular equipment or materials obtained by multiplying the number of units of such particular equipment or materials by the average gross cost of each unit of that equipment or materials owned by the furnishing agency."

SEC. 10. Section 403 is hereby amended by adding a new subsection (e) to read as follows:

"(e) Funds heretofore appropriated and the contract authority heretofore granted to the President under the head 'Mutual Defense Assistance Act' in the Second Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1950, are hereby authorized to be made available until June 30, 1951."

SEC. 11. Section 404 of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 404. The President may exercise any power or authority conferred on him by this act through such agency or officer of the United States as he shall direct, except such powers or authority conferred on him in section 405, in clause (2) of subsection (b) of section 407, and in subsection (c) of section 408."

SEC. 12. (a) Section 408 (c) of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) Whenever he determines that such action is essential for the effective carrying out of the purposes of this act, the President may from time to time utilize not to exceed in the aggregate 10 percent of the funds and contract authority made available for the purposes of any title of this act for the purposes of any other title, or in the event of a development seriously affecting the security of the North Atlantic area for the purpose of providing military assistance to any other European nation whose strategic location makes it of direct importance to the defense of the North Atlantic area and whose immediately increased ability to defend itself, the President, after consultation with the governments of the other nations which are members of the North Atlantic Treaty, finds contributes to the preservation of the peace and security of the North Atlantic area and is vital to the security of the United States. Whenever the President makes any such determination he shall forthwith notify the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives."

(b) Section 408 (d) of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(d) Upon approval by the President, any currency of any nation received by the United States for its own use in connection with the furnishing of assistance under this act may be used for expenditures for essential administrative and operating expenses of the United States incident to operation under this act and the amount, if any, remaining after the payment of such expenses shall be used only for purposes specified by act of Congress."

(c) Section 408 (e) of such act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(e) (1) The President may, from time to time, in the interest of achieving standardization of military equipment and in order to provide procurement assistance without cost to the United States, transfer, or enter into contracts for the procurement for transfer of, equipment, materials or services to: (A) nations eligible for assistance under title I, II, or III of this act, (B) a nation which has joined with the United States in a collective defense and regional arrangement, or (C) any other nation not eligible to join a collective defense and regional arrangement referred to in clause (B) above, but whose ability to defend itself or to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part, is important to the security of the United States: Provided, That, prior to the transfer of any equipment, materials, or services to a nation under this clause (C), it shall provide the United States with assurance that such equipment, materials, or services are required for and will be used solely to maintain its internal security, its legitimate self-defense, or to permit it to participate in the defense of the area of which it is a part, and that it will not undertake any act of aggression against any other State: Provided further, That, in the case of any such transfer, the President shall forthwith notify the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and of the House of Representatives, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives.

"(2) Whenever equipment or material is transferred from the stocks of, or services are rendered by, any agency, to any nation as provided in paragraph (1) above, such nation shall first make available the fair value, as determined by the President, of such equipment, materials, or services. The fair value shall not be less for the various categories of equipment or materials than the 'value' as defined in subsection (c) of section 403: Provided, That with respect to excess equipment or materials the fair value may not be determined to be less than the value specified in paragraph 1 of that subsection plus (a) 10 percent of the original gross cost of such equipment or materials; (b) the scrap value; or (c) the market value, if ascertainable, whichever is the greater. Before a contract is entered into, such nation shall (A) provide the United States with a dependable undertaking to pay the full amount of such contract which will assure the United States against any loss on the contract, and (B) shall make funds available in such amounts and at such times as may be necessary to meet the payments required by the contract in advance of the time such payments are due, in addition to the estimated amount of any damages and costs that may accrue from the cancellation of such contract: Provided, That the total amount of outstanding contracts under this subsection, less the amounts which have been paid the United States by such nations, shall at no time exceed $100,000,000."

SEC. 13. The present section 405 (d) of such act is renumbered as section 405 (e) and a new subsection 405 (d) is added to read as follows:

"(d) if, in the case of any nation, which is a party to the North Atlantic Treaty, the President determines after consultation with the North Atlantic Treaty Council that such nation is not making its full contribution through self-help and mutual assistance in all practicable forms to the common defense of the North Atlantic area; and in the case of any other nation, if the President determines that such nation is not making its full contribution to its own defense or to the defense of the area of which it is a part."

Mr. KEE (interrupting reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be open for amendment at any point in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, in my attempt yesterday to explain this bill I told the members of the Committee that it had been passed by the Senate without a dissenting vote. The vote on the passage of this bill in the other body was 66 to 0.

Mr. Chairman, this bill has been considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House for a period of approximately 6 weeks. We had evidence from practically all of the departments of the Government, particularly the military and State Departments. We went into the matter in light of our experience on the basic measure last year and in light of the evidence that we had before us during the hearings of the present year. We went into the matter in light of the action of the Senate on the bill and after thorough and complete and earnest study of the matter. With 18 members of the committee present and six members voting by proxy, the bill was reported out of the Committee on Foreign Affairs without a dissenting vote, to wit, 24 to 0.

Mr. Chairman, I am proud of the action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I am proud of the action of those members of the committee who are of different political faith from myself. For the past 18 years I have been a member of and working with the committee. There are perhaps only two members of the committee, in addition to myself, who were members when I came here 18 years ago. My beloved and distinguished friend, Dr. EATON of New Jersey, has been a tower of strength to me and has stood at my right side at all times when his help was needed most. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] has been with me in all of these measures for the good of the country. They have ignored their political affiliations, they have overlooked all factional and all partisan politics for the purpose of joining me in doing what we believed to be in our country's interest. The committee, as I have stated, thoroughly studied this measure, and after due thought, the 24 members voted to report the bill out, and all join me in hoping that no amendment will be offered or accepted to the bill. As I stated, this measure was passed unanimously by the other body after long and earnest consideration. We of the House committee, have gone into it carefully. We cannot possibly see where any improvement can be made in the bill.

If the bill is passed in its present form and as it came to us from the Senate, there will be avoided the trouble of going to conference in order to iron out little matters of difference that might be injected by amendments. I asked that the bill be open for amendment at any place, but I do hope that no amendment will be offered. If one is offered I ask you in all sincerity—and I think I am joined in that request by members of my committee, including those who are of opposite political faith—that it not be adopted. In the interest of our country at a critical time, let us stand shoulder to shoulder and side by side on this important matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, like the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE], chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, I hope that there will be no amendments offered to this bill, and if any are offered, that they will be rejected. I recognize some Members are interested in amendments, and there are some that I personally agree with, but that is another day. We can take care of that on some other occasion.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. VORYS. The message of the President just delivered indicates that after checking with the other free nations there will be, in a short time, further consideration of this legislation, in the light of the then situation. At that time, and when that consideration takes place, the committee will certainly be glad to consider changes in this legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is no question about that.

Mr. VORYS. At the present time the President has joined in the unanimous request of your Committee on Foreign Affairs that we shoot this thing through in a hurry as is. Any Member who wants to suggest changes in the pattern can have them considered properly without bringing them up today, and it would seem quite in order for the House to comply with the suggestion of the President and both sides of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am in complete agreement with my friend, and I think that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] made a very pointed observation that Members could suggest amendments, talk about them. I hope that quick action will be taken on this bill, because that is the best message to the world, as well as the suggested amendments that the Members have in mind and what they hope the committee will consider in connection with future legislation. I think it is vitally important to get this bill through as reported out by the committee.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Since all the members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs were in favor of a Pacific pact, they certainly could have amended the bill, but they exercised their self-discipline and did not even amend it to that extent, though they were unanimous.

Mr. McCORMACK. Take Spain, for example. I think we ought to reestablish our diplomatic relations with Spain. I have stated that publicly repeatedly. We know that the action that the Security Council of the United Nations took was unwise, but they are to meet shortly and we hope that they will take care of the situation and take counter action, and that our Ambassador will be sent back to Spain at once. I think personally it should have been done long ago, in fact, our Ambassador should never have been recalled. But, under this bill the President has the power to improve that situation with reference to Spain under the North Atlantic Pact and such action would be in the national interest of our own country. And, while I have very strong views on this bill, as far as any amendment to this bill is concerned I think that can wait until later on, because this law is probably going to be amended later on; as it should be. Any amendment offered would only embarrass this bill which is of vital importance at the present time.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I want to concur in the particular statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts regarding the recognition of Spain. I made a similar statement upon the floor when the able gentleman from South Carolina was speaking on that subject some weeks ago, and received some adverse criticism therefor. But, I am even more convinced now than I was then, in the light of recent world developments, that my position then was a correct one. If we are going to fight communism, we have got to fight it with all of the materials available. I want to commend my friend for the position he takes.

Mr. McCORMACK. The uppermost question in the mind of the gentleman from Mississippi and in the minds of the people of the United States is what course of action is for the national interest of the United States. Fortunately, the national interest of our country is consistent with the best interests of freedom-loving people throughout the world and who want to be free as far as their future aspirations are concerned. But above all, the national interest of our own country is and should be uppermost in the minds of all of us.

Mr. Chairman, on January 23, 1947, I stated in a speech in the House of Representatives:

I publicly charge that the failure to bring about permanent peace today is due to the unwillingness of the representatives of the Soviet Union to cooperate with the understanding necessary to bring about a world peace.

In addition to the European situation we must also consider Communist efforts in Asia and all over the Far East.

On March 28, 1947, I said, in part:

Soviet Union is using its ideology to challenge the way of life we believe in, as well as it being a part of its military effort to encircle America. Yes, we are interested in China, not only for the affection for the people of China, although we cannot be interested alone because of sentiment or affection, we are vitally interested, as I see it, because the national interest of our country prompts it.

On March 31, 1948, I said, in part:

We cannot afford at this time to let even the smallest speck of an island in the Atlantic get into the hands of a potential enemy of ours (Soviet Union).

On February 14, 1949, I said, in part:

The Soviet Union is challenging our way of life; that the ideology known as communism is simply used by the Soviet Union as a nation to deceive people and through it take over country after country and bring them within the orbit of the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union is imperialistically inclined. Its imperialism takes the form of an ideology to dominate the world. Ultimately every one of their actions is aimed at the United States of America.

The American people can stand only so much and if the Soviet Union thinks they can proceed on the theory that we are afraid of them, they are likely to wake up some morning realizing that they have misunderstood the mind and the temper of the people of America.

On October 14, 1949, I said, in part:

Communism attempts to impose its ideology by any and all means upon all the peoples of the world. The imperialistic policies and intentions of the Soviet Union are hidden behind the Communist ideology, and as this ideology spreads, imperialistic Soviet Union steps in and takes over.

On January 19, 1950, I said, in part:

Should we fail to act in the case of southern Korea, the last foothold of democracy in northeast Asia will be lost.

On March 28, 1950, I also said, in part:

The Soviet Union is trying to drive us out of Europe and Asia, in order to get control of the productive capacity of western Europe and in turn use it against us and in southeastern Asia to get control of the raw materials which they need today.

The American people want to live in peace with all other peoples, but not at the sacrifice of liberty.

There is nothing that America seeks only friendly relations and peace with all nations, but peace with liberty not peace with slavery.

Dictators are quite prone in their feelings of exaltation, of grandeur, or imperialism to underestimate the minds and the courage of a free people, and a people who are determined to remain free.

They fail to understand the moral values that make up the minds and determine the actions of a people determined to continue to possess freedom and liberty, but if they are wise they will profit by the past experiences and fortunes of dictators who dreamed and undertook to have their dreams and destructive ambitions accomplished.

Let the masters of the Kremlin remember that only a few years ago Hitler dreamed—had ambitions—warred and was defeated by peoples who wanted freedom and peace.

Let those persons take heed that there is no division among Americans; that the American people recognize the danger today far better than they did in 1939–40–41, and that other free peoples recognize the danger.

The masters of the Kremlin should know that America and other free peoples under the leadership of President Truman are not going to have another Munich.

So far as we of America and other free countries are concerned, we have had plenty of warnings.

The latest and most effective is the Communist aggression against South Korea.

It is now apparent the Communist leaders thought the United States would not join issue on Korea, but permit southern Korea to be conquered and a good part of its people liquidated.

They expected we would make diplomatic protests only, and behind their subtle words of diplomacy laugh and jeer at us.

They expected only diplomatic words of protest on our part, and also Great Britain and other remaining free countries, and that the result, if our country followed the course of fear and appeasement would be a complete loss of prestige for us throughout the world, with all other free countries losing confidence in the United States.

The attack on Korea is a warning and a signal to us.

It should tell us that communism aims for world domination. Communism stands for aggression, imperialism, conquest of countries, enslavement of peoples; either that or death.

The attack on Korea has shown the world more than anything else the necessity for preparedness.

We have and will have hard decisions to make, but we should do so with courage.

It is better for us to resolve any doubts in favor of power, rather than weakness.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I join with my colleagues on the Republican side and with the majority leader in the expectation and hope that we will pass this bill immediately and unanimously, indeed, as it was in the other body.

I wish to take only a minute or two to comment upon the President's message. The President's message at long last reflects a widespread feeling in the country that we are beginning to take action in the magnitude, with the decision and—I emphasize this—the self-sacrifice which it is going to take to defeat this Communist menace. We are laying aside business as usual, which we should have done 5 years ago, in order to deal with this very real threat to our freedom and to the integrity of our country, and of the world.

I regret that the President completely bypassed doing anything with respect to the runaway cost of living, indications of which are already present. I should have hoped that the least he could have done on that score would be to establish the necessary conservation agency which would guide both business and consumers in their own self-discipline, in an effort to avoid runaway price increases and matériel shortages.

I think it is clear to everybody, and it certainly should be clear to us, that the one thing which will be grist for the Communist mill is a depression, a cataclysmic depression in the United States. It is the one thing the Communists are counting on, the one thing they are hoping for. The figures showing America's economic strength and America's economic resources which are contained in the President's message are certainly the most eloquent answer as to our capability to defeat communism. What we are talking about now is how to harness those figures and make them fighting soldiers in the cause of democracy for the free peoples. The President's message is a good beginning.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, to me this is a solemn, solemn occasion. I was in the well of this House after Pearl Harbor when all the Members of the House got together almost as a unit to defend this great Nation of ours, to try to make the world safe for democracy.

I want to stop communism, starting here at home. We should lock up every Communist we can find. No time to do any more fooling. Mr. Chairman, you should start with Harry Bridges.

I have listened to the statement made here by the chairman trying to get a unanimous vote on this bill, and I have listened to the President's message which was just read to us. I have a heavy heart. I feel very bad personally. I was in my office this morning trying to check over the statements made by Members of the House yesterday. I have come to the conclusion that when you want to try to get a unanimous report it is almost a heartbreaking thing when you see some of the things that have happened in the last few years by this administration. We talk about being a peace-loving nation. Instead of trying to use our efforts to bring peace to the world, we are doing too much war talk, too much warmongering, and we are getting into too many foreign complications. During the last year when we started to arm all the nations of Europe under the North Atlantic Pact I opposed that greatly and I have not voted for any of it. I just cannot vote for that feature of the bill because I believe it is wrong.

If you want to get peace, why, then prepare for peace and try to do things by peaceful means instead of going out and trying to arm the whole world figuring that you are going to get peace by arming all the nations of the world. It is proper to arm our own Nation. That is what I would be willing to do for our own defense. We have been doing a great deal in that respect. In 1946 we spent over $45,000,000,000. In 1947 over $14,250,000,000. In 1948 about $11,000,000,000. In 1949, $12,000,000,000. In the last 4 years we have spent $82,000,000,000 or more for our armed services. What has happened to all that money? Where are we today, if we are not prepared to defend ourselves? It makes it hard for someone to get up here and vote for this legislation now when this legislation provides for $1,222,500,000 to arm all these countries in Europe of the North Atlantic Pact when from the appropriation that you made last year there is still remaining $214,000,000, and add that to the appropriation that you want now, it makes $1,436,500,000 to arm other nations. That is a great deal of money to me. But it is not all the money that we are being asked for here to arm others. It is the fact that we are arming all the nations of the world instead of trying to get things done by peaceful means and working these things out in a peaceful way. I just do not believe in the way that the President is doing it that you are going to get peace. It is war—notwithstanding he says we are not at war in Korea.

The way we are going at it, we are going to continue to have war. When you build up the war machines of these other nations, they will want to use them. You might say, "We do not want to do it"—no; but when you arm all these other nations, you do not know whether they are going to be armed for the purpose of trying to do something that we want done, or whether they might want to use the arms against us.

I wonder what we are going to do if you conquer Korea now? Then you may have to go into China. We do not want Korea. We do not want any part of it. What are we going to do if you have to go into China and war in China. You are going to have the biggest wildcat by the tail that you ever had in your life. I would rather not touch it at all. I do not want any part of it. But there are other nations that you are going to have to do the same thing with, and then where are you? After you get into those countries, you will wreck America. That is just what you are going to do and that is just the thing I do not want any part of. I cannot see how you are going to do it, but I do want to say this—when there are so many of you here and you all seem to be as a unit on this, I do not want to be the one who is going to be standing by and try to oppose all of you. I have always believed in the majority rule. I want to be with the majority of Americans to do the things that are good for America, but I just do not think you are doing the right thing. The President is not doing the right things. It grieves me greatly to see you taking this attitude in trying to force this legislation down our throats. God save America—because I do not believe you are doing it.

It looks like the President is getting us into world war III a little at a time. Now, watch out that you do not wreck our country, trying to save the world. Let every nation in the United Nations send their men to the front-line trenches. Do not expect American boys to be killed to save the world and the world standing by watching us try to do it. You will kill our own boys and wreck our Government.

God save America, let the people wake up before it is too late.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have taken this microphone but few times since I have been a Member of this House. I sat here yesterday and listened to these debates with great interest. I do not think the American people are interested in apologies. I do not think the American people are interested in how any Member on either side voted on previous legislation. I think the American people are willing to recognize the fact that we are in a shooting war, and war is not like a horse race. We do not collect any prize for running second or making a show. We are in a war that is going to determine the future conduct of the world from this time on.

I happen to be the father of four young children, and I want them to have the same opportunities that you and I had. I think it is time for this Congress to act and to follow the recommendations of the President and cease all of this conversation and blaming one another and trying to apologize. I, for one, do not care how any Member voted previously. The vote today is the vote that counts. We are interested from this time on in how Members vote in preparing this Nation for a war that may go to the proportions of the Second World War, and I think we should cease our conversation and get down to a vote.

Mr. Chairman, we are now engaged in a hot war; it is yet small in comparison to the First and Second World Wars, and we hope it will remain that way, and will soon be over.

However, I feel that we are just seeing the beginning of the third world war. My opinion on this matter is based upon a study of past history and a knowledge of the ideas and purposes of the Communist Party and the Comintern in Moscow.

The Soviet Union and it alone will determine whether or not there is at this time a third world war—the Korean war was not a war of our choosing. It is a war fought a long way from the shores of this Nation; a war that is difficult to explain to our people, but a war that is as important to win as any we have ever been engaged in.

For more than 100 years we have had a blueprint of what we could expect from Marxism and the plan of the Communists to take over the world. Just 33 years ago the Communists seized the government in Russia and from that day we have seen the everlasting and constant efforts of that nation to force its evil influence upon the rest of the world.

We must all now be aware that there is no twilight zone in this world, either we are to live in peace, or the world will be enslaved and fettered in chains. We have two ideologies, one representing the Christian approach to the problems of men and the other representing the evil. This is a battle of survival and will not cease until one or the other is defeated.

My greatest fear is the extent of a world war and its eventual cost in lives and property. We cannot expect an easy victory, a victory for right is never easily obtained. I wonder just how the democratic world would respond to a war of 10 to 20 years' duration, and it could well take that long.

To the Communist, time means little in the over-all picture, if victory is assured in the end. By prolonging a war and by delaying action and the wearing out of the patience of the people of the democracies and their will to fight, they hope to obtain a negotiated peace; that means victory for them. This fear is felt among many of the great military minds of this Nation.

It is difficult for me to believe that the Korean War is not part of global plan of the Soviet Union. A preface, or preliminary move. Quick, decisive and positive action must be our job now. Victory must come soon so as to convince the other nations of the world that America has the strength and the will to fight.

We must accept the fact that war is no longer around the corner; it is here. The North Koreans are confident of victory. This is evidenced by the fact that they are taking few prisoners of war, and killing many of those they do take. They do not expect to ever stand before a world court of justice.

We refused to accept, for a long time, the fact that Russia was determined to destroy us, and the rest of the world, to spread her ideology of hate. We did appease this giant of nations in a hope that peace could be maintained.

There were those in this Nation that cried out during the past 5 years, for business as usual. We economized at the expense of our country. We failed to recognize that we were living in an uneasy period of armistice. Now we have awakened to find ourselves at war, and the papers each day carrying a list of the war casualities.

As a Nation, and a people, we have been guilty of gross neglect. There are extenuating circumstances. Surely, we loved peace, we love our neighbor, we abhor war, we want to maintain our high standard of living; we want lower taxes, we do not wish to have controls; we do not like to prepare for a war that may never come because of the cost, and for many many other reasons, but the truth is, we were guilty of the most gross negligence, and the blood of the boys dying in Korea is on all of our hands, yours and mine. Tears, regrets, name calling, shifting of blame will not win this war or keep us out of any to come. We live today and hope for tomorrow.

It is my considered judgment and the judgment of many in high places, who should know, that we have at the very best, a 6 months' to a possible 9 months' period before full hostilities. Mind you, I said, possible. We may have 6 hours or 6 days or 6 weeks. However, whatever the time may be, there is no such thing as painless preparedness. Half measures are not sufficient.

The Atlantic Pact, recently cementing America and the free democratic nations of the world has not yet produced the pooling of resources and manpower. There is no Pacific pact. With all due respect to our valiant allies, the responsibility of conducting the Korean War and preparing for any future eventuality falls upon the shoulders of this Nation.

The chief barrier now to all-out effort is unwillingness to face the fact that war with Russia is almost inevitable. Our officials are hesitant to ask the American people to make the necessary sacrifices that are involved.

My friends, as the father of four little children, not of school age, and I feel strongly about this matter of preparedness, I want these babies to have a free world to live in and to have some hope of peace and security. I am personally willing to make any sacrifice for their, and all of our children's future. Not only is the security of their future in doubt, but there is serious possibility that their very lives may be snuffed out in case of an atomic war.

We have been selling ourselves the quack remedy of painless preparation. There is no such thing. Preparation for war is next to war itself. It means the highest form of personal sacrifice. We cannot have short hours of work, all the meat we want; butter, coffee, cheap housing and rent and prepare to fight a global war. Many of these little things in life may have to be sacrificed. A strong military, second to none, is our goal.

In this battle of survival, unlike a horse race, there is no second place; it is victory or complete and final defeat.

Dr. William Lowe Bryan, beloved president emeritus of Indiana University, once wrote:

On every side death—
Or where not death, despair and surrender.
Not so with me.
In me no surrender,
In me the will to live.
The will to live victoriously.

Victory is possible and probable, as I firmly believe that God marches at our side. Sometimes we wonder just why certain things happen, and we ask just why is a war brought down upon us, when we do not want it and are trying so hard to avoid it. Perhaps it is His will and His way to test us, to try us for even greater things to come. He will not let us down, if we accept our responsibility and stand up with the Christian nations of the world in this crusade of the twentieth century. As knights of old went forth to battle in the name of Christ, we who have followed since then are today unfurling the banner of right and good in this battle to protect and save our fellow man. In our will to win and in Him who can lead us to victory we place our trust.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak, but I rise at this time shortly to answer my good friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] on whether this mutual defense assistance program is more or less costly than his thinking as to a plan.

The question came up before the Foreign Affairs Committee whether it would be more costly to arm our allies, especially the ones under the Atlantic Treaty, or just draw back into the United States and arm just ourselves, without any friends along with us. That problem was brought up by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VORYS] when he said this:

Mr. VORYS. General Marshall, here is a proposition we often hear: If we build up European military strength we precipitate war, because Russia will strike before the military balance is against her, possibly before the balance is even; that in such a struggle we could not be sure that our European allies would fight; that, therefore, the thing to do is arm to the teeth here and not dissipate our military strength there, but to assure those nations by announcing that we will fight if Russia attacks western Europe. That is one formula that we hear often and one which has many advocates. I would be glad if you would give us your comments on that.

General MARSHALL. * * * I think, in the first place, a negative attitude is fatal. I think the attitude of arming to the teeth here and leaving Europe impotent is wrong. I think it is psychologically wrong and militarily wrong, and just generally wrong. That procedure also assumes the policy that when Europe is overwhelmed we can go about our business in the usual way, which we could not, in my opinion. We will be curbed and restricted in many ways aside from the direct threat to our own peace. We would have the whole world in the other camp. That would be a terrible position for us here.

Then the other question came up as to the expense of the same proposal as that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], and General Marshall said:

That would be a futile procedure and involving great expense. We can have planes with tremendous radius of action. We can have ships that will dominate, we will say, most of the sea. But everywhere on land we would be impotent, and the movement from the United States to the European field would be virtually an impossibility under those conditions. So that our arming to the teeth here would merely mean that we were going to live an isolated existence in the world, militarily, economically, and politically.

In closing, the question was asked as to the exact amount of dollars that this alternative propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH] would cost, and the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS] put this very question to General Marshall:

Mr. JAVITS. General, would you estimate the increase of our military budget, either in order of magnitude or in dollars—it is now about $14,000,000,000—which would result from what Mr. VORYS has just described as a policy of our arming to the teeth and not doing anything about arming Europe?

General MARSHALL. You mean our present actions toward our military budget—is that any indication we are arming to the teeth?

Mr. JAVITS. What I meant was: Suppose we did do just what Mr. VORYS has asked—which is hypothetical—that we armed to the teeth and did not arm Europe. How much of an increase would that mean in our $14,000,000,000 defense budget?

The gentleman from Pennsylvania wants a low budget, so here is General Marshall's answer:

I would say something around—well over $30,000,000,000 a year.

Mr. JAVITS then comments:

Infinitely greater per annum than anything we propose to do in even a 10-year program for western Europe?

General Marshall said: "Yes."

So if the Congress wants a balanced budget and the lowest possible way to obtain adequate defense and defensive arms and a secure America the House should vote unanimously for this bill.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield to my friend from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I have been interested—I was last week when I voted for the draft—to find out whether the United Nations was going to act as a unit. We stepped in, of course, before the United Nations had any chance to act.

Mr. FULTON. We were already on the spot, and prompt action certainly was necessary.

Mr. RICH. But you do not have one man outside of American troops in the field over there. I want some protection for our American boys; I want to get some of these other countries that are being defended and whom we are protecting, to put their men in at the front and not put all American boys there to stop the bullets that are coming.

Mr. FULTON. If you want outside assistance from friendly countries to aid our boys in Korea, then you should vote likewise for the arms necessary to help defend the homes and the people of the countries who come to our assistance. This matter of security and defense must be cooperative and mutual, and it is too heavy a burden for our country to carry alone.

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, also at the conclusion of my remarks on this bill to extend my remarks on the Tydings committee and its report.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

A POLICY WHICH WILL RUIN US

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the House has under consideration S. 3809, authorizing an appropriation of almost a billion and a half dollars to assist in arming certain friendly nations. If memory serves correctly, never since Germany and Japan surrendered has my vote been cast for any legislation or for any appropriation which I believed would commit us to fight in world war III.

But the policy of this and the preceding administrations has put us into world war III.

I expect to vote for this authorization of an appropriation bill to aid us in winning that war and for subsequent legislation along the same line for just one reason.

Some 14,000 miles east from New York, some 5,000 miles west from San Francisco, off the southern tip of Manchuria, lies Korea.

A policy of meddling in the affairs of other peoples and other nations which involved us in World War I and which we have followed consistently ever since, left our young men stranded in the southern end of Korea. A similar situation may be created in other places.

Nothing that I can say or do can extricate them from that situation where, apparently, many of them are doomed to die, but few unwounded return to their native land.

The President, in his message this morning, in effect told us that, because of the action of the Security Council of the United Nations, he had declared war against the North Koreans and, in effect, against Russia, who, he charged, instigated and was supporting the actions of the North Koreans.

The President also, in effect, advised the people of this Nation and the nations of the world that the United States was pledged to and would assist each and every one of the 58 member nations which might be attacked. But, to date, according to the New York Times of this morning, not one of those nations except Nicaragua has indicated any intention of sending a single foot soldier. Permit me to quote from the New York Times of this morning:

NO UNITED NATIONS MEMBERS OFFER TO SEND MEN; RESPONSE TO LIE'S APPEAL FOR TROOPS, AIR OR NAVAL UNITS FOR KOREA IS SPARSE

LAKE SUCCESS, July 18.—No member of the United Nations has yet offered to provide ground troops or additional air or naval units for the defense of South Korea in response to the appeal issued last Friday by Trygve Lie, the Secretary General. Although it is realized that such decisions require time, misgivings are being expressed about the possibility that there will be a poor response that will be exploited by Soviet propaganda.

Argentina notified the United Nations today that she was planning to discuss with the United States the types of armed forces required, but she did not say whether she would be able to provide any. A Security Council meeting is to be held to receive the first report from Gen. Douglas MacArthur, commander of United Nations forces, but the United States delegation said it had been delayed.

BRITAIN DENIES PLANS

LONDON, July 18.—Reports that Britain and her western union allies were planning to provide a combined force in response to the United Nations appeal for help in the Korean fighting were officially denied today by the Foreign Office. It was also denied in authoritative circles that there was any plan under consideration to raise a combined task force from Commonwealth countries for service in Korea.

An opportunity will be given for the British Government to explain in detail its attitude toward the United Nations request for ground troops to assist American forces in Korea when the full dress defense debate is held in the House of Commons next week, probably on Wednesday. As yet, the Cabinet's decision on the request for ground troops has not been made.

AUSTRALIA WEIGHS MORE AID

CANBERRA, AUSTRALIA, July 18.—Australia, now considering additional aid for Korea, will not make available any ground forces such as a special expeditionary force or troops of the British Commonwealth occupation forces in Japan, it was authoritatively learned here today.

But usually well-informed sources believe additional aid might include more warships and aircraft.

PHILIPPINE STAND NEGATIVE

MANILA, July 18.—The Philippine Cabinet today endorsed President Elpidio Quirino's stand that no Filipino troops be sent to the Korean battlefront.

A spokesman said, however, the Government would not object to volunteering by individual Filipinos for service with the United Nations forces.

The Netherlands and Argentina similarly indicated no action would be taken to send troops.

Moreover, the President has ordered our troops to fight under the flag of the United Nations.

The President, at the request of the Security Council of the United Nations and without authority under our law, has declared and is carrying on a war. He has usurped the function of the Congress. The President should be ousted and with him should go Acheson and all those who have been responsible for our present situation.

The only thing that I can do to assist our men who are now stranded in Korea and the Far East, deserted by the United Nations, is to vote for this authorization and subsequent appropriations in the hope that at least some small part of the funds will be used for their relief.

It is evident that our policy makers learn nothing, either from history or from our own experiences.

There have been, and there are, those in this country who have so little faith in the soundness of our Government, the courage and the endurance of our people, that they believe that, for our continued national existence, we are dependent upon and must join in some world-wide organization to which we look for guidance, under which we will find protection from communism, from Stalin

We were inveigled into World War I by propaganda which lead a majority of our people to believe that, by the winning of that war, all war might be ended, universal peace established.

The war was won. The seeds for World War II were sown. A Hitler, a Mussolini, and a Stalin were the fruits of that sowing.

Hitler's armies started east. Again, those here in America who believe that our existence depends upon fighting and defeating every would-be world conqueror stepped in, and World War II was fought and won.

While our young men were fighting World War II, and afterward, through our efforts and contributions and by our compliance with the demands of France and Britain, our concessions to Stalin, he and communism were permitted to gather strength until today those formulating our foreign policy say he is now in a position to dominate the world.

Neither World War I nor World War II gave us, nor will World War III insure, universal permanent peace.

It profits us not at all to review the mistakes of the past, except as from them we learn how to avoid a repetition, how to follow a course which will preserve us as a Nation.

At this time, it might be well to remember that the Morgenthau policy, adopted and followed for a time by the administration then in power, has prevented the building up of the German people, brought about the destruction of a barrier which might well, had it been properly nurtured and guided, have stopped Stalin and communism at the border of eastern Europe.

The policy of an Acheson, adopted and followed by the administration, has given to Stalin and the Communists a million or more fighting men in China, an effective army which now threatens to push our forces in Korea into the sea.

I do not question the patriotism of those in authority, of those who have been guilty of establishing, of implementing, a policy which is responsible for our present situation. But I do say, and I say it with sincerity, that adherence to that policy of attempting to lessen the ills of people everywhere in the world, dictate to other nations the form of government which they shall follow, and to seek peace by participating in every war wherever anywhere in the world and for whatever cause it may arise, tends far more to destroy us as a nation than any direct assault that Stalin or Stalin and his satellites may direct against us.

Two things I learn from history, and they are these: That any military leader, any nation, which seeks to conquer the world will either, because of overexpansion or because of the discordant elements brought under one authority, destroy itself.

The second lesson is that to win a battle or a war, the fighting, driving force must not be permitted to get so far from its base that a sufficient supply of food, clothing, munitions of war cannot reach it.

Until we can extricate ourselves from Korea, we here at home must do what we can to support those we place in danger.

I have no doubt but that Stalin is following a plan designed to involve us in as many wars on as many widely separated fronts as his agents and his satellites can bring about.

You may remember that, in 1924, Nikolai Lenin wrote, "Some day we shall force the United States to spend itself into destruction."

Although the administration, in seeking power and appropriations, announced the purpose of fighting communism, it is apparent to those familiar with the situation here in Washington, that Communists have been coddled and harbored by the preceding and by this administration.

Instead of wholeheartedly fighting communism abroad, we have followed a policy of appeasement and, in China, under the policy of an Acheson and his clique, have actually assisted in creating and in arming the forces which are now fighting in Korea.

The internationalists in this country—and, permit me to repeat, their loyalty, their patriotism, is not questioned—have overlong had their way, and, in my judgment, unless a change is made in our policy, we will, by a continued dissipation of our resources, by involvement in a half dozen wars in widely separated areas, so weaken ourselves that in the end we may be forced to make our last stand here at home, where some of unquestioned patriotism think we should have created a force and a defense which might well have defied Stalin, communism, any would-be world conqueror.

When the unification bill was before the Congress, some of our military experts advised us that the Navy, the marines, were no longer essential to our national defense; that the next war would be a push-button war; that the atomic bomb made us master of the world; that all we needed to do was to spend billions of dollars in the development of it and other new weapons.

The billions were spent, but we find our foot soldiers, ill equipped, slugging it out against overwhelming numbers in Korea.

Our military experts seem to have been mistaken.

Although I fear that support of this present appropriation, of subsequent appropriations designed for the same purpose, may contribute to our ultimate weakness, I cannot refuse to send aid to those now fighting on the other side of the world, not our battle but the battle of the internationalists.

The only future security for our Nation which I can see is the election this November of a Congress, and the election in 1952 of a President, who will pay heed to the lessons of history and of experience, unite under a policy, followed by every other nation in the world except our own, of thinking of and acting for the people of their country and the preservation of their nation.

Mr. Chairman, now just a look at the question of whether we are really fighting communism. Permit a reference to the conclusions set forth in the Tydings report, which, in the judgment of some, is an invitation to the Commuists here in the executive department to continue their efforts.

On May 1, 1950, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 6108–6113, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. KARSTEN], from the well of the House made a talk, the evident purpose of which was to prove that there were not and never had been Communists in any of the executive departments.

He was joined in that effort by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

It was asserted that charges which had been made by a Member of the other body in certain 81 cases, were utterly without foundation.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 12, pages 9985–9988, will be found evidence indicating that the files in the State Department have been stripped of certain information which, had it remained, might have caused the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from Massachusetts to reach a different conclusion.

Just recently a committee of the other body filed a report, which, among other things, indicated that there were not and had not been any Communists in the executive departments.

So that no one may be misled by what was said by the gentleman from Missouri or be in doubt as to whether the executive departments have harbored Communists, let me quote the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY], as set forth on page 2341 of the hearings of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives, Eighty-first Congress, second session, and which hearings began on the sixth day of February, 1950:

Mr. ROONEY. You see the situation, Mr. Gladieux, is this: For a number of years this committee has been after the Department of State to cooperate with it and that Department through Mr. Peurifoy, the Deputy Under Secretary, has gone along with the recommendations of the committee. And we find that the State Department, insofar as our information up to the moment is concerned, is quite clear of subversives.

NEED FOR SIMILAR ACTION IN COMMERCE

The story this year is that the Department of Commerce has taken the place of the State Department; that the Department of Commerce is the outfit in Government which is honeycombed with people belonging to the Communist Party.

Mr. GLADIEUX. Of course, we would have to challenge that.

Mr. ROONEY. I am just telling you that the public has gotten such an idea. We did not create it; but that is the current situation.

Now, when the Department of State can come in here and point out that they have separated so many people for this reason, and so many for the other reason—and one of the reasons is homosexuality—and you are not able to point to the separation of 1 out of 46,000, it seems that something may be wrong.

Permit me to quote from the speech of another distinguished Democrat, the gentleman from Virginia, the Honorable BURR P. HARRISON, who, I am informed, appearing before the Manor Ruritan Club at Staunton, Va., on May 15, 1950, pointed out that—

Attorney General Tom Clark—

Now a Supreme Court Justice—

was telling a CIO convention that there were no Communists in the Government, insofar as was known, at the very moment Judith Coplon, now under a Federal penitentiary sentence, was busy stealing confidential information from the files of his own department, where she was working.

Then again we have the findings in a report of the Subcommittee of the Army Finance Center at St. Louis, Mo., a paragraph of which reads:

During the past 3 years 63 persons have been investigated by the FBI as security risks at the Army Finance Center of which 44 have been discharged or resigned while under investigation. Upon a review of all loyalty and security-risk cases at the center requested by the committee, recommendations for removal as security risks were made by the Department of the Army in at least three additional cases.

Permit me to refer again to the hearings of Mr. ROONEY'S subcommittee on pages 2362–2363 and to quote as follows:

Mr. GLADIEUX. I should not like the record to close, Mr. Chairman, without reiterating what I said before, that I think it is quite proper that we be called upon to defend our practices. I insist, however, that we have been diligent and cautious in our handling of these cases in the Department of Commerce. While we have put the Government's interest paramount, we have not lost sight of the fact that inherent in cases of this kind can be very grave injustice to the individual, but we have tried to approach it in a reasonable and intelligent way. I think we have done so in full protection of the Government. That we have handled our loyalty cases with the proper combination of vigilance, on the one hand, and employee justice, on the other, is indicated by the fact that we have to date not been overruled or reversed in any case by the Loyalty Review Board either as to acquittals or dismissals. To determine that an employee is disloyal to his Government, and thereby to brand him as a subversive and a traitor is not a judgment that one makes lightly or indiscriminately. Though I have derived no pleasure from the duty, I have had to make such adverse decisions and shall probably have to make more, tough as they may be. I have no compunction in deciding against an employee on appeal or otherwise where there are reasonable grounds to believe that he is not fully loyal to the Government or is otherwise unsuitable on character or other security grounds for Federal employment.

Mr. ROONEY. That is all so much nice language. To me it does not mean a thing. You have come up here this afternoon to acquaint us with the situation in the Department of Commerce. The results have been nil. We have not had the cooperation from you that we have had from the Department of State.

You refused to take us into your confidence with regard to these things, and I have tried to handle it in an amicable way so that if questions were raised on the floor we might have the answers to them. You have reacted in the other direction, away from us. So, now we are far apart, and we will have to stay that way. There is nothing that I can see that we can do about it.

Mr. GLADIEUX. I am sory, I feel that I have gone as far as I could, and as I am authorized to go.

Mr. ROONEY. They have the right approach on this in the Department of State. They speak of communism in the Department of State, but apparently the Communist situation is no longer in the Department of State; I think it is in the Department of Commerce.

Mr. GLADIEUX. We do not think so. We think we have handled the situation diligently.

Mr. ROONEY. I do not think so at all, when it takes 18 months to decide whether a person in a very critical position at the National Bureau of Standards is a security risk.

In view of the foregoing, is the recent report of the Tydings subcommittee conclusive? Does not the language which I have quoted from the gentleman from Virginia and from the two reports beyond argument show that, as charged by these two prominent Democrats, there have been Communists, there are Communists, in the executive departments?

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the bill and all amendments thereto close in 40 minutes, the last 5 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, first of all may I say I intend to support this measure. I am happy that action is being expedited.

I want, however, to say, that we have heard much about bipartisan foreign policy in recent years but, as one who has had some contact with that, and as a Republican, I am constrained to say that too often, it seemed to me, we have not been called in at the take-off. We have been called in when the whistle blows for what may be a crash landing.

I was the majority leader of the Eightieth Congress. Some of you will recall that it was in that Congress that the Chief Executive and his advisers proposed to us the program for aid to France and Italy, aid to Greece and Turkey, the so-called Marshall plan, and it was that Congress which enacted those measures and others into law.

However, we were not consulted with respect to the administration's program in Asia and, as a matter of fact, and as the record will show, we opposed much of it as it began to unfold, particularly appeasement of Communists.

We Republicans have for years urged and demanded a firmer and stronger policy against Communist infiltration and aggression in Asia. Our voices were ignored. Now we face a serious threat in Korea, with implications far beyond that peninsula. Our peoples may ask: Why did this situation develop? Why were we not better informed and prepared to meet it? One day those questions must be answered. But today the question is, What do we do to extricate ourselves from this crisis which confronts us?

The President has submitted proposals of the greatest importance to the American people, and the world. They include billions more of spending, unlimited increases in our armed services, and all manner of controls and Government authority.

May I say what certainly is unnecessary to be said? Republicans are patriots. While we agree with our Democratic friends that whatever may have gone before, when America is in trouble—if we are in a war—there is only one thing to do, and that is to win the war.

We shall cooperate with all due expedition to do what is necessary to guarantee our security, assure victory, and the fulfillment of our binding commitments. But in doing that we shall carefully look over all these requests and proposals. We shall operate on our constitutional responsibility as Members of the legislative branch of the Government rather than grant unnecessary blank-check authority to the Executive.

I believe that is what the people of the country, on the record of the past, want us to do and expect us to do, and I do not know how anyone could ask any more than that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I had intended to offer an amendment to section 3, which is an amendment to section 104 of the original act, but in view of the contents of the President's message and the fact that the committee will probably be considering this bill again within the near future, I would like simply to point out to the chairman of the committee that when this bill does come up for consideration for further revision that at that time I would like to appear before the committee and discuss the practicality of the language which is set forth in section 3 of the bill, and which amends section 104 of the original act, as related to the job which has been pointed out today by the Chief Executive and which has been commented on by members of the committee.

My thoughts run in this general direction, that with the apparent total involvement in world war III which we now face, with everything that the American people have in blood and material things and energy being put on the barrel head, I cannot see how the language in section 104 of the original act that is here amended can square with the proposition that is before us. That was the only amendment that I had in mind offering to the bill, and I am simply letting the record stand with these comments.

Mr. JACKSON of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. JACKSON of California. I congratulate the gentleman upon his statement. I, too, had an amendment which I had intended to offer, but in the light of the necessity for immediate action on the bill I would prefer to take it up before the committee when the matter is further considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS].

(Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to revise and extend her remarks and include an article.)

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I should like to join the gentleman from Massachusetts in his statement that Spain should be recognized and taken into what I now call the family of nations. She would add great strength to the United States and to that part of the world that is fighting communism. Spain is a Catholic country. Certainly no group in the United States or in the world is more opposed to communism or is making a better fight against it or trying to show the world what it means not to have communism in it; and I am not myself a Catholic but an Episcopalian. Spain would be a protection also to us, as a matter of defense, against aggression.

Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill. I think it is necessary for our defense.

Mr. Chairman, we have just heard a very far-reaching message from the President of the United States. There is not a loyal American in the United States who will not go along with him in what is needed to become victorious. We have always won, Mr. Chairman, and we will win today.

As we listened to the President's far-reaching message every one of us realized that the personnel at the head of the departments that will administer these huge funds must be very carefully screened. If the person in charge of any department is not able to carry out the necessary protection of the country, he should be removed. This is no time for tolerating incompetence, either deliberate or unpremeditated. We realized also that our responsibility is great in saving every unnecessary expense in order to save our national economy, our national economy which Soviet Russia would like to destroy.

Mr. Chairman, as we are trying to protect in a military way the flower of our country that goes in to fight for us, we must try to protect our fighting families and our civilian population. As Mr. Larsen, who now is in charge of what is being done against atomic bomb attacks, has said, there is no city or town in the Nation that can claim absolute immunity from wartime disaster at the hands of an enemy.

It is as criminally negligent not to prepare our civilian population as it is not to equip our fighting forces.

Mr. Chairman, I am introducing today the following bill:

A bill to provide for the creation of the Office for the Coordination of Civilian Defense, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "National Civilian Defense Act of 1950."

SEC. 2. For the purposes of this act—

(1) The term "Director" means the Director of the Office for the Coordination of Civilian Defense which is created by section 3 of this act.

(2) The term "State governments" shall include the governments of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Territories of Alaska and Hawaii, and the possessions of the United States.

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created in the Executive Office of the President the Office for the Coordination of Civilian Defense, at the head of which shall be a Director appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director shall receive compensation at the rate of $15,000 a year.

(b) Without regard to the civil-service laws, or the Classification Act of 1949, as amended, the Director is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such personnel as may be necessary to enable him to carry out his duties under this act. The Director and employees of the Office for the Coordination of Civilian Defense shall be allowed actual traveling subsistence, and other expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties under this act.

SEC. 4. The Director, under the supervision and direction of the President, is authorized and directed to furnish guidance and leadership to State governments by—

(1) Assisting such governments in the establishment of defense organizations and agencies designed to coordinate the civilian defense activities of such governments;

(2) Serving as the center for the coordination of civilian defense activities of the Federal Government and the State governments;

(3) Advising and assisting in the preparation of civil defense programs and measures designed to afford adequate protection of life and property in the event of emergency and which will be integrated with the civil defense plans of the Federal Government.

SEC. 5. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

Always the reply has been from the administration as to why nothing has been done year after year, fear of war hysteria. Better be scorned than killed.

Nothing real has been done thus far in civilian defense. With the exception of a few cities that are partially organized, the civilian population is as totally unprepared and unequipped as were our lines in Korea. This will provide an agency to carry out leadership and guidance and see that it goes forward quickly. The agency should be a continuing agency like the Red Cross and geared to an emergency.

The following is the article in the Lowell Sun I have referred to:

ATOM-BOMB ATTACK WOULD FIND UNITED STATES WITHOUT DEFENSE—CIVIL PROTECTION LAGS FAR BEHIND RUSSIA, WHICH HAS COMPLETE PROGRAM

(By Phillips J. Peck)

WASHINGTON, July 17.—An atom-bomb attack on the United States tomorrow would catch the Nation with its guard down on civil defense.

By way of contrast, Russia has a long-established civil-defense organization numbering more than 20,000,000 participants and a program of training 5,000,000 new "volunteers" annually.

The U. S. S. R. 20 years ago started dispersing its industry, while much of the United States war-production might is concentrated in a few major cities.

DISPARITY

American officials are acutely aware of this disparity. In light of the uneasy world picture, they have accelerated United States planning to the fullest degree. But it will take time to obtain results; 2 years at least.

It is doubtful the Nation will have anything like an effective national civil-defense force before 1952, and the home front will not be completely prepared for an atomic war before 1953.

Civilian Mobilization Director Paul J. Larsen told Congress last spring:

"There is one question which I am sure must be in your minds. What would we do if bombs should fall tomorrow? Would we be ready?

"To be frank, the answer is that we would not be ready tomorrow—not as ready as we will be a year from now, but more nearly ready than a year ago."

APPRAISAL

Today, 3½ months later and 3 weeks after the outbreak of fighting in Korea, Larsen finds no reason to change that appraisal of the situation.

The answer as to why we are unready is not difficult. In the years immediately following VJ-day nobody really faced up to the problem of civil defense. Federal planning was irregular; leadership changed frequently, and reports were made and pigeon-holed.

President Truman's dramatic announcement last September of an atomic explosion in Russia finally put steam into the United States civil-defense drive. Much time had been wasted, however, and no one knows for certain how much is left.

One military estimate is that by mid-1952 Russia will have a sufficient stockpile of A-bombs to do great damage in an attack on the United States.

TOOK OVER IN JANUARY

Larsen, 48-year-old electronics engineer and former official of New Mexico atomic laboratories, took over the civilian-defense mobilization effort last January. He has the operation moving rapidly, and huge amounts of planning are going on.

In the musty old State Department Building adjacent to the White House Larsen's small staff of 27—drawing on the talents and ideas of 700 specialists in other Federal agencies—is whipping into shape an interim or "emergency" civil-defense chart.

READY SEPTEMBER 1

It will be ready September 1 for transmission to the governors of all States, territories, and possessions. This will constitute the Nation's civil-defense blueprint while the master program is being built, volunteers trained, equipment standardized, and materials stockpiled.

If one of our cities were attacked tomorrow, however, it would have to rely on its existing fire and police departments and medical resources, augmented by available military forces and some technical assistance from the Federal Government.

Larsen and aides are constructing no huge Federal bureaucracy. They have a "grass roots" concept of civil defense. Washington can draft blueprints, provide technical data on the atom, stockpile equipment, and possibly help finance the program.

RESPONSIBILITY ENDS

But there Federal responsibility largely ends. The States, and more particularly each individual city, will have to enroll and train volunteers and prepare itself to cope with an emergency of the type which bomb-blasted Hiroshima suffered some 5 years ago.

After September 1 States and cities will be in a position to step up their civil-defense preparations. Thus far, however, only 22 States and Hawaii have enacted legislation to permit implementation of the forthcoming civil-defense guide. This despite Larsen's grim warning:

"There is no city or town in the Nation that can claim absolute immunity from wartime disaster at the hands of an enemy."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TOWE].

Mr. TOWE. Mr. Chairman, I intend to vote for this bill although I voted against a similar proposal last year. I did so because at that time it was quite apparent to me that we had no foreign policy that was firm in any particular direction, especially the east. When Stalin started to put the pressure on the Chinese Nationalists the administration grudglingly gave them some aid. Eventually, however, we completely abandoned these friendly people who had done a great deal to help us win the last war. The administration has consistently refused to aid Spain—a country anxious to join us and the other free countries of the world in our all-out fight against communism. Spain should be invited to participate in the effort to defeat communism and be furnished aid.

Despite the fact that in January of this year the administration leaders announced their attitude toward the Chinese situation, which to all intent and purposes meant that we were withdrawing our support in eastern Asia, the same leaders have now reversed themselves and have selected a spot to make a stand against communism, which, in my opinion, is going to be extremely costly in lives and resources. If that policy had been adopted when the Chinese were attempting to resist the Communists, our participation would have been more valuable and at the same time less costly.

In his message to the Congress today the President makes no suggestion that the administration will attempt to provide money for the war effort by economizing at home. There is no suggestion that we cut down the tremendous spending programs that have been proposed for our domestic economy, and which have been fostered by the New or Fair Deal.

I prefer, as everyone here does, to live in a free land and under a free government and all of us, of course, are willing to make sacrifices. But if we are going to attempt to support and defend every spot in the world where Mr. Stalin, or his satellites under his guidance, decide to move in—and incidentally our leaders over the past 7 or 8 years have put the Communists in all of those spots—our country is going to wind up not only bankrupt, but we are going to be in the same kind of a situation as the people of Russia. We will never be able to perform the herculean task of defending the world or the individuals in it whenever Stalin moves against them without destroying our economy and reducing ourselves to the same kind of political subservience that the people of Russia now live under.

I know we are strong. I know we are great. I know that our people are brave, but there is a limit to what we can do. I hope someone in the administration will understand that before we go too far, and I also hope that there will be some effort made to reduce the tremendous domestic expense. I know that is unpopular. I know the people who call themselves great liberals never think of a thing like that. The object is to spend and spend and spend. Now, having almost destroyed our domestic economy, we are embarking upon a program to spend the young men of our land. That is a terrific price that we are about to pay for the stupidity and lack of judgment on the part of the leaders in several departments of our Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this bill with a heavy heart and a great deal of reluctance. I have two good reasons for my action. First, we now find ourselves in a predicament which, in my judgment our foreign policy since 1947 had made absolutely inevitable. But since we are in this unfortunate trouble, we have to hit it head-on and with all our courage and strength. Secondly, we can meet the present crisis best if we unite wholeheartedly and prove to the world that we are all back of the course which we now find it necessary to pursue.

I am fundamentally opposed to the policy embodied in this bill. And since the results of that policy have been bad, it must be subject to constant reexamination with a view to correcting its faults.

It has two main defects. The first and most fatal one is that it puts the direction of the foreign policy of the United States and our military commitments under the control of the Soviet Union. I said that in May 1947, when the Truman doctrine was first advanced. President Truman said:

> I believe that it must be the policy of the United States to support free people who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures.

That statement set no reservation on the type or scope or place of the proposed help and support. It was global and all-inclusive. From then on, Russia could stir up a domestic strife or outside pressure wherever and whenever Russia wanted to force intervention by the United States, or else a retreat and consequent loss of face. Russia was enabled to force the extension of the policy to various areas of the world, carefully selected by the Kremlin. So when the North Koreans, urged on by the Soviets, started an aggression such as the attack on the South Korean Republic, and such as may be started in Indochina and elsewhere, it became clear that we are putting our policy under Soviet control and with the added disadvantage of permitting Russia to pick its spots. Since we have the policy and the commitments, it would be far more fatal to retreat than to go forward boldly to win our objectives.

My second main objective is that the policy is not related to the resources of the United States. By resources I mean manpower and materials and not merely dollars. Walter Lippmann has recently termed this general theory "deficit diplomacy." You just heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] quote General Marshall's testimony to the effect that it would take $30,000,000,000 per year to arm this Nation adequately if we decided merely to protect ourselves here at home. Yet here you are with a bill for $1,250,000,000 with which it is claimed will arm adequately all the free nations in all sections of the world. How can you do it? It just does not make sense; $1,250,000,000 is chicken-feed when compared to the job undertaken. Meanwhile, the President's message of today shows that we must continue to arm the United States. We must realize that sooner or later the strain on our American manpower and resources is going to be fatal to our security here as well as to the hopes and aspirations of free peoples everywhere.

Basic facts too frequently overlooked are these: We are a nation of 150,000,000 people in a world containing more than 2,250,000,000 men and women. We are the greatest, richest, and most productive nation in the world, but we occupy only a small fraction of the world's surface.

So I plead with the President and the policy-makers in the State Department to begin to relate our foreign policy to our domestic resources and our military power. Let us not rush into new ventures—no matter how high-sounding they may be—unless we feel reasonably certain that we can carry them through while preserving our security and freedom. Let us not say we are going to do certain things unless we know for a fact that our manpower and resources are sufficient to carry them through to full completion.

We must also have a policy allowing us to pick the spots and the conditions under which we will go to war, if we ever do have to go to war, instead of one requiring us to tackle a situation at the beck and call of the enemy.

Our whole program needs reappraisal in the light of our regaining the power to make our own decisions and in the light of not reducing our resources to the point where we will not be able to do the job. This is not said in any spirit of criticism. But we must study the past in order to avoid the same mistakes in the future. "The past is prologue."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Chairman, I wish I could be as confident as the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. ROGERS] as to the United States winning this war, but with the knowledge I have as a member of the Armed Services Committee, and the way things are being run, I cannot be so sure. As is well known to this House we have spent well over $60,000,000,000 since the last World War for national defense and now, at a time of emergency, we find ourselves inadequately equipped both in manpower and modern equipment to fight a war.

In support of my thought I commend to the reading of the Members of this House the article in this week's Saturday Evening Post by Hanson Baldwin, well-known military authority, who in so many words says "we are not so hot" militarily, and proves his points very convincingly.

I shall support this legislation and shall do all within my power to support this war effort. We have been put over the barrel and the only thing left for us to do is to roll up our sleeves and go to work. That it will be a long haul I have no doubt. The President's demands for money and war powers today were so great as to constitute an acknowledgment of that fact.

Let us not be fooled any longer with talk about police action in behalf of the United Nations. We are in a real war, and we are getting hurt. The little war in South Korea is only the first action in what undoubtedly will be a series of little wars—in Germany, in Yugoslavia, in Greece, in oil-rich Iran and Iraq, in Indochina and in the East Indies. At present the Kremlin dictator is operating through his satellite stooges, but sooner or later he will resort to active warfare on his own account. The series of little wars cannot fail to burst into the flame of world-wide war.

Now the administration and its supporters blandly are accepting mutual congratulations on their prompt and decisive action in ordering American troops to the assistance of the ill-trained and almost unarmed peasants of the South Korean Republic. They hope thus to fool the American people into ignoring, or forgetting some things that should not be ignored, and should not be forgotten.

Those things comprise the revelations of lack of preparedness, lack of information, lack of coherent policy, wrong planning, both military and economic, and utter lack of statesmanship—things that have shocked the entire world; things that have caused this Nation to lose face in every part of the globe. After all our boasting—after all the statements by such men as Defense Secretary Louis A. Johnson, telling of our power and our preparedness—we stand revealed as unbelievably weak. Even our tanks are inferior to those made in Russia and shipped to the North Korean Communists.

We were told that the 500-man American military mission to South Korea was doing a wonderful job. We were told that the South Korean Army was trained and armed to an extent which would enable it to withstand any possible assault from the Communists of North Korea. But the first 24 hours of fighting revealed that the South Koreans were ill-trained and almost totally unequipped. It was disclosed by the South Korean Ambassador to the United States that American military aid consisted solely of 150,000 rifles, of which at least a third were obsolete, and a few miles of copper wire.

The Fair Deal politicians had told the American people that in the event of war with Russia American power would begin to make itself felt within the hour. Well, the Korean War started almost a month ago, and we still are trying to build up enough strength to withstand the assault of the North Koreans. The South Korean Army has melted away into virtual nothingness. Even the free members of the United Nations are hesitating about sending ground troops to South Korea.

Now these falsehoods and all this foolish boasting would not have been so bad if the Congress of the United States had failed to provide the money for adequate American military power. The lies and the boasting would not have been so senseless if they had been merely an attempt to cover up the failure of the Congress. But in the past 5 years Congress has appropriated billions of dollars for national defense, including economic aid. Then where today is that national defense? Of what avail has been the spending of billions for economic aid? South Korea got $400,000,000 of the latter, yet the North Korean Communists take over almost at will. Is the situation in South Korea, with respect to economic aid, a foreshadowing of similar situations in other nations who now are receiving such economic aid?

These things are bad enough. The situation in South Korea is serious. Yet we may be sure that it will not be permitted for long to stay so. In spite of all the bungling, in spite of all the wrong guesses by the Fair Deal administration and its political appointees, the American genius for production, the patriotism and willingness to sacrifice of the American people will enable us presently to throw the Communist aggressors out of South Korea. Americans will do this in the end unless the millions of Chinese Communists now standing on the North Korean border are ordered by the Kremlin to join the fray. In that event world war III will be on in earnest, and of that nobody now can foresee the end.

But success in Korea, when it comes, and at whatever cost, will be no guaranty of peace. The circulation throughout the world of a peace petition, prepared in Stockholm by a Communist-front organization, manifestly acting under orders from the Kremlin, would indicate that Stalin and his Politburo plan no let-up. That petition would declare the nation first using the atom bomb a war-criminal nation. Communists say that millions already have signed the petition in all parts of the world. The Kremlin would not have gone to all this trouble, if it were not ready to take the ultimate risk of the world-wide war.

And while the Kremlin carries on this world-wide propaganda campaign, to discourage use by the United States of its most potent weapon, the Kremlin is busier than ever inside the United States itself. The Communist Party of the United States has gone entirely underground. It has done so without benefit of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, which would force all Communist Party members to register, and all Communist-front organizations to reveal the pertinent facts concerning their operations. The American Communist Party thus has acknowledged itself to be a treasonable conspiracy, and not a political party at all.

These Communist conspirators inside the United States; this conspiracy, led by Kremlin agents, and carried forward largely by native American traitors, comprise a danger to our national security fully as great, if not greater, than Russian expansionism in other parts of the world. While we close and barricade the front door to communism elsewhere in the world, we leave our back door wide open to the Communist fifth column.

For Soviet Russia does maintain in this country an arrogant fifth column, designed to take over whenever the Kremlin is ready. These fifth columnists insult our people; they attack our institutions, and they act as spies. The disclosures by Senator JOSEPH R. MCCARTHY have made all this very clear, indeed. As the Wisconsin Senator told the American people, and proved his case to the hilt, these fifth columnists are in high Government offices. This in spite of the whitewashing given them by a Senatorial investigating committee. They are in newspaper offices, on the radio, in the schools, and even in the pulpit. Communist-dominated labor unions still remain in many of the largest plants devoted to the making of munitions of war.

Now why is this internal enemy so dangerous? You may remember that Abraham Lincoln once said that America need never fear defeat by a foreign enemy; that if America ever should be destroyed, it would be from within. That is exactly the point. The Communist fifth column, which is our chief enemy at home, cannot be defeated openly in the field. It lurks behind the lines; it assists the alien foe with strategems of trickery and treason. It is an internal enemy that seeks to contrive defeat by sabotaging the means of victory.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation has said that it knows of more than 50,000 actual Communist Party members in the United States. The FBI has said further, that for every party member, there are at least 10 fellow travelers. A fellow traveler is one who consorts with Communists, who follows the Communist Party line, and who does all the things a Communist does, except to confess his adherence to communism. That would make approximately half a million people in the United States who are traitors, and who would resort to sabotage and espionage in the event of all-out war. And of this number, so the FBI has said, somewhere between 15,000 and 25,000 are actually engaged in war production; most of them in positions where they could help to wreck the plants upon which American boys must depend for their lives on the battlefields of the Far East.

Now the Mundt-Ferguson bill, to which I referred a little earlier, would force all Communists to identify themselves, and would smoke out the fellow travelers in the Communist front organizations. In peacetime such a law might be good enough. It would greatly simplify the work of the FBI and other police agencies in keeping track of the activities of the Communists and fellow travelers. But in wartime—at a time such as we have entered upon now—it would not be enough. And so what is the answer?

Let us stop kidding ourselves. There is only one thing left to do, if we are to make it possible for American boys to win on the battlefields abroad. The FBI knows who the Communists are, who the Russian spies are. The FBI knows the identity of nearly all of the fellow travelers. They should be outlawed, every last one of them. We should round them up; put them behind a high fence in concentration camps. As one editorialist remarked: "Give them nothing to read but Karl Marx and no picture to look at but Joe Stalin's." Keep them in detention camps until the war against communism is ended. In no other way can America defend itself; in no other way can we, as the leaders of all freemen, keep ourselves safe and strong enough in the end to defeat the world-wide conspiracy of the murderous beasts of the Kremlin.

And who, you may ask, is to blame for the situation wherein we must resort to concentration camps and other things so repugnant to all Americans? The blame, if your son is killed, should rest upon the Fair Deal politicians who compromised, appeased, played with, and made deals with the Communists, in order to get a few more votes on election day. These are the men who must shoulder the blame. These are the men who must be put out of office if the American Republic is to survive as a government of freemen.

But first of all, we must make ourselves secure at home, so that our fighting men abroad can have the things they need to win a war and do it without any more sacrifice than is unavoidable. Let us act now. Put the traitors behind a high fence. It will be cheaper in money and in blood than it would be to leave them at large to carry on their secret campaign of lies, and sabotage, and treason.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. JUDD].

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a little footnote to this discussion on a measure that I believe can be of the greatest value to us in winning the struggle in Asia that we have got to win.

When history is written I suspect that one of the major causes of World War II and of world war III—if, God forbid, it comes—will be recognized as beginning in 1924 when the Congress of the United States passed the so-called Oriental Exclusion Act. At that time America's stock was at about the highest point it had ever reached in Asia. True, we had opened Japan at the point of a sword, but we had then established good relations, and these Japanese forces most favorable to the United States were in the saddle. In China more and more men were coming to power who, like Sun Yat-sen himself, had been trained in the United States and were more favorably disposed toward ourselves and the west than any government China had ever had in her 4,000-year history.

The parts of Asia under European colonial powers were increasingly turning their eyes and hopes from Europe and other parts of the world to America for the new inspiring leadership of the future.

And then our country did something that was both wrong and a mistake. To correct the labor troubles, particularly on the Pacific coast, arising from the lower wage standards of oriental immigrants, we declared all Asians ineligible for American citizenship. There was a real problem—nobody denies the difficulty presented by the oriental who could and would work for a fraction of the white man's wage—but Congress adopted the wrong solution for the problem. If we had given as the reasons for excluding Asians the economic reasons which in most cases were the real reasons, there would have been hardly a murmur of protest. They know we are a sovereign nation and have a right to regulate our own immigration. But we do not have a right to insult people because of their race or color, at least not if we want them to be our friends and allies. Unfortunately the reason we gave for exclusion was the color of their skins. We branded every person anywhere in the world who is of the yellow or brown races as being biologically inferior to ourselves. No matter what his or her education or brilliance or culture or charm or refinement or other accomplishment, he or she was publicly stigmatized and permanently barred from ever being admitted for naturalization as a citizen of the United States, which at the same time proclaimed that God created all men equal.

That day we turned Japan over to the militarists. They taunted the liberals who were our friends: "Oh, yes. You want us to cooperate with America? Look at the way she treats us. She brands us as less than human. The only language the white man understands is force, not justice or fair treatment. Forget about democracy. Arm." And the militarists came into power and led Japan into war against us as the only way they saw to repay the wholly needless and gratuitous insult.

The most powerful weapon the Communists have used against us in making such headway among Asiatics as they have made by nonmilitary means has been this which is today the single greatest weakness in our armor: racial discrimination.

Mr. Chairman, regardless of the difficulties that we have in solving this problem on the home front, I believe there is no excuse for continuing in our immigration laws a provision which is worth divisions of troops to the enemy. If we cannot succeed yet in providing positive justice to all those of non-Caucasion races here in America, we can at least remove at one stroke this negative injustice to hundreds of millions in Asia whose attitudes in the future can be of life and death importance to ourselves, especially to Americans fighting in Asia. Let the United States Senate act upon H. R. 199, the bill passed by this House a year and a half ago to grant a minimum immigration quota to twelve or so countries in Asia still excluded, including Korea and Japan, so that no person is barred solely because of his race. Let the determining factor be the same for all peoples, namely, within the quota limitations, the qualifications the person has or has not as an individual. It would admit, if every single quota member were taken up by an oriental, only about 1,200 a year, that is, it would cost us nothing; it could save us tens of thousands of lives before we get through.

Someone has just said we must forget about everything except winning the war. Mr. Chairman, that is not enough, that is what we have done twice already this century. We must win the war for our ideals if it is to stay won. We are in trouble today because we did not win our objectives in the last war; we just defeated the enemy, that is not the same as victory.

Because the problem is still the same as then, may I quote from a speech I made in this chamber on March 15, 1945, when I feared we were in danger of losing that war before the fighting was ended:

> We have only one objective in Asia, and that is to defeat Japan, but some other nations have two objectives. The second one is to defeat Japan, the first is to restore their empires or to block out new spheres of influence.
> We want only to make Japan lose so we can come home; but there are others who want to win the war so they can stay on in control of the resources, manpower, bases, industry, and markets of Asia.
> I tell you, the American people have to get down to bedrock and also see that it is not enough to beat Japan, if we would have peace. We have to win the war so it will stay won, and for freedom, or we will have to do it over again under infinitely more difficult circumstances.

And again, at the end of the speech:

> The only thing that saved us this time, Mr. Chairman, was a great moral decision on the part of Chiang Kai-shek and of the Chinese people to fight, not on the basis of blood and color but on the basis of principle; a decision to fight against those of their own race and with us of an alien race because they believed it was a war for human freedom. But if after they have held the line so valiantly, they are let down and our commitments are not fulfilled, then there is no place they can go next time except to the Communists and a world class war, or to Japan and a world race war. * * * We can win all the battles, but we will still lose that war because they can outwork and undereat the white man, they will outsuffer him, they will outwait him, and they will outbreed him.
> This is the issue that we have got to understand if our children would be free and at peace. The decision that is being hammered out in Asia these critical days is not one for 4 years, but one for 40 years or even 400 years. Are the Chinese, the most numerous and incomparably the strongest of the colored people, to stay on the side of the democracies, or are they to be driven in despair to the other side? The answer to that is still in our own hands.

Well, we failed to understand it; and so within 5 years we are again not at peace. We are compelled to try again. Will we understand it this time?

Surely before this Congress can adjourn, it must get this stigma removed, or else we are not doing the things necessary to win the war. Men and money and mobilization here at home are not enough without this great moral act of justice and decency.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LODGE] is recognized.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, I strongly favor the legislation before us. It is vital that we extend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949.

I favored this measure when it was inaugurated a year ago. I favored the full amount. You will recall that the House approved the so-called Richards amendment which eliminated the language of the amendment which I had introduced in committee and which the committee had passed. I thought that this body made a mistake in cutting that amount in half. I was pleased that it was restored by the other body and that the full amount was eventually authorized.

But it is most disturbing to learn that although the Congress finally provided legislation for $814,010,000 in appropriations and $500,000,000 in contract authorizations the daily statement of the United States Treasury for June 30, 1950, gives as "expenditure," $44,342,025.51. I understand that the total quantity delivered is in the amount of $70,000,000 in cost to the program. This is a small proportion of the amount authorized. More distressing still is the fact that since the inception of this program not one additional soldier has been added to the armed forces of the countries concerned. Now I am not interested in assigning the blame for this condition. I am interested solely in curing this grave situation. We in Congress can only provide the necessary legislation. If that legislation is not implemented obviously it will not serve its purpose. It goes without saying that it must be implemented not only by the appropriate authorities in the United States but also by the member nations of the Atlantic Treaty.

I regret that no military aid to Spain is provided. Certainly this is hard to explain, especially since we are helping the Communist government in Yugoslavia.

As an example of the inadequacy of this program it is interesting to note that the equipment and military aid which we are providing to Italy is not nearly enough to allow her to arm up to the limits set by the Italian peace treaty. I believe that this limit should be reached within the shortest possible time. I believe also that because of the engineering, mechanical, and electrical skills of the Italian workers, Italian industry, particularly in the north of Italy, can be used as a vast repair shop for military equipment and weapons, thereby increasing employment in Italy and also adding to Europe's military potential within the terms of the Italian peace treaty.

It is important also that the standardization of weapons within the limitations required by competitive research should proceed at great speed in order that we should not be faced with the same difficulties which confronted us during the recent war.

I believe that the nations of Europe should be encouraged to participate to the extent of their ability in this mutual venture. History shows that people are more willing to make great sacrifices than small ones. This is essentially a collective, a mutual proposition. The nations of Europe have a right to shoulder their share of these weighty responsibilities. There is no time to lose in expediting the defense of western Europe.

It should be noted that the assault on Korea is probably directed at the nations of western Europe. If the Russians were to be successful in Korea, which God forbid, this would in all probability have a number of calamitous effects. In the first place, we should suffer a serious loss of face in the Orient. This I believe to be significant in spite of the fact that the Secretary of State has ridiculed the importance of loss of face. It would also seriously threaten, if indeed it would not encompass the destruction of, the anti-Communist forces in Formosa, Indochina, Hong Kong, and Malaya. It would render our position in Japan and the Philippines almost untenable. But over and beyond this, it would seriously threaten the people of western Europe by involving us in a two-front war, something we have always sought to avoid, something which our self-styled enemies now seem determined to accomplish.

The meetings of the foreign ministers of the Atlantic Pact countries in London some 2 months ago have been shown by subsequent events to have been fully justified. Unfortunately, to date little or nothing has been done to bring the plans agreed upon at that time into action. The events in Korea make additional aid to the nations of Europe essential. It is my view, based on the recommendations of competent authorities, that this program should be stepped up so as to provide at the earliest possible date 35 full-strength divisions for the integrated defense of western Europe. I do not know how large a sum is needed, but I am glad that the President has referred to the necessity for further aid. I express the fervent hope that the National Defense Establishment and the Department of State will shortly provide the Congress with the necessary information on which to increase military assistance, particularly to the Atlantic Treaty nations.

I am happy also that the President has finally made at least a partial call on industry. Surely to draft our young men without a call on industry was an indefensible policy. It is only right that those who are not in the Armed Forces should be asked to participate, especially since our people have always shown their willingness to make sacrifices at home in order to sustain those who are in combat.

It is quite obvious that time is not on our side. It was not on our side before the events in Korea. There was, it seemed to me, no advantage in waiting until 1952, when the Russians, it was estimated, would have a capacity to deliver the atom bomb which they probably now possess. Certainly there is no advantage now. Certainly also we cannot indefinitely feed one half of the world while we fight the other half. Certainly there is no time to be lost in integrating this whole vast effort in order that we and our friends shall act as a unit in meeting the great challenge of our generation.

It is because of this concept of unity that I strongly favor the provision for an additional $75,000,000 for military aid to the general area of China. It was because of this concept that, together with the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congressman FRANCIS WALTER, I introduced an amendment on the floor last year to provide for aid in this area and in China itself. It was fortunate that after this amount had been defeated on the floor of the House by administration-controlled votes, it was passed by the Senate and was enacted into law. But it was most unfortunate that this law was not immediately translated into effective action. It was most unfortunate that the military and economic aid authorized for Korea last year was not put into effect. I mention a few of these distressing facts not in order to recriminate over what has happened but because I believe that it is necessary to inspect the past in order to rescue the future. Yesterday our distinguished colleague, WALTER JUDD, delivered an inspired and comprehensive address on the crisis in the Far East. His documented utterance was not made in a spirit of recrimination. It constitutes a constructive review of these lamentable events and a useful guide for the future.

Surely it must be our constant effort to counteract the tragic results of the gross miscalculations of the year 1945. It must be our persistent attempt to cure these difficulties, to neutralize these failures to deal with realities. I hope that, having reversed its policy in Korea, the administration will now abandon the practice of attempting to justify its mistakes while the Communists continue their relentless advance. There is no time for such luxuries. There is, it may be hoped, some time for correction, although now these corrections will require a tragic loss of life and great expense to the people of our country. I trust that this change in policy indicates that the administration is determined to combat the Communist menace with vigor and determination.

What we need now, particularly in high places, are men and women of determination, men and women who cannot be dissuaded from the main goal, men and women who understand that agreements with the Soviet Union have been shown to be mere scraps of paper which are disowned by the godless inmates of the Kremlin whenever it suits their convenience. We need now in high places men and women who understand that there is no easy way out of this dilemma, that we cannot buy our way to a less precarious peace, that we must curtail our domestic expenditures in order to insure our own survival in a dangerous world. We need men and women of vision and courage who will not be sucked in by Communist attempts to achieve a dishonorable compromise in Korea which will simply multiply the hazards of war. We have such men and women in this country. I hope that they will be placed in positions of responsibility.

Life is good in America. We are truly a blessed land. It is perhaps natural that we should in the past 5 years have allowed the pleasant distractions preserved for us by the blood of our fighting men to turn us away from the main goal. The dark and godless clouds of oppression which brood over all our doings is now crowding down upon us with remorseless speed. There is no time left for quarter measures or half measures. There is no time for excessive caution. There is no time for us to ponder and thrash about while the Communist hordes are overrunning vast sections of the globe.

There is no division along party lines as to the necessity of backing up our fighting men; there must be no hesitation about the necessities of the present hour.

But it would be a great mistake to think that Korea is the only problem which we confront. Communism is a world-wide movement. The Russians, as Winston Churchill has said, aim to get the spoils of war without war. The war in Korea is merely the one-eighth of the iceberg which protrudes above the surface. The mass, the bulk of this barbaric threat is concealed beneath the waves. We must fight communism as it is presented to us in all its facets and on all fronts and not simply when it resorts to open warfare. We should have been doing this for years. We must, of course, fight it with such undertakings as the Marshall Plan and other forms of economic aid in order to help create in these countries a political climate propitious for the preservation of freedom. We must fight it with an adequate psychological warfare program in which we seek not merely to recite the facts about America but to tell the truth. I favor a vast and rapid expansion and reorientation of the so-called Voice of America program. I have favored this for years. I have made numerous recommendations on this aspect of our foreign affairs. I hope that now, at long last, these will be carried out.

Yet, although this is a battle for men's minds it must be remembered that the Communist ideology has nowhere been contagious enough to capsize any government without the use of force. This force in Korea is open aggression. Elsewhere it is in a twilight zone; internal force, subversion, intimidation, bribery, corruption and coercion. We and our friends must fight this force in those areas too.

We must also fight the subversive war at home. We must fight it effectively. We can do this without on the one hand smearing the innocent or on the other hand whitewashing the guilty. We can do all these things, we and our friends. We must do them. We must do them now.

"There is a tide in the affairs of men which taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." Make no mistake about it—this is it. This is the tide. It is at the flood. The rest is up to us.

Like Abraham Lincoln, let us prepare for the worst even while we work for the best.

Mr. VORYS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio

Mr. VORYS. The gentleman is making a masterful summary of the situation. In view of the statesmanlike foresight he has demonstrated time and again, his views should be weighed with care. For instance, the gentleman's farsighted amendment of last fall, the Lodge amendment to the original Mutual Defense Assistance Act, would have authorized $100,000,000 and assigned up to 500 officers and men to the forces of China and southeast Asia, following the pattern of Greek-Turkish aid. At that time there were 150,000,000 Chinese on the mainland still outside the clutches of the Communists, with substantial military forces that needed more arms, tactical leadership, and some encouragement. The amendment was defeated. If it had been adopted and implemented, the whole tragic story of this year might have been different.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. KEE].

Mr. KEE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to assure the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] and any others who had in mind the offering of amendments to this bill, that we appreciate their action very much in foregoing that privilege at this time. If and when legislation comes up in accordance with the President's message bearing upon this same subject or any like legislation initiated in the House, we will be very happy to afford the gentlemen every opportunity to be heard by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I now wish to express again to the membership of my committee, a committee I consider a great committee, regardless of their political affiliations, my thanks and my appreciation for the unanimous and splendid support they have given me during the consideration of this bill from the time it was introduced down to its final passage.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, the President's message to which we have just listened indicates clearly the price we must pay in blood and treasure for the appeasement of communism at home and abroad. We are reaping the whirlwind from the conferences at Yalta, Tehran, and Potsdam by the Roosevelt and Truman administrations. Russia was given a free hand to enslave and dominate small, defenseless nations and peoples. China was sold and betrayed when she was not present at the conference table. In 5 years the Soviets have increased their enslavement of the earth's population from 200,000,000 to 800,000,000. One act of aggression after another has taken place without protest. We consented and even abetted the ravaging of China, a peaceful people and the friend of the United States. With nearly every strategic position in her grasp in the Far East, Russia now resorts to a cruel and unprovoked attack on an unarmed people in Korea. The bungling leadership of the administration, and especially the State Department with some personnel of questioned loyalty to the United States, has caused this Nation to lose face and prestige before the world.

It was only when North Korean Communists attacked that the pro-Communist policy of our administration in China was compelled to completely reverse its position. The American people had to be sold on the idea, declared the Secretary of State, that Formosa was of no strategic importance to the United States. Within 10 days our Navy had to be dispatched to protect it.

The astounding revelations of lack of preparedness, information, coherent policy, wrong planning, military and economic, and utter lack of statesmanship on the part of this administration have shocked the American people and the world. Small wonder that some members of the United Nations hesitate sending troops to support Americans in Korea. Government by political payoff stands naked and revealed, at last, utter failure to assess world conditions with respect to Communist expansion which we all hope will not prove fatal, but thus far has revealed its stark tragedy. Thousands of young Americans must die because of our failure to support nationalist China. Billions in tax money will be the cost which our taxpayers can ill afford to pay.

During the past 5 years, Congress has appropriated, and the Truman administration has spent, nearly $70,000,000,000 for national defense. And now where is that defense?

Last April, Defense Secretary Louis A. Johnson, in public statements and some roaringly boastful speeches, told the world that even then we were getting military equipment superior to any produced anywhere else in the world. He boasted that the Kremlin dictator could not start anything anywhere without overwhelming reprisals from the United States within the hour.

Well, more than a month ago the Kremlin started something in Korea, and today American reprisals have been feeble, indeed. Even today, American strength has not arrived in Korea. A month after the event, we are still trying to build up enough supplies and manpower in South Korea even to stem the Communist advance.

Over the past year, we have been told by the Truman administration that the 500-man military mission to South Korea was doing a wonderful job. We have been told that the South Korean Army was well enough trained, and sufficiently armed, to meet any Communist threat from the north.

Now we see it revealed that the military mission did not do a job at all, because it was not provided with the means of doing so. While $400,000,000 was spent for economic aid to the South Korean Republic, almost nothing at all was spent for military aid. It seems that only about $42,000 worth of copper wire was all that was sent. About 140,000 rifles, a third of them obsolete, were left when American occupation troops withdrew.

Rifles alone, as everyone knows, are not worth much against 60-ton tanks, machine guns, and long-range artillery. And in this connection, it should be stated that American military experts now are ready to concede that our best tanks are inferior to those supplied the North Koreans by the Kremlin.

It is strange that these falsehoods should have been told to the American people. But there is an explanation for them. It now stands revealed that the State Department—the same State Department which defeated the will of Congress and refused to send aid to Chiang Kai-shek—sabotaged military aid to the South Korean republic. The State Department now is quoted as saying that to build the military strength of South Korea would be merely to encourage South Korean aggression against the North Korean Communists.

Thus we have a situation unparalleled in American history. In some countries, if an administration failed as the Truman administration has failed, the members of the administration would be forced to flee the country to avoid the anger of the populace. But not here. In this country, today, the administration and its supporters are all accepting mutual congratulation on their prompt and decisive action in going to the aid of the beleagured South Koreans. They sent the country unprepared into what looks like the beginning of world war III.

Now we are asked to approve an appropriation of $1,220,000,000 for the military aid program, whereby our allies may receive the arms and munitions they should have received long ago. I shall give this appropriation my support. I do so with fear and trembling, because I do not know what use may be made of it. I trust that it will be used to good effect, even though $70,000,000,000 already has been wasted. I shall vote for this bill, S. 3809, because I, and all other patriotic Americans, must go all out in support of our war effort if this Nation is to survive, and if free men everywhere are to remain free.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, by our support of the United Nations in Korea we have etched our declaration of intentions in words of fire and blood. They are there for all to see—including Russia. By our action today we confirm what we said in Korea over 2 weeks ago—that there is a line beyond which free nations, acting in concert, will not permit the Red aggression to go. If we had said it earlier, probably fire and blood would have been avoided. But we must now look forward, not backward.

Today, we continue the military-assistance program and by doing so pledge ourselves to a program of collective action and planning with member nations in Europe.

In doing so, we must be cautious. We cannot run the risk of brashly asserting our strength and our power. Nothing could be more foolhardy at the present time than to assume that we could do without the active participation and aid of other member nations. We must bear this fact in mind at all times in order to keep the action and the planning a united effort which will produce truly collective balanced forces. Just as we are today backing up the edict of the United Nations in Korea and have invited and welcomed all assistance from other United Nations members, so we should not impetuously assume the burden of defending all Europe without substantial and concrete aid from all participating nations of the Atlantic Pact.

The stark reality of the present world situation must dissuade us from any such egotistical, prima donna course of action. The truth is that we cannot alone defend freedom on both the Asiatic and the European fronts without very material assistance from the countries which are most immediately and vitally concerned. As I have insisted before, we must have a fully developed, coordinated plan of defense.

The heretofore hazy outlines of the Communist master plan for world domination are beginning to assume an ominously solid form. If, after we have sent sufficient men and material to drive back the northern Korean invaders, Russia should instigate another instance of unprovoked, armed aggression upon a nation friendly toward us, our supply of men and equipment would be stretched dangerously thin, while the Russians would not have sacrificed one man.

These tactics should be sufficiently clear by now to make us realize that we cannot accomplish the enormous task of defending freedom alone, through our defense spending and our arms-aid programs, unless these arms are made part of a well-formulated, well-integrated plan for defense of Europe in which all member nations would participate to the fullest extent possible.

Our aid will be a very strong contributing factor to morale, but unless it is put to effective use in an over-all plan, we shall have drained our resources to no avail. We must be sure that we are strengthening our own defenses by assisting in the defense of Europe. In fact, we shall have weakened our own economic position and thus our very ability to wage a defensive war, unless a mutual defense plan is formulated. Therefore, common sense dictates that we make certain that other member nations are not led to believe that we can do it all, since that would in turn lead to the bitterest type of disillusionment and resentment when we could not live up to their expectations in the event of war.

What must be maintained in Europe through joint action with sister nations is a sufficient number of troops, ready to join in the common defense, to deter any aggressor from thinking victory would be swift and easy. Such a force would have to be sufficiently strong to fight the delaying action which would be necessary until we and other free nations could gear their economies and resources to a total war basis. Because of the almost fantastic costs involved, the member nations, including the United States, could not assume the financial burden of maintaining an army large enough to fight an all-out war, and this is not proposed under the military assistance program.

What we can do by way of additional positive action is to integrate our share of MAP and our efforts in Korea into a world-wide campaign of combating communism through all the means at our command. We must fight Communist propaganda on all fronts by the truth about our intentions and actions. We cannot afford to let any Russian so-called peace offensive win potential allies from our cause. We must combine our military assistance for Europe with backing for farsighted political movements there and actively foster sympathetic causes. By doing these things, we shall do away with the risk of being called war-minded or imperialistic or of appearing to be interested only in the military welfare of Europe.

We must forge through all possible means our common beliefs in the well-being and freedom of the individual into lasting bonds of friendship and trust which no Communist propaganda shall pierce and no Red arms tear apart.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. Chairman, I think it unfortunate that Spain was not included in this bill.

If my amendment were accepted, it would give to Spain $75,000,000 in military assistance. It is obvious that we are facing a critical future—this bill is one indication of it. The purpose of this bill is to make it possible for countries that are threatened by the Communists to defend themselves until such time as assistance may come.

I believe that the armies of Spain could make a substantial contribution to the defense of western Europe, and thus I believe they should share in the arms and equipment that we are distributing abroad.

I can understand the reluctance of some Members to assist Spain. They have two chief objections as far as I can tell: First, by giving Spain military assistance we are strengthening Franco; second, if we help Spain, we will lose the support of some western Europeans.

I think that the answer to the first question is obvious—Franco has been in power for 12 years and he is as strong as ever. As to the second, the situation is so critical—western Europe is so weak in relation to the present strength of the Soviets—that we can no longer afford the luxury of omitting Spain from our defense plans for western Europe, and any European who faces the facts must recognize this.

There should be only one qualification before a country becomes eligible for military assistance, and that is: Are they guilty of aggression against other countries? Spain is not.

If we are willing to help Yugoslavia in her struggle for independence from Russia because it is to our benefit, so we should be willing to help Spain.

Mr. DONOHUE. Mr. Chairman, the bill we are discussing this afternoon merely proposes a continuation and extension of the Military Defense Assistance Act we approved in 1949. It is a solid investment in American security based on the conviction that adding strength to the defense forces of our allies increases our own safety. By our action, we are bringing our pledged program of assistance up to date.

The issue presented by this bill is not whether we should follow a policy of mutual defense assistance; that has already been decided. The real issue today is whether we stand still, or go forward in implementing our policy by voting this 1951 program.

No one would be foolish enough to say the adoption of this program is a guaranty that Communist aggression will stop. Quite obviously there are calculated risks in this venture. However, if we do not carry out our program, the risks are incalculably more costly and dangerous.

The Korean aggression, where Americans are bearing the brunt of a United Nations police effort, because the Koreans have neither the weapons nor the experience to sustain the attack, is an example of the price we may pay in blood, tears, and treasure, if we do not help the free to defend themselves. Cooperation with the free is costly, risky, and often exasperating. Fighting alone, by ourselves, is costlier still. We can carry our part of the burden of mutual defense assistance. We may not be able to successfully carry the whole burden of defending the free world alone.

The price of freedom and peace is always high in the face of aggression but they are worth any price. Thank God the American people still prefer death to tyrannical slavery. The history of Manchuria, Ethiopia, Austria, Poland, Lithuania, and the other small liberty-loving nations wearing Soviet shackles, and now Korea, should convince anyone that soft calls for appeasement lead only to military defeat and the destruction of human freedom. Let us demonstrate we have learned our lesson. Only one guaranty is left to us and the remaining free peoples of the world. We are thrown back on the words of the builders of this Nation—the price of liberty is eternal vigilance and preparedness.

This bill should be and, I know, will be wholeheartedly approved by this body, because it is not only consistent with the best security interests of the United States, but it also provides for the discharge of obligations into which we deliberately and openly entered. This bill is a realistic step forward in the determined struggle of this country to obtain peace, security, and freedom for ourselves and for the world.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, this legislation is essential to our Nation's defense. If war comes we will be infinitely stronger than we could possibly be without the facilities covered by this program.

But the hopes of peace are greater by reason of it. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCSWEENEY] spoke to the House recently of the activities of a Communist controlled peace conference in Stockholm, Sweden. The conference produced the so-called peace petitions which have been signed by many Americans, unaware of their origin or purpose.

A distinguished American journalist, Mr. Marquis Childs tells in his column today of one editor's reaction to the petitions:

> It happens that the executive editor of the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel is Wallace Carroll. Carroll directed the London branch of the Office of War Information during World War II. He has an understanding of propaganda warfare as it is waged between truth and falsehood.
> His reaction to the appearance of the Stockholm peace petitions in his home town was not to say, "Tut, tut, this is bad, wicked, evil." It was to take the offensive for an honest peace.
> The Journal is now circulating an "appeal for a true peace." In the first day or two several hundred signers responded. The appeal as circulated by the Journal is as follows:
> "The war in Korea is a danger to the peace of all peoples.
> "We believe that the Korean war can be stopped and that peace can be saved if the North Korean forces will obey the United Nations and go back to their starting point.
> "We believe that the governments and peoples of the world can persuade them to do this.
>
> "We believe the governments and individuals who proclaim their devotion to peace can prove that devotion by using their influence to stop the Korean war in this way.
> "We invite all friends of peace to sign this statement."
> That petition, or something very like it, should be circulated not in Winston-Salem alone, not in North Carolina alone. It should be circulated in every country where the iron curtain doesn't keep it out.
> We have nothing like an organized party, such as the Communists have, to do that for us. But, I feel confident, the friends of freedom and true peace in almost every country would take it up if the initiative came from the United States.

Mr. Chairman, we must find effective means for letting the world know that our goal is world peace. The initiative must come from our Nation and we must put our skill and energies into a sound peace campaign. While we arm for defense we must take notice of the Communists' misrepresentations and must meet the challenge by expanding our information program.

No people in all the world desire peace more than we and none can surpass us in creating conditions that make it secure if we put our hands to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MILLS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3809) to amend the Mutual Defense Assistance Act of 1949, pursuant to House Resolution 696, he reported the bill back to the House.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. KEE. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and the nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 362, nays 1, answered "present" 1, not voting 66, as follows:

FORT RUCKMAN MILITARY RESERVATION

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 7477) providing for the conveyance to the town of Nahant, Mass., of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation, and ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the statement.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. NO. 2567)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7477) providing for the conveyance to the town of Nahant, Massachusetts, of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following: "That, upon payment to the United States of the sum of $23,000, the Administrator of General Services is authorized and directed to convey by quitclaim deed to the town of Nahant, Massachusetts, all of the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands constituting the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation, situated within the town of Nahant, together with the buildings and other improvements thereon: Provided, however, That the instrument of conveyance shall contain such terms and conditions which will allow the recapture of the property in the event said property is not used for educational, recreational, or other public purposes: Provided further, That the instrument of conveyance shall reserve to the United States, for so long as it is necessary for governmental purposes, that certain fifteen-foot easement for the maintenance, repair, and replacement of a cable and its appurtenances, and at such time as it shall be no longer required for governmental use, said easement may be abandoned and upon such abandonment will automatically terminate, and that certain temporary easement, terminating June 30, 1954, covering one and eight-tenths acres of land used in connection with the Turf Drainage Investigation Program, with right of access thereto, both easements being more particularly described in WAA Form 1005 dated June 22, 1948, Reporting Agency No. WD–1299, as amended by WAA Form 1005 dated December 15, 1948, Reporting Agency No. WD–1299–B, which are filed in the office of the General Services Administration."

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7477) providing for the conveyance to the town of Nahant, Mass., of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report as to each of such amendments, namely:

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute amendment. The conferees have agreed on a substitute for both the House bill and the Senate amendment. Except for clarifying, clerical and necessary conforming changes, the following statement explains the differences between the House bill and the substitute agreed to in conference.

The House bill provided that the town of Nahant, Mass., would receive all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to all lands constituting the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation by quitclaim deed conveyance from the General Services Administrator. This conveyance was to be without monetary consideration. The Senate amendment sets out that this transfer will be effected by the Administrator of General Services upon the payment to the United States of the sum of $23,000 as monetary consideration. The conferees adopted in this regard the Senate language, which will assure that in these transfers of surplus property the Government does receive a sum of money from the recipient town. This amount bears a necessary relationship to the valuation of the property and the ability on the part of the community to underwrite this cost factor in a transfer beneficial to the community and the Nation.

The House text provided for the recapture of the Fort Ruckman Military Reservation and appurtenances in the event of a national emergency. The Senate amendment struck out this recapture clause. The House conferees accept the Senate version and recede on this provision because adequate means remain and are available to the Government should occasion arise during a national emergency for reemployment of this property in the interest of national defense or security.

H. R. 7477 carried the proviso that the instrument of conveyance shall contain such terms and conditions which will allow the recapture of the property in the event said property is not used for educational or other public purposes. The Senate substitute carried no such provision. The conferees agreed upon the House text, with the insertion of the word "recreational", so that the agreed version now accepted by the conferees reads: "Provided, however, That the instrument of conveyance shall contain such terms and conditions which will allow the recapture of the property in the event said property is not used for recreational, educational, or other public purposes."

The conferees of both Houses agreed that the addition of the word "recreational" would broaden the usage to which this property might be put. The effect of this clause will be to assure the Federal Government that the utilization of this property will be in the interest of the community of Nahant and will preclude the employment of this reservation land for general commercial, industrial, or residential purposes.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I was necessarily delayed downtown earlier this afternoon and just missed roll call No. 210, on the passage of the extension of the Mutual Defense Assistance Act. Had I been present I would have voted "yea." I want the RECORD to show that.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], and yield the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] such time as he may consume.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the Government employees everywhere have lost a real friend in the passing of James G. Yaden, the national president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

I had known Mr. Yaden for the many years that he was with the Civil Service Commission and during his tenure of office as president of the American Federation of Government Employees.

My late friend was a great American, a man of deep moral convictions and faith, an understanding leader of his splendid organization, and a real friend of and worker for all Government employees. I am deeply grieved in his death.

To Mrs. Yaden and his son and daughter I extend my profound sympathy in their great loss and sorrow.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, the bill whose consideration this rule proposes to make in order is a bill that has been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is the first general revision that has been had of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. I think it would not be out of place at this time, in the light of the fact that this is the first major revision of that act, which has been in force for some 17 years, to submit some brief comment upon the administration of that act.

As you know, when Congress passed the Glass-Steagall bill early in the Roosevelt Administration, the FDIC was a portion of that act. At that time the whole Nation was in a state of confusion relative to fiscal institutions. All the banks had recently been closed, owing to the economic crisis that was on the country at that time. After the enactment of that law, I think there has never been a time when the banking institutions of this country have been sounder or in better shape, and that condition has continued to better itself from year to year as this institution has continued to function.

I think it should be said in the light of the fact that this is a major revision of the act that the organization that has carried out the provisions of this act has done a splendid job for the country and ought to be complimented for its fine administration. There have been practically no bank failures in this country since this law has been in effect. Whatever failures there have been have been of a very minor and scattered character.

The law as it was first enacted and at the present time provides for the insurance of bank deposits up to a maximum of $5,000. Of course, that does not insure all accounts. The reason for that small amount of insurance I think grows out of this, that runs on banks which cause failures of banks are known to be very much a psychological condition. One person gets a notion that something is wrong with a bank and he tells somebody else, and the first thing you know you have a run on the bank. That condition is more likely to come about with the small depositors than with the larger depositors. So this $5,000 insurance is furnished as an insurance against the panic which causes sound institutions to go down in times of trouble.

One of the major features of this revision is to increase that insurance from $5,000 to $10,000. Personally, I do not think it is necessary. I have no quarrel with it, and I understand many of the banks want it, but personally I think that if you insure the small depositors, who are the vast majority of all depositors, you have taken away the psychological situation that causes runs and failures of banks. However, the committee in its wisdom has seen fit to increase this insurance from $5,000 to $10,000.

Another feature of the bill is a refund of a portion of the annual premium paid by the banks. As it is, under the present law each bank pays one-twelfth of 1 percent of its deposits as an insurance premium. Through that process a large surplus has been built up by the Corporation over these 17 years. In fact, it is something like $1,200,000,000 which the committee thinks is ample for the present situation. There has been a good deal of agitation for drastically reducing those premiums. The committee did not think well of that, but they have reached this formula which I, having had some 20 years' experience in a financial institution, think is a very sound proposition. That is to say, that of this premium which is paid each year the FDIC will pay all of the expenses and losses that may accrue. After that has been done they will take the surplus premiums which are left over, and of that surplus premium will return 60 percent to the institutions that have paid the premiums and the other 40 percent will be used to build up that surplus of $1,200,000,000. The committee, and I agree, feel that 40 percent annual increase added to the present large surplus is going to be ample to take care of any situation in view of the fact that all losses are first to be paid. If any year comes along when the losses are greater than the income, then no refund is to be made to the insured until that loss has been made up in future years. It is calculated through that method we will provide for an increase in the reserve of approximately $70,000,000 a year.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. Has any change been made in the proposed legislation changing the amount of the assessment against the banks which is now one-twelfth of 1 percent of their deposits? Or is it to be handled on a yearly basis?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. That remains as it is, the one-twelfth of 1 percent remains.

There are numerous little minor changes in the law which, growing out of experience, are largely administrative changes, I have mentioned to you, however, I believe, the only major changes which the law contemplates.

Mr. TACKETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I yield.

Mr. TACKETT. I believe I understood the gentleman to say it is contemplated by the committee that the 40 percent would build up a reserve of something like $70,000,000 a year?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think that figure is in the report.

Mr. TACKETT. To what extent does the committee anticipate this reserve building up? In other words, now it is $1,200,000,000 and $70,000,000 a year are to be added to it by only taking 40 percent of the assessments. How far are they going to raise this reserve?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I think they have done nothing on that in the bill. I think that is a question which is left open for future experience, and as experience guides that is what they will do in the future. They may recommend some further legislation to either raise or lower the premiums.

Mr. TACKETT. I called up Secretary Snyder and asked if he anticipated recommending to the Committee on Banking and Currency that the assessments be reduced. On the 20th day of January, 9 days later, he called me stating that he was going to ask for a drastic reduction in the assessments. I notice in this bill there is no reduction of assessments, but it is contemplated that the amounts which are lost by virtue of the insurance be paid, and that only 40 percent of the money be retained, which would make, I believe the gentleman said, something like $70,000,000 a year be added to the reserve. Has there not been some consideration by the committee toward a reduction of the assessments from one-twelfth of the deposits?

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. I am not a member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. I am a member of the Rules Committee and as such am presenting to the House the pending resolution providing for the consideration of the bill. So I do not know what discussion took place in that committee.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY].

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ought to apologize, and would, were it not for the exigency which compels me to take advantage of the opportunity to say that tomorrow you will find in your mail an envelope bearing my signature, addressed to you, which you should not throw into the wastepaper basket. It contains five pieces of literature relative to that greatest of States, to which I hope some of you may have the inclination to migrate.

My friend the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN] tells a story on me which I love. He tells everybody that I am the sole Representative from the State of Vermont. Then he says he got stuck in Brattleboro and he was looking for me. He met some people and he said, "Is Charlie at home?" They said, "No. He lives 125 miles from here, but I see by the paper he will be at home on Tuesday."

The address is 12 Prospect Street, and the latchstring is out.

If you cannot use this literature, please send it back to me, because the demand is greater than the supply.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. MARSALIS].

Mr. MARSALIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point a telegram from Mr. George F. Rock, chairman of the board of directors of the American Industrial Bankers Association, in which he heartily endorses this legislation.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The telegram is as follows:

DENVER, COLO., July 19, 1950.

Hon. JOHN H. MARSALIS,
Member of Congress,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.:

Understand that S. 2822, a bill to amend Federal Deposit Insurance Act, will be considered by House of Representatives today or tomorrow. In my opinion this legislation deserves speedy enactment. Increase in deposit insurance coverage provided by this bill will benefit millions of small depositors. Likewise it will be helpful to banks in cities and villages throughout the Nation as well as to individuals and businesses using bank credits. With a successful record over a period of more than 16 years, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has demonstrated its work as a stabilizing influence for the American free enterprise system of dual banking. Since 1944 not a single depositor has lost money as a result of banking disorders. I am voicing the sentiment of bankers and business communities generally when I assure you that this outstanding record testifies to the able administration of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Urge you to give this legislation your unqualified support.

GEORGE F. ROCK,
Chairman, Board of Directors, American Industrial Bankers Association.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON].

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, the question has been raised as to the soundness of the United States banking system. In looking to that you must look to see what makes up the reserves in the banking system and see whether they are assets or obligations that can be depended upon. If the United States banking system becomes too filled with Government obligations that have been put into the banks through the Federal Reserve System by a method of monetization, the time is going to come when the whole banking system depends on just how good the Government bonds are and whether they are maintained at 100 percent of their present parity price. The business, industrial, and individual service and loans of the banks become merely a minor incident in the banking business. When this occurs, as it is now occurring, the banks cannot survive without the income on Government obligations. Should this particular income be reduced, the prospect would then be Government subsidies even at the best, or nationalization of the banking system. The stockholders of banks in this country must insist the banking institutions conduct a commercial banking business and get off the soft cushion of Government interest-bearing obligations. The Government is already invading the field of loans because the banks are fast becoming coupon-clipping agencies for Government bonds to the detriment of their real field which made them strong. The banks will surely regret this "easy" way, and their failure to take local responsibility for the financing of loans and legitimate business will come back to plague them.

Now, may I ask the committee, when you speak of a reserve of $1,200,000,000 that has been built up in the FDIC, what is that reserve?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. In Government securities.

Mr. FULTON. What kind of Government securities does that reserve represent?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. It represents Government bonds at 2 percent. They realize $25,000,000 a year on those Government securities, and that is passed on to the reserve.

Mr. FULTON. There are no other securities than Government securities in the FDIC reserve?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. FULTON. So that actually this reserve is just a general obligation of the Government, although it is represented by bonds of the Government in formal form.

What is the percentage of deposits in insured institutions guaranteed at $5,000 at the present time? What percent of the total amount of bank deposits of insured institutions are they? My previous information is that these insured deposits amount to over 93 percent in number of depositors in the average insured bank in this country.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. About 95½ percent.

Mr. FULTON. So that over the whole country it is 95½ percent of the deposits, at a $5,000 guaranty, that are covered by the FDIC guaranty?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. That is right.

Mr. FULTON. Then if you increase the guaranty to $10,000 by this bill, what, in number, does that increase the percentage of deposits covered in insured institutions over the whole country?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Ninety-eight and six-tenths percent.

Mr. FULTON. So that when we pass this bill the United States will have in number of bank deposits of insured institutions not covered by this insurance program only 1.4 percent?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. In amount you have a $12,000,000,000 increase and 2.2 percent in the number carried.

Mr. FULTON. The number covered is raised to 98.6 percent.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. But in the total amount covered you have an extra $12,000,000,000.

Mr. FULTON. But there is only 1.4 percent in number not covered under the $10,000 guaranty.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. About 2 percent.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULTON. I yield.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I may say that the total amount of deposits insured are now approximately 48.4 percent. This present bill will cover 56.5 percent. The total number of accounts at the present time is 95.7 percent, and this bill will increase them to 98.6 percent.

Mr. FULTON. My colleague from Pennsylvania agrees that there is only 1.4 percent in number not covered.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As far as the total number of accounts is concerned. As far as the total amount of deposits is concerned, it is at present 48.8 percent; this bill will cover them to the tune of 56.5 percent.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask my worthy colleague on the Banking and Currency Committee what kind of Government obligations are in the assets of the banks which will cover or secure the 1.4 percent in number not taken care of under this bill?

Mr. BUCHANAN. They are covered in their entirety to the extent of $5,000.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I wonder if the gentleman would agree that the soundness of the banks from the standpoint of the depositor is the ability of the bank to pay its dollar obligation to the depositor. As a depositor you want to know whether or not you will get your dollar value back. We have this very interesting situation: These insured banks probably carry today roughly sixty to sixty-two billion dollars' worth of Government bonds which bonds can be converted into Federal Reserve notes, which are currency, so that the bank can pay its obligation to the depositors. We are now starting in on a new defense program and additional billions of Government securities will have to be issued which will be primarily sold to the banks. As long as the banks can convert those bonds dollar for dollar into Federal Reserve notes which are legal tender the bank will probably be able to pay off the dollar obligation due the depositor, but the big question always is: What is the dollar worth after the depositor gets it?

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman is very correct. I wanted to point out this problem that we are coming to in the banking system. Before I came to Congress, for 12 years I was a partner and associated with a law firm representing a very large banking group in the city of Pittsburgh, so that I am very interested as to the effect of this proposed legislation and our current banking and currency policies on our banking and fiscal situation. When the Government guarantees either directly or indirectly all the deposits in the banks, it is a needless move to be charging banks so much premium, one-twelfth of 1 percent on the deposits per year, and putting the proceeds over into another reserve account which is also simply put into Government obligations, because that is simply a bookkeeping transaction. The Government becomes liable either directly on its guaranty of deposits or indirectly on the obligations under the bonds in the reserve.

May I point out to you that if the Administration applies the Brannan Plan principle to the banking industry, which is an unfortunate possibility, the Government will then guartantee all the bank deposits in one blanket guaranty of the Government.

When the Government guarantees all the deposits in the bank by one obligation there is no need of paying 2.1 percent a year on Government bonds held by the banks as security for deposits, because the deposits are already guaranteed. Then the Government will come along under the Brannan plan theory and say to the banks: In exchange for a blanket Government guaranty of all your deposits, we want you to turn in your Government bonds and Government short-term obligations for cancellation of the formal instruments. The Government will then guarantee the banks the same return as they now receive on their Government obligations and will tell the banks they do not have to pay any further annual FDIC premiums of one-twelfth of 1 percent per year as it is much easier for the Government simply to pay the losses as they occur, after the stockholders' equity is applied to reduce them. The banks would like this suggestion.

As the deposits are all guaranteed, no depositor will be worried about the solvency of the bank or the validity of its loans, so the few losses will be largely stockholders' losses, but they won't be able to complain much because their bank will have been receiving annual payments from the Government in lieu of interest on Government bonds and short-term obligations, without which under present conditions the bank's operations would not have been profitable or netted them a return on their investment.

Through this method of cancellation, the Federal Government would reduce its principal indebtedness by sixty to sixty-two billion dollars, the amount of Government bonds, for example, turned in as unnecessary for security for bank deposits because of the general blanket guaranty by the government of all deposits. The banks would then have to get a continuing appropriation each year to make up the loss of interest, which would be the total charge to the Government, in addition to the small net annual losses on the guaranty.

And the banks would be in the same predicament the farmers would be under the Brannan plan, dependent on Government annual appropriations for their very existence. Do not underestimate the appeal of this blanket guaranty of deposits plan which I have just outlined, as the face amount of the National debt can be cut substantially by it.

I close by warning the banks that by approaching under this bill to 98.6 percent guaranty in number of deposits they are coming so close to the blanket Government guaranty by their own actions that any child can see it will not pay the Government to pay 2.1 percent annually on the face amount of Government bonds now held by the banks as assets to secure only 1.4 percent in number of accounts. The closer we approach to 100-percent guaranty of deposits by the Federal Government, the closer we fatally approach Government control of the management of those deposits. This unfortunately means nationalization of the United States banking system by indirection, and the gradual termination of an independent United States banking system.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 20 seconds.

The gentleman from Virginia has clearly explained the rule and the provisions of the bill. I do not know of anyone who is opposed to the rule. I hope it passes.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2822, with Mr. FORAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any agency of the Government that more richly deserves the confidence, the respect, and the gratitude of the American people than the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. You will remember that in 1933 we had the collapse of our banking system, that confidence was shaken in all our financial institutions, and that the banks were closed. The Government was called upon to take their capital notes or buy their preferred stock. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation furnished the money to restore their solvency so that they might resume business, and the banks were reopened. Shortly thereafter the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was created and from that day to this there has been a renewed confidence in our banks, a renewed stability in our economy, and there have been so few bank failures that they have had no appreciable effect upon the economy of the Nation.

This institution has been in existence for 16 years and its net losses amount to but $26,000,000 in all that time. During that time it has accumulated a reserve of $1,200,000,000.

The bill under consideration increases the insurance coverage from $5,000 to $10,000 of individual accounts. In my opinion, this will have a very beneficial effect especially upon many of our smaller banks. There are many corporations that deposit in the smaller banks to the extent of $5,000 in order to encourage good will and I have been told by some who have control of these organizations that if the coverage is increased to $10,000 it will increase their deposits. It would encourage the decentralization of the money of our country and would encourage its further distribution.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. Can the gentleman tell me what the average income in the United States is?

Mr. SPENCE. No; I cannot.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McSWEENEY. What happens to the fund? Does it lie idle? Is it in Government bonds? Is it usable? Can it be borrowed upon?

Mr. SPENCE. Yes, it is in Government bonds, and it yields now $25,000,000 a year, which is added to the insurance reserve. The assessments on the banks are one-twelfth of 1 percent of the deposits. Under this bill the net income from the assessments will be distributed. Forty percent will go into this fund which will increase it about $40,000,000 a year, which added to the investment income of $25,000,000 will increase the insurance fund about $65,000,000 a year.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Is that 60 percent distributed pro rata?

Mr. SPENCE. Sixty percent, after the payment of administrative expenses, losses, and reserve for losses will be distributed pro rata upon the basis of the assessments paid as a credit against future assessments.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. On the basis of the premium paid in.

Mr. SPENCE. As a dividend on the basis of the premiums paid in.

In addition to this, in the organization of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, $139,000,000 was advanced by the Federal Reserve banks and $150,000,000 by the Treasury for capital stock of the corporation. That money has all been paid back. No Government agency has any money in this corporation now. The fund is contributed to entirely by the insured banks. But in the retirement of that stock no interest was paid. It is now provided that the interest that was due upon these advances, which amounts to $80,000,000, will be paid into the Treasury of the United States out of current assessment revenues. Then after that is done this organization will be absolutely free of any contributions by the Federal Government and the backlog will have been entirely made up by the assessments on the banks.

Those are the salient features of this bill. I think there is no objection to it, and I hope that the House will pass the bill.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. Is it not true that the closer you come to a guaranty by the Government of all bank deposits, the closer you come to the United States Government running all banks?

Mr. SPENCE. No; I cannot see that the Government would run the banks any more if it were a $10,000 guaranty rather than a $5,000 guaranty. Certainly, they would not attempt to exercise any further control over the banks under one condition than the other.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I think the gentleman from Pennsylvania is laboring under some misapprehension about this bill. When you raise the coverage from $5,000 to $10,000 the bank does not pay another dime. They pay the same assessment. It is only when you have failure that it would make a difference. But, the assessment would be the same whether it was 10 or 5.

Mr. FULTON. What I am afraid of, in answer to that, is that when the Government guaranties 98.6 percent in number of deposits, you are then going to have the Government calling the tune for what the banks do, and to me that is very short-sighted policy on the part of the banks to further put themselves in the power of the Government.

Mr. SPENCE. I think the gentleman's apprehensions are entirely unfounded.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. The basic mistake our friend from Pennsylvania is making is in saying that the Government is guaranteeing those deposits. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is an agency of Government, but the fund that is being used to guarantee these deposits is contributed by the banks. It is not Government insurance.

Mr. SPENCE. It is not Government insurance. The fund is entirely made up by the assessments from the banks.

Mr. FULTON. The great mistake the gentleman from New York is making is that the reserve the FDIC holds of $1,200,000,000 is likewise invested in Government obligations, so that while it is a separate corporation it is the Government by its obligations that makes up the fund at the present time.

Mr. SPENCE. A private corporation may also invest its reserves in Government obligations, so I do not think that is pertinent at all.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPENCE. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. GROSS. May I ask the gentleman from New York where the banks get their money? The gentleman says the banks are paying premiums, but where do the banks get the money?

Mr. MULTER. They use the depositors' money and charge the depositor a service charge.

Mr. GROSS. That is right.

Mr. SPENCE. There are other provisions of the bill which I have not discussed. The provisions I have mentioned are the salient features of the legislation. I think by reason of the splendid administration of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation during its 16 years of existence we can confidently expect a wise and conservative management of its affairs in the future.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I believe this to be a very desirable bill. The committee amendments to the bill should be adopted and the bill should be passed in that form.

You recall that the Federal Deposit Insurance Act was originally passed back in 1933. When it was first set up, as a compromise only $2,500 of the depositor's money was insured. The bill that was originally introduced asked for a coverage of $10,000.

At that time there were certain interests against Federal deposit insurance and the divorcement of investment affiliates from the banks. Those interests had given the President and the Secretary of the Treasury an ultimatum that if those two bills were passed then a refunding operation of about $600,000,000, as I recall, which was due in June 1933, would not be bought. So there was much opposition not only from some of the interests but from those high in Government to Federal deposit insurance.

The then chairman of the House Committee on Banking and Currency, our very esteemed late friend, Henry Steagall, literally pushed the bill through the House with an overwhelming majority, as did our esteemed friend, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG].

There was a compromise of $2,500 coverage. Later that was increased to $5,000. Now this bill seeks to increase the coverage to $10,000, to put it where it would have been had the original bill been enacted.

There are a good many reasons why this coverage should be increased to $10,000, but those of you who represent small banks should be peculiarly interested in the increase of this coverage from $5,000 to $10,000.

There are thousands of communities in the United States, very small communities, which can support only one relatively small bank. Any depositor in that community may have his funds insured in that bank up to $5,000. If he has more than $5,000, then it is usually taken to a city bank and deposited there. Thus the city bank gets the benefit of that deposit. Under the provisions of this bill that country bank will be put in a position where it will accept the deposit and the FDIC will insure the deposit up to $10,000. So, although there perhaps will not be twice as much money available in the small country banks for lending purposes, nevertheless there will be a great deal more money available in the small country banks for loaning in those communities. In so many instances we know that the life of the community revolves around the bank and the progress which that community makes is a direct result of the lending policy of the small bank, and its ability to make loans to its customers. So that, to me, is one of the most cogent reasons why that particular part of the bill should be enacted.

The House committee has also provided that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation might examine these banks without having to get the approval of the Federal Reserve Board in the case of member banks, other than national banks, and the consent of the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of the national banks. It is thought desirable to allow the insuring agency when it feels that a bank needs examination to determine whether there is danger of the bank closing to bolster up the reputation of the bank in the community in the case that there were rumors in the community that the bank was not sound. So it works as a stabilizing influence in all communities, and the examination made by the FDIC will be for the double purpose of assuring the depositors and the borrowers in the community that the bank is sound or to determine if it is unsound what might be required to make the bank sound. They are authorized to go in before the bank fails, and bolster up the bank and prevent its failure. So it adds another advantage to the FDIC assurance against bank runs and bank failures, which we have not had heretofore.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Does this right which is now extended to the FDIC to make the inspection carry with it the meaning that the FDIC will make annual or semiannual or quarterly audits or only exercise that right when it thinks it is necessary?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The latter is true—only when it thinks it is necessary because of something found in the examinations made by the Federal Reserve or the State bank examiners or the Comptroller of the Currency or because of rumors which they have heard locally coming to them from local interests in respect to the bank's condition. I think we have been given more than reasonable assurance that there will be no more duplication of examination in the future if this bill is passed, than there has been in the past for the very reason that, of course, up to the present time, in so many instances the FDIC has taken the Federal Reserve examination and the Comptroller's examination, and in many instances the State examination. So we do not expect, and as a matter of fact we have been given more than reasonable assurance, that there will be no effort on the part of FDIC to duplicate any of the effort in the examining field of the State agencies, the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Federal Reserve. But they do seek the right to go in in those cases where they think a bank is in a little trouble and where they think that their examination should determine whether the bank should be closed or whether it should continue to operate under its present policy, or whether it needs a little additional capital or perhaps a little guidance that they might give it to bolster it and renew the confidence which the people in the community have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It seems to me the committee has acted wisely, in that they have followed the fundamental principle in insurance, that the insurer should have the right to come in and inspect that which it is insuring at any time it deems advisable. If I understand the gentleman correctly, that is exactly what you have done.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is exactly it, and that is the attitude taken by the committee

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. REES. Do I understand that the FDIC uses the examinations that are conducted under the Comptroller of the Currency?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes, largely; and the Federal Reserve.

Mr. REES. That is, the examiner for the Comptroller of the Currency examines a bank and furnishes the FDIC with a report, and the FDIC uses that report; is that correct, as its own examination?

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is correct. If, however, they are not satisfied with the Comptroller's report or the report of the Federal Reserve, then heretofore they have asked permission of the Federal Reserve, in the case of a member bank, or the Comptroller's office in the case of a national bank, to go in and examine further. But they would have to get the approval of one or the other of the agencies before doing it.

Mr. REES. The amount of guaranteed deposit is comparatively small with respect to the amount guaranteed, is it not? That is, a very small percent of the amount guaranteed? Will that be increased by reason of this $10,000 increase?

Mr. WOLCOTT. As I understand it, a little more than 1 percent of the depositors and deposits will be the increase.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? It is 48.8 to 56.5 increase.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Oh, it is ninety-some.

Mr. FULTON. It is 48.8 to 56.5 in amount of deposits.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is in numbers.

Mr. FULTON. No, that is in amount.

Mr. REES. This applies only to individual funds, does it not?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It applies to all funds of all depositors. It applies to the Government funds that are on deposit.

Mr. REES. Does it apply to city funds? A municipal account?

Mr. WOLCOTT. It applies to city funds and Federal Government funds which are now secured by collateral.

Mr. REES. Then, if a city has a deposit of $10,000, or less, it will not be required to put up any other bonds to secure that deposit. Is that correct?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Well, it may have to, but so far as the city is concerned, it would be insured against loss up to $10,000.

Mr. REES. I do not want to press the matter, but what is meant by the thought that they may have to?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Because in many instances the State law provides that a bank must put up collateral to secure the deposit of a municipal depositor. This bill will not in any way interfere with the statutory provisions which now require banks to put up collateral to secure municipal deposits.

Mr. REES. In other words, even though it is under FDIC guaranty, it still must comply with the State law if there is one that requires the deposit of municipal bonds or Government bonds to pay that deposit.

Mr. WOLCOTT. That is right. The FDIC is in addition to the security which they get from having to place the collateral for the payment of money upon demand.

Mr. REES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WOLCOTT. There is over $4,000,000,000 available against losses at the present time. There is something over a billion dollars in the insurance fund; and then, under the law, when that has been exhausted and there is need for it, the FDIC can call upon the Treasury for an additional $3,000,000,000.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit one further question at that point?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield.

Mr. REES. How much money as of the present date is guaranteed in deposits?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I do not know. It is in the report somewhere.

Mr. REES. I think the report shows.

Mr. WOLCOTT. The deposits are $156,800,000,000.

Mr. REES. How much more will be guaranteed under this bill?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman can figure out the increase percentagewise and determine it.

Mr. FULTON. The $156,800,000,000 is not correct. That is the total amount of deposits in insured institutions, but not the amount guaranteed.

Mr. WOLCOTT. It is there in the report; I do not know where it is, but it is there.

Mr. FULTON. That is not the correct amount insured.

Mr. WOLCOTT. I have not the figures in my mind. If the gentleman will consult with the Clerk and the chairman, they can tell him. What I have in mind is another point I want to make here, and I do not want to cover things which are in the report which I will refer to later on if I have to. I want to bring out the fact that there is criticism of this increase to $10,000 by reason of the fact that the fund is not large enough. Nobody knows exactly what fund is large enough, but for ordinary cases it is too large at the present time. Nobody can say whether one billion is large enough or two billion is large enough; so we keep this cushion of $3,000,000,000 in Treasury funds in here to give more assurance. And then do not forget the fact that in addition to the reserve funds which must be used first, the assets of every bank, of all Government bond holdings of every insured bank, all the real-estate holdings, all of the commercial paper, and all of the stock upon which loans have been made, all the assets of the bank, may be utilized in the liquidation of the FDIC obligation; so nobody knows exactly unless they know the total amount of all the assets of all the banks and offset that against the total amount of possible loss which, taken as 100 percent, would be covered according to actuarial figures almost in its entirety with the reserve which the FDIC now has and the $3,000,000,000 which the Treasury will put in if it is necessary. This $3,000,000,000 of the taxpayers' money cannot be used until the reserves of the FDIC and the assets of the bank are exhausted. If we had such a depression here in the United States as to exhaust the assets of the banks and the reserves of the FDIC, then there would not be anything in America worth having; so we do not need to worry about the ability to pay off, or we do not have to be too actuarial about these figures.

When the time comes that we have to use Treasury money to bolster this fund up, then the country will have gone so far below the safe line economically as to make the FDIC relatively inconsequential.

This has a tremendous psychological effect against runs on banks which sometimes cause a depression. It should be continued for that reason if for no other reason. A person having less than $5,000 in a bank as of a year ago last February felt safe. At that time we had a little slump. There was no panicky feeling, no hysteria, no runs on the banks. People were not going down to the bank and saying: "Here, let me see my money. I want my money," because if they had less than $5,000 they knew it was insured and they could get it upon demand at any time. That prevented runs on the banks at that time which might have plunged us into a very deep depression in February 1949.

For that reason and the other reasons which have been given, this bill should be passed in the form in which it has been reported out of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I have received a good many letters from banks complaining of the amount they have to pay by way of annual premium to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. As I read section 7 of this bill it does give some relief to those banks. Am I correct about that?

Mr. WOLCOTT. The gentleman is correct. Under the formula set up in the bill, which has been covered by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, a net is arrived at after the collection has been made of the premium. The net is arrived at by deducting the operating costs of the FDIC, any expenses which they have been put to and the payment of the interest on $289,000,000 of capital after the first year or two because under the provisions of the bill they are required to pay interest on the capital although the capital has been retired. They are going to pay the interest on that capital. But after this gets rolling and after the operating expenses, losses, and the other expenses are deducted, then they establish a net. Forty percent of that net goes into the reserves. We will be constantly increasing the reserves from year to year. Sixty percent is returned to the banks on a pro rata basis as a dividend.

It is estimated that in practice and in effect if the Corporation is enabled to continue with as few losses as it has had, the net result of this formula will be a decrease in premium payments from the present one-twelfth of 1 percent to approximately one-twenty-fourth of 1 percent.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The answer to the question propounded of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] is found on page 4 in this language:

> By December 31, 1949, the insurance fund of the Corporation had increased to $1,203,942,687, representing 1.595 percent of the estimated insured deposits on that date of $75,500,000,000.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Yes. I call the attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON] to that language which I think answers his question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I want to pay a just tribute to the officials of FDIC. I know of no agency now or in the history of government that has done a better job than the FDIC. It started out in 1935 from scratch without a dime. It borrowed $289,000,000 from the Treasury and from the Federal Reserve banks. Throughout the 16 years of operation it has paid back the $289,000,000. The Corporation has only lost $26,000,000, and it has set up as a reserve the large sum of $1,200,000,000. That is remarkable. And, for the last 6 years not an insured bank in the United States has failed.

In a Boston paper the other day there appeared a nice compliment to this agency stating that the present President of the United States is the only man who occupied the White House for as long as 4 years without a bank failure since the year 1867.

Who is it that does not have confidence in the officials of FDIC? I do not know of more than 12 or 15 men in the United States out of the 150,000,000 who are against the FDIC now. We have made four essential changes in this law.

One is the coverage from $5,000 to $10,000.

The second gives the right to the FDIC to make examinations to determine its risk.

The third is a formula relative to reduction of premium which is just, equitable, and sound.

The fourth gives the Corporation permission to erect a building.

The increase from $5,000 to $10,000 coverage helps the little banks of the country. They can keep the money there instead of sending it far away. It gives more security to the economy of the locality. Nobody is against that. Representatives of large and small banks in this country have testified they were for it.

We do not change the law in collecting the assessment. The Corporation collects one-twelfth of 1 percent, amounting to $120,000,000 a year from the banks of this country. They invest the money in Government securities and realize $25,000,000 a year in addition. The formula is this: Bear in mind that is $120,000,000 plus $25,000,000. Out of the $120,000,000 which the Corporation collects from the banks of this country, after the operating expenses for the year are paid and all losses paid, if any, then it sets aside 60 percent of the balance as a credit for the following year's premium to be deducted from the one-twelfth of 1 percent due, and the balance is carried to the reserve. With about $50,000,000 to add to the reserve, it still has the $25,000,000 or more obtained as interest on the funds, making the total amount approximately $75,000,000 annually to add to the reserve fund.

Who pays this money? The Government does not pay a dime, and the taxpayers do not pay a dime. The banks pay it all.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand that the net effect of this change in the method of assessment, which is a little bit complicated, would probably be approximately that a banking institution would pay only about 40 percent of what it is now paying in the way of assessments?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Let me explain it this way. The FDIC collects at the present time $120,000,000 from the banks. The operating expenses for this year are around $6,000,000. It is $6,000,000 subtracted from $120,000,000. Then you have 60 percent of that which would be in reserve next year as a credit, and 40 percent goes into the fund to pay losses hereafter.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. The gentleman has been making a very splendid statement, in which he has been explaining how this fund operates. The facts are, of course, that the depositors who receive the benefit of this insurance in effect pay for the insurance through fees the banks receive or the interest that is derived on the deposits that the banks earn on the money deposited, so that in effect the depositors who are protected by this legislation are actually paying for their own insurance, and there is no reason why they should be charged a higher insurance rate than is necessary to protect the fund and to insure these funds.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. There is not a bank in the United States that opposes this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. No, every bank is for it.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Eighteen witnesses appeared before our committee, and only one or two opposed one or two sections of the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. As I understand it, practically every depositor in these banks wants this protection. The depositors, of course, are paying the costs in the end, and they are entitled to the insurance for which they pay.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Another thing I might say is that the Government makes money out of this, because when a bank makes its return for taxes it gets a credit or deduction of the one-twelfth of 1 percent it paid to the FDIC. If the bank receives the credit of 60 percent, then it has to pay the taxes on that, which amounts to a little over $25,000,000 a year. Under the present law, the Government does not receive any part of the one-twelfth of 1 percent for taxes.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That becomes an earning instead of a debit item?

This insurance is primarily for the benefit of the depositors of the Nation, not for the benefit of the banks. The depositors really benefit by this legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. There are a lot of banks in this country that would not join the Federal Reserve if they were not required to under the law. The State banks that belong to the Federal Reserve have to pay this assessment. All national banks have to pay it, but State banks who are not members of the Federal Reserve may elect to take FDIC protection.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have heard some people argue in opposition to this bill that this is primarily a bankers' bill. It is not a bankers' bill, it is a depositors' bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I have heard the statement that we are subsidizing the banks of the country. This is certainly a misstatement. Who pays the money? The banks pay it. Not a dime is paid by the taxpayers or the Government. A large part of the money comes from the larger banks of this country to help the little banks. Hon. Lee Wiggins, of South Carolina, a former Under Secretary of the Treasury, and who represents three little banks in the State that adjoins mine, is the author of this formula. He was successful in getting the large and small banks and the depositors together, and I am glad he was successful in getting something satisfactory to all concerned.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. But the gentleman will agree that the real beneficiaries are not the banks but the depositors of the Nation.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Of course it is the depositors, absolutely the depositors altogether. The money is paid by the banks.

I am one of the first men who ever advocated this kind of legislation, in 1924.

I have helped lead the fight ever since then. My people and the banks in my town and State are anxious for this bill to become law.

Mr. STEED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. STEED. I am highly in favor of this legislation and appreciate the gentleman's statement. Is it not true that the $10,000 guaranty on bank deposits now is somewhat equivalent to the $5,000 guaranty at the time that the $5,000 guaranty was originally made?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I am inclined to agree with you. With reference to the building, the building cannot cost more than $15,000,000, and it cannot be built until the President O. K.'s it. Why should they have a building? Because they are paying today more than $200,000 a year in rent. It is good business sense to have a building of their own. It means money to the taxpayers of this country if they can select a good place here or somewhere else.

With reference to this matter of making examinations. I say that these people ought to have the right, without getting written permission from the Federal Reserve or the Comptroller of the Currency. They are the people who must pay the loss and should know what their risk is. When they go into a bank now and find that the bank is weak they have a right to set up some arrangement with another bank or merge it with another bank. It is because of the diligence of these FDIC officials that we have not had an insured bank failure in the last 6 years. The Federal Reserve has a right to make examinations of the national banks, but I understand they never do. Then why should not the FDIC have the right to go and investigate if they want to? The Comptroller of the Currency is a member of the Board of the FDIC. Naturally the FDIC will accept their report without making any undue investigation. Of course, the FDIC wants to save all the money it can. Not a dime comes out of the banks when FDIC makes the examination. They pay in full for the examination themselves. So there is nothing to be alarmed about. There may be four or five little banks in the United States that are alarmed because they think FDIC might make extravagant examinations. But every dime comes out of the FDIC fund and they will not make many examinations, as was so well said by my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT].

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KUNKEL].

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this legislation with one or two exceptions, with respect to which I think the bill might well be amended.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to call attention to one serious omission in the President's message this morning. No one was more anxious than I was to get rid of price control and rationing; but not to take steps at this time to provide at least stand-by controls for rationing in my judgment is a serious mistake. One of the troubles we had during the last war, and one of the reasons for high prices and for enforcement difficulties was the fact that price control was instituted long before rationing. When you have price control without rationing, there is no restriction whatever on the demand for the article. Even the ordinary deterrent of the increased price is removed. Consequently, it promotes scarcity which, as time goes on, becomes less and less possible to cure.

In my judgment, it would be a great mistake if we did not impose rationing prior to price control, or at least coincidentally with price control, if we are to drift into a period of shortages. Price control is somewhat popular. People like to buy at a low price. Rationing is unpopular, because people like to buy all they want to buy at a low price. But you must have rationing, if price control is to be workable. It is more basic than price control in any effort to stabilize an economy of scarcity.

Another thought along the same line, running back to the time when we passed the first price control legislation during the last war: If prices are once allowed to become dislocated, and then you attempt to impose selective controls in certain commodities, you can never catch up to the dislocations. Ten new ones arise while you are trying to cure one old one. If you are going to have any price control legislation, it should freeze the price structure at a time when prices have been determined by ordinary economic causes and interactions, and not by artificial and arbitrary orders and regulations. If that is done, then you can, at least to some degree, conform to the ordinary economic pattern. You can keep the flow of goods moving in a stream at least somewhat near to normal.

My own thought is that if rationing were installed at any time it might easily be possible to avoid price control. As soon as you do have price control you immediately restrict production, which cuts the supply, while at the same time you keep up demand by means of artificially low prices. On the other hand, rationing regulates demand.

When the President sought the power to have priorities, and also to impose allocations, he virtually admitted the force of the argument which I am now making, because allocations and priorities are merely on the wholesale scale what rationing would be on the retail scale. We have already had enough experience, even in the few days since the trouble in Korea started, to show how panicky buying and undue hoarding can exhaust stocks, and how little protection there is for the ordinary buyer who wants to order and buy if and when he needs to secure the goods. I think if you will study the history of what happened from 1942 on, when we first attempted to put price control on during the last war, and when you see the bad effect that came from not having any rationing at the outset of that period, you will agree with me that some steps should be taken to give authority for at least voluntary rationing, and some kind of stand-by authority for statutory rationing, and that the study of that subject should start very soon. Indeed, it should have started before now. We spent some months on the first price control bill passed by the Congress. I think we conducted hearings for 4 months. It is a very difficult subject to work out. If we do not work it out before the situation runs away from us, I think we can look forward to having many of the difficulties in the present price structure that we had during the last war and the immediate postwar period. Of course, any measure approved should be drawn in such a way that if the war situation should correct itself or not be as arduous as most of us fear it will be, then the President should not have the power to institute controls to an unlimited degree. But to neglect the study of this subject, and to neglect preparing the legislation which would be ready at a moment's notice to meet the trouble would, in my judgment, be repeating the serious mistakes that we made during the last war period.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KUNKEL. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Since the President's message of today was made public, the wires are carrying heavy messages from sales agencies and purchasing agencies all over the United States, moving in. Within the last 45 minutes I have had some of those largest buyers call me and ask me what I thought about the President's message in that respect.

Of course, the message as worded, in the absence of action taken, becomes one of the most inflationary forces that we have ever had turned loose in the United States, because people are now acting in the light of what has gone before and of their recent experiences in the last 10 years.

Mr. KUNKEL. As a matter of fact, I may say to the gentleman from Michigan, it would have been an admirable thing could we have had legislation ready which could have applied to rationing, and to allocations, and to priorities at the time the President first declared the emergency in connection with the Korean situation.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly. If we can assume that the market which has covered the last 60, 90, or 120 days, is a fairly free market—I mean prior to the Korean situation—that might be the point at which the gentleman has recommended that we fix normal and start from there. But certainly if this thing which is under way since 1 o'clock this afternoon and which will gather speed, is let run for 90 days, the good Lord only knows what kind of mess we shall be in.

Mr. KUNKEL. If the situation continues, as unfortunately it looks as though it would, there never will be a time in the next year or two at which the price level and the economic adjustments in this country will be as near normal as they are today. From this point on they will become increasingly abnormal; and consequently, if and when selected controls are imposed they will cause all kinds of unsuspected dislocations as well as many which we can reasonably anticipate.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD].

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, after listening to President Truman's stirring message to the Congress on the Korean situation there should be but one thought in the minds of the Members of this body. In the interest of successful prosecution of the United Nations campaign against lawless aggression and the defense of the United States, we must act at once.

President Truman has called for accelerated and increased production of essential materials, products, and services and in this time of crisis it is the duty of Congress to expedite such a program. The words "too little and too late" must never again be applied to the efforts of the United States in its battle to preserve world peace.

We should consider at once the President's recommendation that—

First. The Congress should authorize, for national defense purposes, production loan guaranties and loans to increase production.

Second. The Congress should authorize the making of long-term contracts and other means to encourage the production of certain materials in short supply.

Mention of the words "materials in short supply" brings vividly to mind this country's steel supply. If we are to meet this Nation's extremely heavy military needs without serious disruption of the economy, as President Truman requested, there is no denying that our present steel capacity is definitely inadequate. Expansion, particularly decentralized expansion, is needed at once.

An appeal for expanded steel facilities is not a new topic with me. I have pointed out upon previous occasions that the United States was lagging in steel production. Only last month I urged Henry J. Kaiser to expand his Fontana, Calif., steel plant in the interest of national defense and national economy.

I am happy to say that Mr. Kaiser has met my challenge. He already has filed with the National Security Resources Board and the Munitions Board a plan for expanding the ingot capacity of the Fontana plant from 1,200,000 tons a year to 1,900,000 tons. The cost would be approximately $100,000,000, and Mr. Kaiser has assured me that steel could be pouring from these new facilities in a matter of months. Recalling Mr. Kaiser's tremendous and unparalleled production record of World War II, I am sure that my colleagues will agree this is no idle boast.

It is men like Mr. Kaiser to whom Congress must turn when the country needs production and needs it in a hurry. It is men like Mr. Kaiser who must be encouraged by Congress if we are to avoid another too-little-and-too-late situation.

Expansion of the Fontana steel plant is essential because of its strategic location which enables it to—

First. Provide steel where it may be most needed—both for protecting the public from being cut off from essential civilian steel supplies and for the prosecution of military defenses.

Second. Assure independent iron-ore supply far away from the vulnerable eastern sources dependent on the Sault Ste. Marie lock bottleneck. Fontana iron ore is hauled 52 miles over a privately owned railroad and only 112 miles on a common carrier.

Third. Require minimum transportation for assembly of raw materials and distribution of finished and semifinished steel products to fabricators.

Fourth. Protect the western United States from the danger of its rail- and water-transportation routes being cut off by hostile war action. The expanded facilities would provide both essential basic materials and finished steel where they would be required by our Pacific defense forces and essential civilian workers, not only eliminating drain on transportation facilities, but lessening the peril of interruptions in long-haul transportation.

To give industry in general the support it needs in this national defense effort, Congress should consider immediately a program of accelerated amortization similar to that in effect during the last war. This should permit a company, upon obtaining an appropriate certificate of necessity from an agency such as the National Security Resources Board, to increase its plant capacity and write off the cost over a 5-year period. I know that there are many Members of the House and the Senate who favor this method as an incentive to industry to expand. I believe it is imperative that we give it consideration as rapidly as possible.

Steel plants cannot be built in a day. We waited too long in the last war before expending steel capacity. Let us not make that same mistake again.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, the bill S. 2822 before us today has as its principal advantage to depositors under the pending bill the provisions which raise the maximum insurance coverage from $5,000 to $10,000.

Insured banks will benefit from two provisions of the bill: The first would simplify present procedures for computing the assessment base, while the second would provide for a substantial reduction in the cost of insurance to the banks in normal years.

During its more than 16 years of existence the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has paid out about $316,261,289 to protect about 1,350,000 depositors in some 412 insured banks that have encountered difficulty. Bringing that down specifically to the State of Pennsylvania during this period, some 158,000 depositors in 24 insured banks in the State of Pennsylvania have had their funds protected by the advance of about $56,746,000 in Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation Funds. Further breaking the situation down in the particular State of which I am a Representative, the accounts in the insured banks in Pennsylvania as of the present time are some 8,730,000 in number. The accounts fully insured under the $5,000 maximum at the present time aggregate about 8,416,000. Under this increased coverage plan it would increase the number of accounts insured to about 8,621,000.

As to the total deposits, the total amount of deposits in all insured banks in the State of Pennsylvania aggregates about $10,899,000,000; and the insured deposits under the $5,000 maximum covers about $5,620,000,000; and under the $10,000 maximum it will be increased to some $6,481,000,000. The present maximum insurance coverage of $5,000 covers more than 99,000,000 deposit accounts in the insured banks throughout the Nation. The percentage of these total accounts at the present time is about 95.7 percent, which will increase the number then of total accounts covered to some 98.6 percent.

The total dollar deposits covered in the Nation today aggregate about 48.8 percent of the total amount of money on deposit, or approximately $76,500,000,000. It will move that figure up to some 56.5 percent, or an approximate amount of $88,500,000,000, an increase of some $12,000,000,000 in the total dollar deposits covered.

The principal changes in the existing law are some five in number. The report of the committee staff and the committee on page 5 of the report very capably points these changes out. The first of which I have cited is this increase in the insurance coverage. The second is the simplification in the computation of the assessment base. The third is the reduction in the years in which the Corporation does not encounter any undue loss in the case of deposit insurance to the banks by making provision for a credit to them of a percentage of the net assessment paid each year. Fourth, in this bill by amendment we cover the expansion of examination authority to enable the Corporation to examine any insured bank or any bank seeking insurance and fifth, and finally, the payment to the Treasury of interest of 2 percent on capital funds originally provided by the Treasury and the Federal Reserve Bank.

There are other minor changes, of course, of a less important nature, many of which are rather technical and repeal certain obsolete sections of the existing law. I do not want to take any further time of the Committee of the Whole. In the reading of the bill for amendment when the problem comes up we will be able to present the entire picture so far as the bill is concerned.

There have been some erroneous impressions about who the benefits of this bill will accrue to. However, the committee report has duly covered that. In the final reporting of the bill I may say there was no record vote, which would indicate also there was no record vote of opposition to its final reporting. There were differences on some of the amendments, but these were agreed to by approximately a 2 to 1 margin.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FULTON. I want to compliment the gentleman on his factual statement. What is the benefit to be gained by having a premium paid of 100 cents on the dollar each year, then having 60 percent given back? Why not just have the 40 percent paid in originally and only call for the 60 percent when it is needed?

Mr. BUCHANAN. The premium is divided in that fashion, of course, under the terms of the bill, 60 percent accruing to a reserve account and 40 percent to the banks, with certain added provisions.

Mr. FULTON. Why could they not calculate the expenses of the FDIC for a year, call on the banks for a 40-percent premium payment for reserves, and let it be known it is a contingent liability of the banks in the future, and not have them pay it in each year?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, in 1949 the net income of corporation holdings of securities in that year amounted to some $25,122,803, and there is at present a reserve fund of about $1,200,000,000. That is rather adequate to take care of any losses that might occur. The object, of course, is not to build that reserve fund to too large a proportion. When you are draining off too much you are probably draining it off of some of the small banks of the country rather than the larger banks. This would largely aid the smaller banks when they are insured up to $10,000 and make more money available for loans and credit advances to the businesses in that particular area.

Mr. FULTON. Does not the gentleman think that by moving further towards the guaranteeing of all bank deposits by an agency of the Government we are then getting to the point where we might have all the bank deposits guaranteed, and that the Government will then set the policies for the banks in their local operations?

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I do not feel that way. I have no fears about that at all because the present system is operating in a fashion which, as I have stated here from the percentage figures, a large number of the accounts are now covered, almost 95.5 percent, and this will increase a few percentage points of the total number covered. But, of the total dollar deposits covered there is still adequate leeway there, so I have no fears about Government restraint or controls being exercised through the FDIC.

Mr. FULTON. May I have the gentleman's comments on the operation of this reserve fund of $1,200,000,000? That is invested in Government obligations, is it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is right.

Mr. FULTON. Suppose that a depression occurs or there are bank failures enough so that we have to call on that reserve for paying the bank depositors, what would happen? Is it not a fact that all we do is to dip into the general funds of the Treasury and come up with enough money in order to pay the bank losses?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, we have built rather rigid supports in our economy today on a sound basis, and if the occasion that the gentleman refers to should occur, I am sure that the fund supports that we have constructed will be reenacted and make for a safer banking system. I believe the policy, in general, over the last 15 years, is indicative of that trend.

Mr. FULTON. May I ask the gentleman this question? Where will the funds come from to pay out the bank losses when the reserve fund is invested in Government bonds?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Well, of course, that is a situation that we will meet when that time comes.

Mr. FULTON. Will that not have to be by a general appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States, because after all they are just obligations of the United States?

Mr. BUCHANAN. If that is the wish of the Congress at that time, that will possibly be the way in which it will be handled.

Mr. FULTON. There are certainly some of us questioning the policy of the bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, some of the provisions of the bill, but as to the entire bill I do not know of any objections. There may be some.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. Any bonds that are issued by the United States Government are obligations of the Government. They must be paid by calls upon the United States Treasury. That is why the bonds are issued by the United States Government now.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I include the following statements:

S. 2822

Section 17, pages 52–45—Audit by General Accounting Office: This section authorizes the Comptroller General to make a commercial-type audit of the FDIC. A commercial-type audit is described in the attached excerpt from House Report No. 846, Seventy-eighth Congress, first session.[1]

[1] This excerpt was included in the reports of both House and Senate committees which considered the Government Corporation Control Act.

See Rept. No. 856, House of Representatives, 79th Cong., 1st sess. pp. 95–96; Rept. No. 694, Senate, 79th Cong., 1st sess., pp. 8–9.

The language in this section was worked out between the Comptroller General and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation after careful study, and should not be changed without full knowledge as to what effect any such change would have.

The provisions for a commercial audit of the FDIC should be set forth in the FDIC law as it is here and should not be contained in the Government Corporation Control Act or any other such omnibus measure, since the FDIC has little, if anything, in common with Government corporations and other agencies which would be included in such an act. The audit provisions of this bill have been designed to fit the particular needs and operations of the Corporation.

IV. DIFFERENCES BETWEEN GOVERNMENTAL AND COMMERCIAL TYPES OF AUDIT

(Excerpts from H. Rept. No. 846, 78th Cong., 1st sess.)

(This statement is incorporated in both Senate and House committee reports on the Government Corporation Control Act.)

* * * * *

In general the purpose of the governmental type of audit is to determine the validity of expenditures under appropriations made by the Congress in the light of restrictions and limitations placed by the Congress generally upon the expenditure of appropriated moneys. It is a part of a system designed to enforce the personal accountability of governmental officers authorizing or expending those funds upon the basis of documents and records usually submitted to the General Accounting Office and retained in its custody. In contrast, the commercial type of audit is separate and apart from the accounting system and internal financial control of the Corporation and is designed to determine the true financial condition of the Corporation as of a given date and the results of its financial operations during the period covered by the audit, as well as establishing whether the funds of the Corporation have been regularly expended in accordance with corporate authorization. These determinations are made by detailed examination of the operating and financial records of the Corporation at the places where they are being used in the conduct of corporate business.

* * * * *

The fundamental difference between the two types of audit and the inadequacy of the governmental type of audit as applied to capital-fund operations of the Corporation may be more clearly seen from a comparison of the procedures involved.

The governmental type of audit generally involves the following seven steps:

1. The fixing of the amount for which the disbursing officer is accountable under his bonded responsibility by reason of the advance of funds under particular appropriations upon accountable warrants and by reason of collections received by him;

2. The submission by the designated disbursing officer to the General Accounting Office for audit and settlement of an account supported by certified vouchers and by other original papers evidencing specific payments which he has made from the particular funds charged to him;

3. The examination by the General Accounting Office of these vouchers and other original supporting papers to determine whether the payments covered thereby were properly authorized and whether the expenditures represent valid obligations of the Government under the specific appropriation sought to be charged;

4. The settlement by the General Accounting Office of the disbursing officer's account and the determination of his liability to the United States;

5. The determination of the liability to the United States of the officer certifying for payment the items included in the disbursing officer's account;

6. The preparation and issuance of certificates of settlement incorporating all unexplained or unadjusted differences developed in the examinations of the accounts; and

7. The institution of collection proceedings if the accountable officer fails to pay over any balances found due from him in the settlement.

COMMERCIAL-TYPE AUDIT

The commercial type of audit ordinarily made of large business corporations usually involves the following seven steps:

1. The establishment of the authorities of the various officers and employees by reference to the original articles of incorporation, bylaws, minutes of the board of directors, and other official authorizations taken in the name of the corporation;

2. The verification, through appropriate checks, of the original general and subsidiary ledgers by comparison of original collection and disbursement documents with such ledgers and, in connection with this, the determination that all actions reviewed are properly authorized;

3. The verification from the original accounting records and supporting documents of the accuracy of all items appearing on the balance sheet, including verification of all cash on hand and in banks, and when needed, positive establishment of the existence of assets by physical inventory methods or through inquiries addressed to debtors and the determination of actual liabilities through inquiries addressed to creditors;

4. The review and establishment of the accuracy of any operating statements to determine that they clearly indicate the financial progress of the corporation during the period covered by the audit, including proper reflection of any profits made or losses suffered;

5. Determination, in light of the actions by the board of directors and any changes in the policies of the corporation, that proper records are established and necessary safeguards developed correctly to reflect the financial operations of the corporation and to protect the corporation from financial loss which can be prevented by proper and adequate records and procedures;

6. The preparation of a report covering the audit, including certified financial statements and comments deemed appropriate by the auditor, such as recommendations for changes in the accounting procedure and records, errors still uncorrected at the completion of the audit, analysis of facts brought out in the financial statements, and the submission of such a report to the officials ordering the audit; and

7. The institution of corrective action by the corporate management.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TALLE].

Mr. TALLE. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to support the pending legislation, S. 2822. It is a good bill. It will strengthen our Nation's banking system. Depositors and bankers alike endorse the measure. Depositors will benefit principally from the added protection in the provision raising the maximum insurance coverage from $5,000 to $10,000. Insured banks will benefit because of the simplified procedure for computing assessment bases and because of the substantial reduction in the cost of the insurance in normal years.

As a member of the Banking and Currency Committee, I was pleased last March to read an editorial in the Des Moines Register and Tribune paying deserved tribute to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. FDIC is one Government agency that has consistently been well managed. It has never been the object of partisan political attacks. The editorial states:

FDIC HAS BEEN A COMPLETE SUCCESS

In the dark days of 1933 a new alphabet agency of the Federal Government was added to the dozens blooming in the first spring of the New Deal in Washington. This particular one—embodied in legislation sponsored by Michigan's Republican Senator, ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG—was FDIC (for Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation).

The idea made sense to men and women who had seen bank doors locked and their savings dwindle to nothing a few months before. Under FDIC, the Government guaranteed every depositor's account up to $5,000.

Confidence returned to the Nation and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation continued to reinforce the integrity of banking and savings institutions. Its record, brought into review this week as the Senate passed a bill broadening its coverage, is a cheering Government success story and a happy note of national prosperity.

Every cent of the $289,000,000 advanced by the Treasury to start FDIC has been repaid. Last year it operated at a profit of $138,091,786, giving it a surplus, or reserve fund, of $1,203,942,687.

The new Senate bill, which the House is expected to approve, would extend the coverage on individual bank deposits from $5,000 to $10,000 and, at the same time, cut the insurance premium—paid by the banks—by about one-half.

The $5,000 guaranty covered about 96 percent of all bank accounts. The increased protection will bring the coverage up to 98.4 percent of all deposits.

The FDIC cannot prevent bank failures. There have been from one to four a year since 1933. But every depositor has been paid in full up to the first $5,000 of his account. In 1948 this amounted to only $400,000.

The depression baby has grown up to be a quiet, thrifty, and successful member of the Federal family.

Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out in the committee hearings on this bill, the FDIC has been a good buttress to bank management. Students of banking agree that the most important single cause of bank failures is bad management. In other words, sound banking is predicated on good management. It was this thought I had in mind several years ago when, on the occasion of the Iowa Centennial, I commended the pioneers who were responsible for the establishment and operation of the original State Bank of Iowa. My words on that occasion apply equally to the men who have administered the FDIC so ably during the 16 years of its existence, for they, too, have helped to lift the banking fraternity to a high and honorable place in society. I join with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] in expressing admiration for the management of the FDIC.

It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, why depositors are eager to receive the protection afforded by Federal deposit insurance. But the fact that this insurance is also popular with banks, both large and small, is a tribute to the splendid administration of the Corporation. E. E.

Manuel, of George, Iowa, former President of the Independent Bankers Association, had this to say about FDIC in a recent letter to Chairman Maple Harl:

We independent bankers are surely grateful for the recognition given us by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. We have a feeling that your organization is going down the line fighting for us.

Yes; the FDIC has had a stabilizing effect on American banking. And American banking is one of the most unique institutions in our economic machinery. The unusual character of our banking system was well described in a recent address by another outstanding Iowa banker, J. F. Kennedy, of New Hampton, president of the Iowa Bankers Association, as follows:

I suppose the principal reason that American banking differs from banking in other lands lies in the fact that our system reaches right down to the little people—the workingman, the farmer, the small-business man. Let's keep it that way.

It is this development of American banking to include all segments of our society that is significant. And my interest in the pending bill is based on my firm conviction that the benefits of deposit insurance should be made available to increased numbers of depositors. Insuring bank deposits is not a new idea, but experience has proved that such operations should not be conducted on a local basis. Spreading the risk is a vital principle in insurance. Back in 1829 the State of New York set up a safety fund; it failed because it was confined to one State. In more recent years other States, particularly in the Middle West, have tried similar experiments. They, too, failed because, first, the principle of spreading the risk cannot operate successfully in the limited confines of a single State; and, second, because the banking laws in those particular States were loose. I want to emphasize that these failures do not disprove the validity of the idea of deposit insurance; but they do establish that the risk should be spread through a Nation-wide system.

Mr. Chairman, S. 2822 will benefit both depositors and bankers. By its enactment, the safety and liquidity of bank deposits throughout the land will be assured, and the American banking system will thereby be strengthened from top to bottom. This legislation deserves the full support of every Member in this Chamber.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, the bill we are now considering represents the conscientious bipartisan effort of the Committee on Banking and Currency. Under the leadership of our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky, I think, by and large, they have done an excellent piece of work in strengthening the Federal deposit-insurance law. They were assisted in their work by the directors and staff of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under the guidance of their able Chairman, the Honorable Maple T. Harl. The Corporation and its efficient staff have received unanimous praise from every source for the fine work they have done. This bill will enable them to do an even better job, provided it is improved in one respect.

The bill presently provides for a reduction in the amount to be paid by the banks for the insurance set up by this law. That, I think, is a very serious mistake at this time. The bill doubles the amount of insurance from $5,000 to $10,000 per account, and at the same time it cuts back the amount to be paid for that insurance by about 60 percent.

I will address myself at this time to the reasons why we should eliminate from this bill any provision for reduction in the assessments or premiums. If we do not eliminate that provision entirely, at least, we should postpone the effective date of the reductions, refunds, or credits until such time as the reserve fund is built up to at least double what it is now.

I would like to bring your minds back for a moment to the days when the Federal deposit insurance law, was written upon the statute books of our country. The very distinguished gentleman from Alabama, the late Mr. Steagall, had labored long and well over a period of 15 years prior to 1933 trying to write upon our statute books a law insuring deposits. Almost every banker in the country for 15 years vigorously opposed him. Then in 1933 those of you who were here at that time, were besieged by those very bankers demanding that the Government rush in and insure deposits and guarantee them against the losses which had been brought upon the banks and the bank depositors and stockholders by the bad judgment, yes, even by the mismanagement and folly of those same bankers. When the bill was before the House in 1933, the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, Mr. Steagall, said this:

It is submitted that the guaranty of bank deposits against loss provided by this bill is absolute and that no specific guaranty of the Government is necessary to make the protection of the depositors complete—

Meaning, as he indicated, that this was to be a deposit insurance fund built up by the banks out of bank funds to guarantee depositors against loss.

At that session of the Congress in 1933, in discussing the conference report, before final enactment of the bill, the same gentleman said:

The purpose of this bill is to promote the the public welfare and protect the interest of depositors. It rests upon the theory that banking which is not safe for depositors ought to be prohibited by law. It is intended to require common honesty in the operation of the banks of this country and to make it posisble for banks to employ bank credits in support of trade and commerce in the United States.

He said further:

We lay down the proposition that banking is not the individual right of a citizen, but that when we charter an institution to engage in banking, to receive the deposits of the public, it is the duty of the law-making power of the Government to see to it that the deposits of the public are protected. Common honesty requires this, the public welfare requires it, and the future welfare of the banks requires it.

Those words bear repetition today, because there is a provision in this bill sponsored by these same bankers which, if it remains in the bill, will undermine the entire structure of Federal Deposit Insurance. I understand that when the time comes during the reading of the bill for amendment, the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE] will offer an amendment to strike out the provision granting to the banks 60 percent refund of the present assessments, which are used to build this insurance fund. The assessments are really premiums paid for this insurance. The fund is called upon in the event of need, to pay depositors back their own money which they have loaned to these banks, which the banks are using to earn their profits.

There is nothing wrong with the banking system and nothing wrong with that theory, provided they will adhere to the principle of this bill, and continue to build this fund until it is large enough to protect the depositors of this country against loss.

One banker who came before the committee said $10,000 now is quite comparable to $5,000 in 1934. I agree. If that is so, we should expect them to come in here and say, "If you are going to increase the insurance coverage from $5,000 to $10,000, we ought to at least pay double the premium." Not so in this bill. They say, "Let us cut it by 60 percent. Let us get double the insurance and pay only 40 percent of the premium we pay with a 50-cent dollar."

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. I am interested in the independence of the banking system. You have heard me say this afternoon that the nearer we come to the control of deposits, the nearer we come to control of the banking system by the United States Government. Will the committee assure me that there is no intention that the greater the percentage of deposits guaranteed, there is then the possibility of greater control by the United States Government?

Mr. MULTER. Ordinarily it would be presumptuous for me to speak for every member of the committee. In this instance, however, I am sure I am voicing the sentiment of every member of the committee. There is not one of us who wants to see banking nationalized or socialized in this country, and that we will do nothing in this bill, or otherwise, that will lead toward nationalization of our banking system. We want it to remain as a private free enterprise system.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I yield.

Mr. GAMBLE. We on this side of the aisle agree wholeheartedly in that statement the gentleman has made. None of us wants banking nationalized.

Mr. FULTON. I thank you very much. I wish to compliment the gentleman on his remarks.

Mr. MULTER. At the same time, as I warned some of the bankers who came before our committee, I said: "If the time ever comes when the banking system will have to call upon the United States Government again to save them, and put Government money into those banks to pay their losses and pay their depositors their money, we might well find the Government taking over the banking system." And we want to stop that if we can. The way to do it is to make sure that we have a reserve fund of bankers' money and depositors' money large enough to cover any loss. No witness who has come before our committee has dared say that the reserve fund here is large enough and adequate enough to cover the possible losses. The Secretary of the Treasury is quoted in the Senate hearings as having said that barring a panic such as we had in 1930–33 the fund is sufficient. We are looking ahead to the days when we may have another panic. We hope we will never have another, but that is what we must guard against, a collapse of the good times which we have had since the existence of the FDIC, against the possibility of a panic such as we had in 1933. In that year we had $58,000,000,000 of deposits in the country's banking system, and the losses the depositors took at that time quite apart from stockholders' losses amounted to 3.3 percent of their total deposits. If we had had an insurance fund at that time we would have needed just under $2,000,000,000 to guarantee those losses. Today we have three times the amount of deposits in our banking system. In our insured banks alone today we have $156,000,000,000 of deposits. If we take as our criterion what happened in 1930–33, we need at least $6,600,000,000 to guarantee against loss. The fund today stands at $1,200,000,000.

One banker said to our committee the fund is sufficient because they have the right to draw on the United States Treasury for $3,000,000,000. Yes; the law says that in the event FDIC funds are exhausted it may call on the Treasury with no further authorization necessary from Congress. The mere note given by the FDIC is sufficient to borrow from the Treasury $3,000,000,000 to save our insured banks.

I say that before the bankers are entitled to any reduction in assessments, any refund of premium, any credit of premium, call it what you will, this insurance fund should be built up at least to the $3,000,000,000 that they have a right to borrow from our Government. The distinguished gentleman who preceded me, whose profound knowledge of economics I respect sincerely, told you of an instance many years ago when New York State had an insurance fund; he said the fund collapsed because it must be on a national scale for this kind of insurance to succeed. I differ with my good friend in his conclusion. We have had insurance systems in eight other States of the Union, systems insuring deposits: They were North Dakota, South Dakota, Texas, Mississippi, Nebraska, Washington, Oklahoma, and Kansas.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MULTER. I shall be pleased to.

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman mentioned the Nebraska system that has been in effect on a State level. The gentleman will recall that the Nebraska system failed because they kept guaranteeing more and more and more of the deposits of the banks until they guaranteed all the deposits in the Nebraska banks and then the local bankers lost their sense of responsibility so they went into these various projects that were somewhat risky, feeling they had no responsibility because the Government would make good the deposits. This makes me wonder whether or not in this bill when we are about to guarantee up to 98.6 percent in number of the total deposits we are not rapidly getting to the point where we are neglecting the local responsibility of the banks and weakening the banking system as an independent agency. I wonder if the gentleman would care to answer that.

Mr. MULTER. I was about to develop that very point. I do not think the gentleman's conclusion is correct as he stated it.

Mr. FULTON. I am merely asking for information, not giving a conclusion.

Mr. MULTER. Let me develop the point. I will show you why I think that is not the reason for the failure of those State systems. Every one of those State funds fell, not because they could not call on the Nation for support but because they did not have reserves big enough to cover the losses when the time came along to pay the losses that occurred. In every instance, because they had had a period of good times for 10 or 15 years, they cut the assessments, they cut the reserves, they took credits and dividends out of the reserve fund until they did not have enough money to meet the losses when bad times struck them.

Mr. FULTON. As a matter of fact, in several of those States were there not many bankers put in jail because they did not live up to the responsibilities and went into very highly speculative obligations and lost?

Mr. MULTER. That is true. Let me call attention to the fact that we were told in committee we do not need a big reserve fund now because a lot of money is in Government bonds, money that belongs to the bank depositors; therefore there is not so much risk capital out. Everybody here knows that in the last 2 years we changed the margin requirements from no margin on stock sales to 25 percent, and now it is 50 percent. There are $2,000,000,000 of bank loans, depositors' money, in the market today on these margin sales. You all know what happened last week. There were drops in the market of anywhere from 1 to 50 points. As soon as the bankers begin doing that kind of thing and begin making speculative loans, even though they may not go to jail, they are going to tear down this fund and tear down the reserves, then they will come down here again crying to us to save them once more. Let us save them now against themselves by building up this reserve fund.

Mr. FULTON. The gentleman does not think it will get to be the habit that they will say, "We will make the loan because it is only Government money if it is lost?"

Mr. MULTER. That is why we insist in this bill that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation shall have the right to go in and examine and inspect these banks whenever they deem that necessary in order to be able to stop any of those practices before they go too far.

Mr. FULTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MULTER. To prove my point that it was lack of reserves and the cutting of the melon, the return and the refund of premiums, the payment of dividends out of the reserve funds, that destroyed these insurance funds on the State level, let me direct your attention to the fact that in three States today, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Connecticut, we have State insurance funds. They are sound and prosperous. Here is the reason: In Massachusetts the deposits are on the ratio of 12 to 1 against reserves, in New Hampshire 13½ to 1 and in Connecticut 7 to 1. This reserve fund of the FDIC is almost 150 to 1 on the basis of total deposits. It is 78 to 1 on the basis of insured deposits up to $5,000 per single account. It will be about 90 to 1 on the basis of insured deposits up to $10,000 per account. Until you build up this reserve fund to a better proportion, we are begging for trouble, we are in danger of not being able to support these banks in the event of difficulty.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and its members are seeking no cut in their assessments or premiums. They pay the same rate of one-twelfth of 1 percent that the member banks of FDIC have been paying up to now. Their fund comparatively speaking is stronger than the FDIC fund. The ratio of their deposits to reserves is 45 to 1. Most of their money is invested in mortgages secured by the homes of our American people. Outside of Government securities they are the soundest investments ever produced in this country.

Insurance of deposits is comparable to the business of insuring credit risks and the writing of surety company bonds. No one anywhere in this country can buy credit insurance for a premium of one-twelfth of 1 percent. Yet the bankers would cut it by 60 percent.

There is not a surety company in this country that is permitted to write bonds aggregating a total potential liability of more than 2½ times their surplus and reserve.

No banker would dare run his bank on the basis that they are now asking the FDIC to operate. No careful investor would put $1 of his own money into any institution that was asked to operate on such a basis.

Mr. R. E. Gormley, chairman of the legislative committee of the Georgia Bankers Association told our committee that before any reduction in premiums should take place a surplus of at least $2,500,000,000 should be built up. He urged that the surplus be built up so that the banks of this country will never have to call upon the Federal Treasury for another dollar.

Not one of the bankers who appeared before our committee took the position that the surplus now in this fund was adequate. Most of them said that the amount of surplus was something to be determined by the Board of Directors of the FDIC.

The Board of Directors of the FDIC refused to take the position that the fund was adequate and placed the responsibility for fixing the amount of an adequate fund upon the Congress.

If this Congress allows the reduction of assessments to remain in this bill and disaster should befall this country before the fund is built up to a large enough sum to protect the Nation's depositors, the responsibility will be that of this Congress, and this Congress alone. I, for one, want this record to be crystal clear that I am warning the Congress against such an eventuality, and the responsibility for such a catastrophe, if one should occur, must rest upon the conscience of those Members who pass this bill in its present form.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. POTTER].

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to speak out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I know that all of us here in the House and the American people generally are proud of the outstanding ability, the gallantry and the heroism of our fighting troops in Korea. I think that we are particularly proud of the gallantry of our ground forces. I can recall not too long ago, as a matter of fact since the end of World War II, when gentlemen in high positions of Government told us that this will be the last war where we will have to have ground troops, that the next war will be a war of science, a war in which push buttons would be the instrument of war.

Today we find ourselves in our first engagement, with the doughboys spilling the blood. The infantryman is the unsung hero; he is the unsung soldier; he is the individual who is sent in first and feels the brunt of battle. Normally he receives a minimum of training compared with other services. He receives the equipment that is left over; yes, and he is put into the hottest spot on any front.

Because of that, Mr. Chairman, I have introduced today a bill which will give the ground soldier a bonus for combat duty. The President's message today proposes an increase in our expenditures for military defense of $10,000,000,000. Out of that, I am sure that we can provide a special bonus of $5 a day for any of our ground troops actually in combat. That is what my bill provides for.

Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there are several precedents that have already been established for special bonuses. We have awarded flight pay to our aviators. We give special bonuses for submarine duty. We give special bonuses for diving duty, and there is special treatment for the paratroopers. The infantry and other combat ground troops is one group that is actually shedding their blood, who do not have the opportunity to come home at night and sleep between clean sheets. This bill will give them at least a little incentive, a little boost to their morale, to let them know that their country has not forgotten them; that they are not being sent in to fight and then let the other branches of the service receive the credit for the work which they are doing.

I sincerely hope that our Armed Services Committee will take immediate action, particularly at this time when our ground forces are receiving such rough treatment at the hands of the enemy. This is a war in which you either live or die. From the evidence that has come to us through the newspapers, if you are captured you go through such torture that death is preferred. So, I sincerely hope that the membership of this House will act upon this legislation. It happens that I know a little bit about the feeling of an infantry soldier. It is gall to him when he looks up into the sky and he sees his buddies in the Air Force fly over him, and he says, "Well, they are going back tonight to warm meals and clean sheets, and at the same time getting pay and a half." This bill is a little token for a sacrifice that cannot be paid in compensation but nevertheless it is a token in appreciation, a debt that we owe them for service which they are rendering for us.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, first I wish to compliment the committee for bringing this bill to the flood in its present form. Back in 1933 and 1935 we did some very fundamental legislating insofar as bank legislation is concerned. It might be recalled that about that time we instituted a policy of deficit financing of the United States whicl laid down before our people the fundamental proposition that if vast issues from the Federal Treasury were to be sold, they would either have to be sold to individuals and corporations and partnerships and trusts, or to the banks of the country. The people in charge of the drafting of the legislation knew full well that individuals and corporations and partnerships would not absorb the issues which were to be put out by the Federal Treasury and that, therefore, the banks would have to take up a substantial portion of those issues, and which the banks did to more than $90,000,000.

Some of these fundamental changes that were made might be very briefly mentioned. Passing a law which forbade the banks to pay interest on demand deposits to the depositors was about as fundamental a change as could be made in banking as it stood prior to 1933.

Another fundamental change that came in banking law was the institution of the FDIC.

Another fundamental change that came in the banking laws had to do with the liability of the stockholder. Those laws removed the double liability, so that the stockholder could not be assessed again for the investment he had made in the bank structure originally. That was done to encourage people to invest their money in the capital structures of banks, so that there would be banks that could purchase the issues put out by the Federal Treasury.

Another fundamental change that was made in the banking laws came about through making it possible for banks that had purchased these issues of the Federal Treasury, if they needed currency badly to meet the demands made upon them by the people who had deposited their savings in the banks, to take those bonds issued by the Federal Treasury, sold to the banks, and turn the bonds back through the machinery of the Federal Reserve System and draw currency from the Federal Reserve in the form of Federal Reserve notes to the extent of the par value of the bonds.

Those were some very fundamental changes made in our banking law, and they have had a vast influence on banking in the United States.

If bank capital structures are to be retained sufficiently to carry a reasonable ratio to the amount of the deposits in the banks, it is necessary for banks to earn some profits now and then so that people will invest their money in the preferred and common stock of the banks. This bill has something to do with that particular phase of banking. This bill will substantially help the little banks of the country. That is why they agree to the provisions of the bill. This bill will have a favorable influence on the earnings of those little banks as well as the medium-size and the larger banks. This bill does away with a lot of the paper work the banks have had to do in connection with compiling the assessment base which was used by the FDIC for the purpose of making assessments against the banks so as to get these premiums into the hand of the FDIC.

On page 7 of the committee report is a very fine statement with respect to the most unique formula that has been worked out. This bill does not guarantee that the banks will receive back 60 percent of the dividend. It does not say anything of the kind. The bank might get 60 percent if certain things eventuated but there is no guaranty that those things will eventuate. This formula is a protective formula for the FDIC or, in other words, for the depositors who put their money in the banks, which is all right.

The FDIC operates on a basis which gives a great, wide spread all over the United States to all banks, under various management.

Altogether, this is a pretty good bill, I think.

This wide spread is as always a good thing in underwriting. It gives that much more insurance. If a fire-insurance company or a life-insurance company can get a very wide spread over millions of risks scattered over a vast expanse of territory then the underwriter using ordinary sense can get much better protection all the way through for everybody that is insured. The FDIC must necessarily have great power. I will give you one little illustration which happened in my district just recently. A little bank with a very small capitalization of less than $100,000 found itself in trouble. The president was taking his first vacation after 25 years. He and his wife—he is a very fine old gentleman—went down in Florida. A situation developed where there was a great shortage in this bank of several hundred times as much as the total capital stock of the bank. It became necessary for the FDIC to step in immediately, to put up several hundred thousand dollars and to take over the bank and consolidate it with another neighboring bank and all of this without the president of the bank even knowing anything about the bank being in any kind of trouble whatsoever. That illustrates how powerful the FDIC can be under the FDIC law.

If it is going to protect the depositors, it must have that power and it does have the power. This bill simply gives the FDIC a little bit more power for the benefit of these depositors who, after all, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN] said, really put up the insurance premiums to take care of this insurance which they enjoy. The consolidation was made. The FDIC stepped in. The community immediately settled down. There was no run on the bank. Everybody was fully protected. That one little loss may cost—and that was a very small bank, mind you—as I was saying it may cost the FDIC more than its total deposit insurance loss in 1949 which was $431,000. Therefore, the FDIC has to have power. I think this is a good bill.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I am reluctant to take any of the Committee's time. It is apparent I believe that the general objectives of this measure will receive approval by the House. The FDIC has established itself as an important arm of the Federal system. It has been well administered and the changes proposed by the bill will mean substantial improvements in its service.

I strongly favor its principal provisions, the increase in coverage, the change in assessments, and the payment of dividends.

I regret that I cannot agree with the majority of the Banking Committee with reference to the proposed power for examination of insured banks.

It appears from the hearings that whenever the Corporation has felt that special circumstances warranted a separate examination of a State member bank, it requested permission of the Federal Reserve Board to make such an examination. I want to point out that the Federal Reserve Board Chairman's statement shows that 115 requests for consent to make examinations of State member banks have been received from the Corporation. Of these, not one was refused, 110 were granted, and in five cases the requests were withdrawn or dropped. It would seem that the FDIC is fully informed on the condition of State member banks and therefore nothing would be accomplished by any change in the law giving the Corporation power to examine such institutions without the consent of the Federal Reserve Board.

I call attention also to the fact that the Executive Committee of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks, representing the State banking departments of the 48 States, is opposed to the provision which would permit the FDIC to examine State member banks without the prior approval of the Federal Reserve Board. They urge that such a provision would tend to weaken the dual banking system.

I quote in part from a letter dated January 30, 1950, addressed to the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, from the Legislative Committee of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks:

> We fear State banks faced with examinations by three different supervisory agencies would be placed in highly disadvantageous competitive position with national banks which would be examined only by Comptroller of Currency.

For these reasons I opposed the amendment giving this power to the Corporation.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, an editorial in the Streator (Ill.) Times recently said a lot of what I should like to say in praise of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. It reads, in part, as follows:

> Congressional action to expand the scope of the FDIC (Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation) as reflected in the passage in the Senate of a bill to extend coverage on individual bank deposits from $5,000 to $10,000 and at the same time decrease the insurance premium paid by the banks will receive universal support. This is one measure which had its birth in the depth of depression which has proved its usefulness and is destined to play an important role in any economic disturbance that may appear in the future.
> So successful has been the operation of this program that the FDIC has repaid every cent of the $289,000,000 which it borrowed from the United States Treasury when inaugurated in 1933 and last year had a profit of some $138,000,000. In reserve is $1,203,000,000.
> Under the $5,000 guaranty of bank deposits by the FDIC about 96 percent of all accounts have been covered and it is estimated that under the new law 98.4-percent coverage will be effected.
> Though the FDIC is not offered as a guaranty against all bank failures, it is notable that only one to four a year have fallen by the wayside since 1933. It is also notable that every depositor in those few institutions have been paid in full up to the $5,000 guaranty which in 1948 amounted only to $400,000.
> After many years during which there was no bank guaranty and much opposition to such a guaranty from many quarters, the experience with this depression project has been most gratifying.

We are considering today a bill providing for an increase in Federal insurance of bank deposits from $5,000 to $10,000. In the State of Illinois this provision of the bill will extend the benefits of complete coverage to an additional 186,000 depositors in insured banks.

Under existing law, 5,826,000 depositors in insured banks of Illinois are protected entirely. Raising maximum coverage to $10,000 will give complete coverage to 6,012,000 Illinois depositors, on the basis of the latest survey made by FDIC.

Insured banks will benefit from two provisions of the bill. The first would simplify present procedures for computing the assessment base, while the second would provide for a substantial reduction in the cost of insurance to the banks in normal years.

During its more than 16 years of existence Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has paid out about $350,000,000 to protect 1,350,000 depositors in 412 insured banks that have encountered difficulty.

In the State of Illinois during this period, 19,000 depositors of 15 insured banks have had their funds protected by the advance of $4,078,000 in FDIC funds.

The present maximum insurance coverage of $5,000 protects completely more than 99,000,000 deposit accounts in insured banks throughout the Nation. Upping the coverage to $10,000 would give complete coverage to an additional 3,000,000 deposit accounts, meanwhile raising the Corporation's potential liability by about $12,000,000,000.

The economy of the Nation has benefited greatly from the financial stability engendered by FDIC. Owners of the 104,000,000 insured deposit accounts in our banks also have come to realize that safety and security are their rights.

Significantly, this corporation has not cost depositors or the taxpayers a single penny. The insurance premiums are paid by the banks, and so far have been sufficient to cover deposit insurance losses and expenses and to accumulate substantial reserves against possible future losses.

It will be my purpose to help this agency extend wider coverage to bank depositors throughout the Nation and to help it continue its contribution to the security and stability of our financial life.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WOLVERTON].

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the House, S. 2822, to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, is entitled to have the unanimous support of the House.

It increases the amount of insured deposits from the present limit of $5,000 to $10,000. This will cover a large percentage of accounts that exceed the $5,000 limit and under present law are not fully covered as to the amount above $5,000.

The enactment of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act is one of the most worth while of all the acts that have been enacted by Congress to give security to the people of this Nation.

With the experiences of our people in the last depression, when their savings were lost through the closing of banks, there is nothing that has been shown to be so necessary and commendable as the legislation passed by Congress in 1934 that guarantees depositors against loss up to $5,000. I had advocated the insurance of such accounts long before Congress passed the legislation in 1934. I voted for the original bill, and I will vote for the present bill that increases the amount guaranteed up to $10,000.

It is a natural step forward to increase the amount to $10,000. There is no way to estimate the satisfaction, the comfort, and the sense of security that the original bill has given, and this present bill will give, to our people. The insurance by the Federal Government against loss of their hard-earned savings removes doubt and fear from their minds. With a Government guaranty back of the moneys deposited, the savings of our people are as safe as the Government itself.

The fund which has been created from annual payments by the banks of the Nation has been well managed and has proven a bulwark of strength to our financial institutions and a sense of security to the depositors.

The other features of the bill making changes in the administration of the fund are also well considered and will prove helpful.

I give my wholehearted and enthusiastic support to the bill.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time, 5 minutes, to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES].

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting this legislation in general. I think the provision increasing the insurance coverage from $5,000 to $10,000 should be approved.

There are some provisions, however, to which I would like to direct attention. I do not think that $15,000,000 for a new building at this time is necessary, and at the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike the $15,000,000 from this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I heard the very splendid address by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia. He gave a fine presentation of this measure. He did a splendid job in explaining this proposed legislation. We are grateful for his efforts. He made a very persuasive argument in favor of that building, but, nevertheless, I do not believe this is the time to use these funds for that purpose. Let us leave the money in the fund.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. This is just an authorization. It is left up to the President. It may not be built for 10 years.

Mr. REES. Well, let us not authorize it. Just leave it alone. At the present time it is not as essential as a number of other things.

Of course you authorize first. Then you, or someone, will be here asking for the funds to build it. Better leave it out for the present, anyway. Fifteen million dollars is a lot of money for one building for a comparatively small agency.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation is paying about $200,000 a year in rental.

Mr. REES. In Washington?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes.

Mr. REES. Well, my observation is that is too much. You are paying too high rents for the small group of people you have employed there. You might do well to look into that situation. I think there are many places where the Government is paying excessive rents. This may be one of them. I would like to have the gentleman tell me how many employees there are. There is nothing in the hearings to indicate how many there are. This is a comparatively small agency.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Approximately 600 people.

Mr. REES. Approximately 600 people.

Mr. BUCHANAN. And in three different buildings.

Mr. REES. Under this bill you would spend as much as it cost to build the Supreme Court Building when it was erected. But in view of the present conditions let us make sure that we are pretty fairly well insured. I think the authority of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to examine banks is a good one.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. REES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BUCHANAN. In the last 16 years there have been some 412 cases of bank suspensions involving payment to the depositors of $316,000,000 of which approximately $290,000,000 were bank assets and only $26,000,000 came from the fund.

Mr. REES. It is a splendid record. I agree with the gentleman. I think it ought to be understood that the assets of the bank are used before this deposit account is called upon to supplement it. Most of the bank failures came during the years before the act was put into effect rather than in the 16 years in which it has been in effect.

I, too, want to commend the management of the FDIC for the splendid service it has rendered. According to the figures submitted, there is presently on deposit in the insured institutions in round figures, $156,800,000,000, of which $76,000,000,000 is presently insured.

Under this legislation insured deposits will be increased approximately $12,000,000,000, making a total of $88,000,000,000 that would be covered under this bill.

The insurance fund presently amounts to $1,200,000,000. Although the fund is comparatively small, it is fair to observe that the Comptroller of the Currency and State banking departments and the FDIC have, since the enactment of this act, done a pretty good job in the examination of banks. Of course, it ought to be observed, too, that during the past few years, economic conditions have been such that there should be no occasion for bank failures.

Because reference has been made to the question as to who pays the insurance fees, it ought to be observed that the fees are paid from the profits of the insured banks.

I think the provision in the bill authorizing FDIC to examine the banks, if and when deemed necessary, is a good one. It will give the agency opportunity to conduct such examinations if and when they have reason to believe there is a likelihood of a bank becoming insolvent.

I would like to make one further observation. It is that in view of present uncertain conditions, it is quite important that the insurance fund be kept as strong as can be done so that in the event of emergency, the depositors in the banks will be amply protected.

The section provides for the authorization for the construction of a building for the FDIC at a cost of $15,000,000.

I do not believe it is good policy for our Government, especially in view of our present situation, to authorize the expenditure of $15,000,000 for this purpose.

There is nothing in the hearing to indicate the number of employees in the organization. Assuming there are 600, that means $25,000 expenditure for each employee. Right now we are talking about the shortage of copper, of steel, and other building materials; also need of skilled labor. The President has just delivered an address asking for certain curtailment of building materials. It would not look very well for the Government to be authorizing this building, which may be fine if we could afford it. Our Government agencies should be first to set example of curtailment of unnecessary buildings. I think it would be more sensible to leave the $15,000,000 in the fund to help guarantee bank deposits. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to strike that section from the bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DEANE].

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Chairman, this legislation needs no particular advocate on the part of any of us. Perhaps the only question at issue will be the formula involving the payment of dividends which has been discussed. I feel we should be cautious in our move to amend the bill. Let me point out the fact that the increase from $5,000 to $10,000 is only a 15-percent increase in the liability of the fund. The percentage of deposits now covered represents 48.8 percent. The percent of deposits covered by the bill before us is 56.1 percent, representing a difference of 15 percent. I also wish to pay my high tribute to the banking fraternity. Since the passage of the original FDIC legislation we have seen a complete change in the thinking of bank officials. You will not find anywhere in the country a more earnest, sincere group of individuals and they are doing a good job. The passage of the original FDIC legislation and the strengthened banking legislation of the various States has stabilized the banking industry and created faith on the part of depositors which formerly did not exist.

I wish to make this observation, Mr. Chairman, and that concerns the methods used by FDIC in coming to the assistance of insured banks that are in need of assistance. It is generally the policy of FDIC to avoid bank receiverships unless the conditions are such that warrant such a course of action. Instead the Corporation uses its authority by the merger of banks with financial aid of FDIC. In the table below I show the comparison of the two approaches or methods:

Number of depositors, amount of deposits, recoveries, and losses in insured banks placed in receivership or merged with the financial aid of the Corporation, 1934–48

Item	Total	Banks placed in receivership [1]	Banks merged with financial aid of FDIC
Number of banks	407	245	162
Number of depositors	1,342,290	382,766	959,524
Estimated number with no loss	1,285,010	325,486	959,524
Estimated number with some loss [2]	2,509	2,509
Estimated number with claims barred by termination of insurance or receivership [3]	54,771	54,771
Amount of deposits	$522,678,000	$109,603,000	$413,075,000
Estimated recovery by depositors	$520,347,000	$107,272,000	$413,075,000
Estimated loss by depositors	$1,883,000	$1,883,000
Insurance terminated or claims barred	$448,000	$448,000
Disbursement by FDIC	$266,976,000	$87,039,000	$179,937,000
Estimated loss to FDIC	$24,930,000	$14,535,000	$10,395,000

[1] The figures given in this table for number of depositors in receiverships differ from those in the 1947 Annual Report due to the final disposition of 6,585 claims, the status of which had been unsettled but were previously tabulated as fully insured. Of these, 4,333 when settled became barred claims; the balance, 2,252, were considered fully insured and the claims paid. The estimated number of depositors with no loss was reduced by 358 restricted claims which were paid in full or into a trust fund until claimed by the depositors. An adjustment of 1 depositor in the total number has also been made.

[2] 1,502 depositors will lose an estimated $1,841,000 in accounts which exceeded the limit of $5,000 insurance and were not otherwise protected, and 1,007 depositors will lose about $42,000 in accounts which had been restricted or deferred prior to 1924, or were otherwise ineligible for insurance protection.

[3] Of these 54,771 claims, it is estimated that 2,810 will be fully paid or held in trust, and 4,422 will be partially paid.

How does the second approach work? I refer now to the authority of the FDIC to extend funds and direct the merger of the bank that needs assistance with a going institution. I can give you a recent concrete example.

About noon on a recent Saturday the phone rang in the offices of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation here in Washington. An insured bank in North Carolina had "over-loaned," as short of cash, and in difficulty.

Within an hour responsible members of the staff and field representatives had been dispatched to the scene. Through the night and all day Sunday, while the majority of us relaxed, these men toiled in the magnificent tradition of Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

The result?

What in the years before 1933 would have been a catastrophe to this North Carolina community—hysterical depositors, hard-pressed borrowers, and the other elements which constitute panic—were absent. The situation was well in hand and normal—another example of Federal deposit insurance in action.

By time for the bank to open on Monday morning, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation was able to announce that no depositor of the bank would suffer the loss of a penny. In conjunction with Gurney P. Hood, commissioner of banks for North Carolina, FDIC's Chairman, Maple T. Harl, had arranged a plan that would protect all depositors, assure continuity of banking services in the area and prevent undue strain upon the bank's borrowers or the economic life of the community.

Under terms of the plan, FDIC advanced about $1,500,000 in cash to cover all deposit liabilities of this bank and will take over all its assets. A neighborhood bank, as a result of the action of the Corporation, will assume all of the deposit liabilities, with the cash to back them, and will establish branch offices in the two locations served by the outgoing bank. Meanwhile, there will be no interruption to banking service in the communities involved.

Of equal importance is the fact that Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation will liquidate the assets of the outgoing bank. The Corporation, like any well-run business, wants maximum recovery on its cash advance. But unlike an individual bank it has no need to force immediate sale or foreclosure. It liquidates the assets it acquires in an orderly manner with due regard for economic conditions in the community and so achieves both minimum strain in the area and maximum recoveries.

During the more than 16 years of its operation, Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation had previously been called upon to protect 1,350,000 depositors in insured banks that encountered difficulty. For this reason it disbursed $340,000,000 of which it estimates its losses will be $25,000,000.

The present case is the seventh in North Carolina which has benefited from FDIC aid. In the early days of the Corporation, two insured banks were placed in receivership and their depositors paid in cash by FDIC. More recently, since the merger technique of protection was authorized by Congress, four banks were aided by the Corporation.

The 8,000 depositors of these six banks will be eternally grateful for the prompt protection they received, just as will the depositors in the bank that was taken over last week.

It is gratifying to me to see the harmonious and effective cooperation of the Corporation with State bank supervisory authorities. Our North Carolina commissioner of banks, Gurney P. Hood, and Maple T. Harl, Chairman of FDIC, have worked in harness and in harmony for many years. In their examinations of banks, in their correlation of supervisory standards, and in their operations when difficulty strikes a bank, they share a philosophy as simple as it is effective. "The insured depositor shall not suffer," they say, and the record proves they mean what they say.

Great credit for the remarkably good record of banking during the past 16 years must also be given to the bankers themselves. They, too, are determined to run sound and safe institutions and they are working constantly to that end. Not only do senior bankers finance professional schooling for their staffs—they go regularly to graduate schools and seminars themselves. The average banker is constantly on the alert for new devices and new techniques that will improve the safety and efficiency of his institution. Furthermore, he welcomes the periodic visits of State and Federal supervisory authorities. The exchange of ideas and experiences is good for everyone—especially the depositors.

The benefits of Federal Deposit Insurance now protect more than 104,000,000 deposit accounts in 13,650 banks throughout the Nation.

The mere existence of this insurance is a great psychological aid to stability of our economy. Each instance of "Federal Deposit Insurance in Action," like this in North Carolina, strengthens the faith of depositors in the banks and in the Corporation which insures the safety and liquidity of their deposits in insured banks.

I should like to congratulate Chairman Harl and his efficient staff not only upon another job well done, but also upon the permanent contribution the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, under outstanding management, has made to the financial and social welfare of this Nation.

It is my understanding that we are now in the seventh year without the failure of an insured bank and without loss to any depositor in an insured bank. This is an all-time record in this Nation's history for banking stability and depositor safety.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat what I said in my opening statement. I know there are members of our committee who are sincere in thinking that the banking formula, this formula that is being proposed, should be amended, but we should be very careful as we amend the bill. As our distinguished chairman mentioned in the very beginning, all administrative costs and losses, and all other liability factors must first be absorbed before the return of any dividend, which will in my opinion fully safeguard the fund.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, is hereby withdrawn as a part of that act and is made a separate act to be known as the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

SEC. 2. The Federal Deposit Insurance Act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 1. There is hereby created a Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the Corporation) which shall insure, as hereinafter provided, the deposits of all banks which are entitled to the benefits of insurance under this act, and which shall have the powers hereinafter granted.

"SEC. 2. The management of the Corporation shall be vested in a Board of Directors consisting of three members, one of whom shall be the Comptroller of the Currency, and two of whom shall be citizens of the United States to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. One of the appointive members shall be the Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Corporation and not more than two of the members of such Board of Directors shall be members of the same political party. Each such appointive member shall hold office for a term of 6 years. In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Comptroller of the Currency, and pending the appointment of his successor, or during the absence of the Comptroller from Washington, the Acting Comptroller of the Currency shall be a member of the Board of Directors in the place and stead of the Comptroller. In the event of a vacancy in the office of the Chairman of the Board of Directors, and pending the appointment of his successor, the Comptroller of the Currency shall act as Chairman. The members of the Board of Directors shall be ineligible during the time they are in office and for 2 years thereafter to hold any office, position, or employment in any insured bank, except that this restriction shall not apply to any member who has served the full term for which he was appointed. No member of the Board of Directors shall be an officer or director of any insured bank or Federal Reserve bank or hold stock in any insured bank; and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Board of Directors he shall certify under oath that he has complied with this requirement and such certification shall be filed with the secretary of the Board of Directors.

"(b) Every national member bank which is authorized to commence or resume the business of banking, and which is engaged in the business of receiving deposits other than trust funds as herein defined, and every such national nonmember bank which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System, and every State bank which is converted into a national member bank or which becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System, and which is engaged in the business of receiving deposits, other than trust funds as herein defined, shall be an insured bank from the time it is authorized to commence or resume business or becomes a member of the Federal Reserve System. The certificate herein prescribed shall be issued to the Corporation by the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of such national member bank, or by the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the case of such State member bank: Provided, That in the case of an insured bank which is admitted to membership in the Federal Reserve System or an insured State bank which is converted into a national member bank, such certificate shall not be required, and the bank shall continue as an insured bank. Such certificate shall state that the bank is authorized to transact the business of banking in the case of a national member bank, or is a member of the Federal Reserve System in the case of a State member bank, and that consideration has been given to the factors enumerated in section 6.

"SEC. 5. Subject to the provisions of this act, any national nonmember bank which is engaged in the business of receiving deposits, other than trust funds as herein defined, upon application by the bank and certification by the Comptroller of the Currency in the manner prescribed in subsection (b) of section 4 and any State nonmember bank, upon application to and examination by the Corporation and approval by the Board of Directors, may become an insured bank. Before approving the application of any such State nonmember bank, the Board of Directors shall give consideration to the factors enumerated in section 6 and shall determine, upon the basis of a thorough examination of such bank, that its assets in excess of its capital requirements are adequate to enable it to meet all of its liabilities to depositors and other creditors as shown by the books of the bank.

"SEC. 6. The factors to be enumerated in the certificate required under section 4 and to be considered by the Board of Directors under section 5 shall be the following: The financial history and condition of the bank, the adequacy of its capital structure, its future earnings prospects, the general character of its management, the convenience and needs of the community to be served by the bank, and whether or not its corporate powers are consistent with the purposes of this act.

"SEC. 7. (a) The assessment rate shall be one-twelfth of 1 percent per annum. The semiannual assessment for each insured bank shall be in the amount of the product of one-half the annual assessment rate multiplied by the assessment base. The assessment base shall be the amount of the liability of the bank for deposits, according to the definition of the term 'deposit' in and pursuant to subsection (l) of section 3, without any deduction for indebtedness of depositors: Provided, That the bank—

"(1) may deduct (i) from the deposit balance due to an insured bank the deposit balance due from such insured bank (other than trust funds deposited by it in such bank) which is subject to immediate withdrawal; (ii) trust funds held by the bank in a fiduciary capacity and which are deposited in another insured bank; and (iii) cash items as determined by either of the following methods, at the option of the bank: (aa) By multiplying by 2 the total of the cash items forwarded for collection on the assessment base days (being the days on which the average deposits are computed) and cash items held for clearings at the close of business on said days, which are in the process of collection and which the bank has paid in the regular course of business or credited to deposit accounts; or (bb) by deducting the total of cash items forwarded for collection on the assessment base days and cash items held for clearings at the close of business on said days, which are in the process of collection and which the bank has paid in the regular course of business or credited to deposit accounts, plus such uncollected items paid or credited on preceding days which are in the process of collection: Provided, That the Board of Directors may define the terms 'cash items,' 'process of collection,' and 'uncollected items' and shall fix the maximum period for which any such item may be deducted; and

"(2) may exclude from its assessment base (i) drafts drawn by it on deposit accounts in other insured banks which are issued in the regular course of business; and (ii) cash funds which are received and held solely for the purpose of securing a liability to the bank but not in an amount in excess of such liability, and which are not subject to withdrawal by the obligor and are carried in a special non-interest-bearing account designated to properly show their purpose.

Each insured bank, as a condition to the right to make any such deduction or exclusion in determining its assessment base, shall maintain such records as will readily permit verification of the correctness thereof. The semiannual assessment base for one semiannual period shall be the average of the assessment base of the bank as of the close of business on March 31 and June 30, and the semiannual assessment base for the other semiannual period shall be the average of the assessment base of the bank as of the close of business on September 30 and December 31: Provided, That when any of said days is a nonbusiness day or a legal holiday, either National or State, the preceding business day shall be used. The certified statements required to be filed with the Corporation under subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall be in such form and set forth such supporting information as the Board of Directors shall prescribe. The assessment payments required from insured banks under subsections (b) and (c) of this section shall be made in such manner and at such time or times as the Board of Directors shall prescribe provided the time or times so prescribed shall not be later than 60 days after filing the certified statement setting forth the amount of assessment.

"(b) On or before the 15th day of July of each year, each insured bank shall file with the Corporation a certified statement showing for the 6 months ending on the preceding June 30 the amount of the assessment base and the amount of the semiannual assessment due to the Corporation for the period ending on the following December 31 determined in accordance with subsection (a) of this section, which shall contain or be verified by a written declaration that it is made under the penalties of perjury. Each insured bank shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the semiannual assessment it is required to certify. On or before the 15th day of January of each year, each insured bank shall file with the Corporation a similar certified statement for the 6 months ending on the preceding December 31 and shall pay to the Corporation the amount of the semiannual assessment for the period ending on the following June 30 which it is required to certify.

"(c) Each bank which becomes an insured bank shall not be required to file any certified statement or pay any assessment for the semiannual period in which it becomes an insured bank. On the expiration of such period, each such bank shall comply with the provisions of subsection (b) of this section except that the semiannual assessment base for its first certified statement shall be the assessment base of the bank as of the close of business on the preceding June 30 or December 31, whichever is applicable, determined in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. If such bank has assumed the liabilities for deposits of another bank or banks, it shall include such liabilities in its assessment base. The first certified statement shall show as the amount of the first semiannual assessment due to the Corporation, an amount equal to the product of one-half of the annual assessment rate multiplied by such assessment base.

"(d) As of December 31, 1949, and each calendar year thereafter, the Corporation shall transfer 40 percent of its net assessment income to its capital account and the balance of the net assessment income shall be credited pro rata to the insured banks based upon the assessments of each bank during said calendar year. Such credits shall be applied by the Corporation toward the payment of the total assessments becoming due for the semiannual assessment period beginning the next ensuing July 1. The term 'net assessment income' as used herein means the total assessments which become due during the calendar year less (1) the operating costs and expenses of the Corporation for the calendar year; (2) additions to reserve to provide for insurance losses during the calendar year, except that any adjustments to reserve which result in a reduction of such reserve shall be added; and (3) the insurance losses sustained in said calendar year plus losses from any preceding years in excess of such reserves. If the above deductions exceed in amount the total assessments which become due during the calendar year, the amount of such excess shall be restored by deduction from total assessments becoming due in subsequent years.

"(e) The Corporation (1) may refund to an insured bank any payment of assessment in excess of the amount due to the Corporation or (2) may credit such excess toward the payment of the assessment next becoming due from such bank and upon succeeding assessments until the credit is exhausted.

"(f) Any insured bank which fails to file any certified statement required to be filed by it in connection with determining the amount of any assessment payable by the bank to the Corporation may be compelled to file such statement by mandatory injunction or other appropriate remedy in a suit brought for such purpose by the Corporation against the bank and any officer or officers thereof in any court of the United States of competent jurisdiction in the District or Territory in which such bank is located.

"(g) The Corporation, in a suit brought at law or in equity in any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be entitled to recover from any insured bank the amount of any unpaid assessment lawfully payable by such insured bank to the Corporation, whether or not such bank shall have filed any such certified statement and whether or not suit shall have been brought to compel the bank to file any such statement. No action or proceeding shall be brought for the recovery of any assessment due to the Corporation, or for the recovery of any amount paid to the Corporation in excess of the amount due to it, unless such action or proceeding shall have been brought within 5 years after the right accrued for which the claim is made, except where the insured bank has made or filed with the Corporation a false or fraudulent certified statement with the intent to evade, in whole or in part, the payment of assessment, in which case the claim shall not be deemed to have acrued until the discovery by the Corporation that the certified statement is false or fraudulent: Providing, however, That where a cause of action has already accrued, and the period herein prescribed within which an action may be brought has expired, or will expire within 1 year from the date this amendment becomes effective, an action may be brought on such cause of action within 1 year from the effective date of this amendment: And provided further, That no action or proceeding shall be brought for the recovery of any assessment on deposits alleged to have been omitted from the assessment base of any insured bank for any year prior to 1945 except that any claim of the Corporation for the payment of any assessment may be offset by it against any claim of the bank for the overpayment of any assessment.

"(h) Should any national member bank or any insured national nonmember bank fail to file any certified statement required to be filed by such bank under any provision of this section, or fail to pay any assessment required to be paid by such bank under any provision of this act, and should the bank not correct such failure within 30 days after written notice has been given by the Corporation to an officer of the bank, citing this subsection, and stating that the bank has failed to file or pay as required by law, all the rights, privileges, and franchises of the bank granted to it under the National Bank Act, as amended, the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, or this act, shall be thereby forfeited. Whether or not the penalty provided in this subsection has been incurred shall be determined and adjudged in the manner provided in the sixth paragraph of section 2 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended. The remedies provided in this subsection and in the two preceding subsections shall not be construed as limiting any other remedies against any insured bank, but shall be in addition thereto.

"(i) Trust funds held by an insured bank in a fiduciary capacity whether held in its trust or deposited in any other department or in another bank shall be insured in an amount not to exceed $10,000 for each trust estate, and when deposited by the fiduciary bank in another insured bank such trust funds shall be similarly insured to the fiduciary bank according to the trust estates represented. Notwithstanding any other provision of this act, such insurance shall be separate from and additional to that covering other deposits of the owners of such trust funds or the beneficiaries of such trust estates: Provided, That where the fiduciary bank deposits any of such trust funds in other insured banks the amount so held by other insured banks on deposit shall not for the purpose of any certified statement required under subsections (b) and (c) of this section be considered to be a deposit liability of the fiduciary bank, but shall be considered to be a deposit liability of the bank in which such funds are so deposited by such fiduciary bank. The Board of Directors shall have power by regulation to prescribe the manner of reporting and of depositing such trust funds.

"SEC. 8. (a) Any insured bank (except a national member bank or State member bank) may, upon not less than 90 days' written notice to the Corporation, and to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation if it owns or holds as pledgee any preferred stock, capital notes, or debentures of such bank, terminate its status as an insured bank. Whenever the Board of Directors shall find that an insured bank or its directors or trustees have continued unsafe or unsound practices in conducting the business of such bank, or have knowingly or negligently permitted any of its officers or agents to violate any provision of any law or regulation to which the insured bank is subject, the Board of Directors shall first give to the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of a national bank or a District bank, to the authority having supervision of the bank in the case of a State bank, or to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System in the case of a State member bank, a statement with respect to such practices or violations for the purpose of securing the correction thereof and shall give a copy thereof to the bank. Unless such correction shall be made within 120 days or such shorter period of time as the Comptroller of the Currency, the State authority, or Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, as the case may be, shall require, the Board of Directors, if it shall determine to proceed further, shall give to the bank not less than 30 days' written notice of intention to terminate the status of the bank as an insured bank, and shall fix a time and place for a hearing before the Board of Directors or before a person designated by it to conduct such hearing, at which evidence may be produced, and upon such evidence the Board of Directors shall make written findings which shall be conclusive. Unless the bank shall appear at the hearing by a duly authorized representative, it shall be deemed to have consented to the termination of its status as an insured bank. If the Board of Directors shall find that any unsafe or unsound practice or violation specified in such notice has been established and has not been corrected within the time above prescribed in which to make such corrections, the Board of Directors may order that the insured status of the bank be terminated on a date subsequent to such finding and to the expiration of the time specified in such notice of intention. The Corporation may publish notice of such termination and the bank shall give notice of such termination to each of its depositors at his last address of record on the books of the bank, in such manner and at such time as the Board of Directors may find to be necessary and may order for the protection of depositors. After the termination of the insured status of any bank under the provisions of this subsection, the insured deposits of each depositor in the bank on the date of such termination, less all subsequent withdrawals from any deposits of such depositor, shall continue for a period of 2 years to be insured, and the bank shall continue to pay to the Corporation assessments as in the case of an insured bank during such period. No additions to any such deposits and no new deposits in such bank made after the date of such termination shall be insured by the Corporation, and the bank shall not advertise or hold itself out as having insured deposits unless in the same connection it shall also state with equal prominence that such additions to deposits and new deposits made after such date are not so insured. Such bank shall, in all other respects, be subject to the duties and obligations of an insured bank for the period of 2 years from the date of such termination, and in the event that such bank shall be closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors within such period of 2 years, the Corporation shall have the same powers and rights with respect to such bank as in case of an insured bank.

"(b) Whenever the insured status of a State member bank shall be terminated by action of the Board of Directors, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System shall terminate its membership in the Federal Reserve System in accordance with the provisions of section 9 of the Federal Reserve Act, and whenever the insured status of a national member bank shall be so terminated the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint a receiver for the bank, which shall be the Corporation. Whenever a member bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, its status as an insured bank shall, without notice or other action by the Board of Directors, terminate on the date the bank shall cease to be a member of the Federal Reserve System, with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the Board of Directors after proceedings under subsection (a) of this section.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever the Board of Directors shall determine that an insured banking institution is not engaged in the business of receiving deposits, other than trust funds as herein defined, the Corporation shall notify the banking institution that its insured status will terminate at the expiration of the first full semiannual assessment period following such notice. A finding by the Board of Directors that a banking institution is not engaged in the business of receiving deposits, other than such trust funds, shall be conclusive. The Board of Directors shall prescribe the notice to be given by the banking institution of such termination and the Corporation may publish notice thereof. Upon the termination of the insured status of any such banking institution, its deposits shall thereupon cease to be insured and the banking institution shall thereafter be relieved of all future obligations to the Corporation, including the obligation to pay future assessments.

"(d) Whenever the liabilities of an insured bank for deposits shall have been assumed by another insured bank or banks, the insured status of the bank whose liabilities are so assumed shall terminate on the date of receipt by the Corporation of satisfactory evidence of such assumption with like effect as if its insured status had been terminated on said date by the Board of Directors after proceedings under subsection (a) of this section: Provided, That if the bank whose liabilities are so assumed gives to its depositors notice of such assumption within 30 days after such assumption takes effect, by publication or by any reasonable means, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Board of Directors, the insurance of its deposits shall terminate at the end of 6 months from the date such assumption takes effect. Such bank shall be subject to the duties and obligations of an insured bank for the period its deposits are insured: Provided, That if the deposits are assumed by a newly insured bank, the bank whose deposits are assumed shall not be required to pay any assessment upon the deposits which have been so assumed after the semiannual period in which the assumption takes effect.

"SEC. 9. Upon the date of enactment of the Banking Act of 1933, the Corporation shall become a body corporate and as such shall have power—

"First. To adopt and use a corporate seal.

"Second. To have succession until dissolved by an act of Congress.

"Third. To make contacts.

"Fourth. To sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any court of law or equity, State or Federal. All suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity to which the Corporation shall be a party shall be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States: Provided, That any such suit to which the Corporation is a party in its capacity as receiver of a State bank and which involves only the rights or obligations of depositors, creditors, stockholders, and such State bank under State law shall not be deemed to arise under the laws of the United States. Except as otherwise provided in sections 7 (g), 11 (g), and 12 (e), no suit by or against the Corporation shall be allowed unless it shall have been brought within 5 years after the right accrued on which suit is brought. No attachment or execution shall be issued against the Corporation or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding in any State, county, municipal, or United States court. The Board of Directors shall designate an agent upon whom service of process may be made in any State, Territory, or jurisdiction in which any insured bank is located.

"Fifth. To appoint by its Board of Directors such officers and employees as are not otherwise provided for in this act, to define their duties, fix their compensation, require bonds of them and fix the penalty thereof, and to dismiss at pleasure such officers or employees. Nothing in this or any other act shall be construed to prevent the appointment and compensation as an officer or employee of the Corporation of any officer or employee of the United States in any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department thereof.

"Sixth. To prescribe, by its Board of Directors, bylaws not inconsistent with law, regulating the manner in which its general business may be conducted, and the privileges granted to it by law may be exercised and enjoyed.

"Seventh. To exercise by its Board of Directors, or duly authorized officers or agents, all powers specifically granted by the provisions of this act, and such incidental powers as shall be necessary to carry out the powers so granted.

"Eighth. To make examinations of and to require information and reports from banks, as provided in this act.

"Ninth. To act as receiver.

"Tenth. To prescribe by its Board of Directors such rules and regulations as it may deem necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 10. (a) The Board of Directors shall administer the affairs of the Corporation fairly and impartially and without discrimination. The Board of Directors of the Corporation shall determine and prescribe the manner in which its obligations shall be incurred and its expenses allowed and paid. The Corporation shall be entitled to the free use of the United States mails in the same manner as the executive departments of the Government. The Corportion with the consent of any Federal Reserve bank or of any board, commission, independent establishment, or executive department of the Government, including any field service thereof, may avail itself of the use of information, services, and facilities thereof in carrying out the provisions of this act.

"(b) The Board of Directors shall appoint examiners who shall have power, on behalf of the Corporation, to examine any insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank), any State nonmember bank making application to become an insured bank, and any closed insured bank, whenever in the judgment of the Board of Directors an examination of the bank is necessary. Such examiners shall have like power to examine, with the written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency, any national bank or District bank, and, with the written consent of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, any State member bank. Each such examiner shall have power to make a thorough examination of all the affairs of the bank and in doing so he shall have power to administer oaths and to examine and take and preserve the testimony of any of the officers and agents thereof, and shall make a full and detailed report of the condition of the bank to the Corporation. The Board of Directors in like manner shall appoint claim agents who shall have power to investigate and examine all claims for insured deposits and transferred deposits. Each claim agent shall have power to administer oaths and to examine under oath and take and preserve the testimony of any persons relating to such claims.

"(c) For the purpose of any hearing under this act, the Board of Directors, any member thereof or any person designated by the Board of Directors to conduct any such hearing, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, supbena any officer or employee of the insured bank, compel his attendance, take evidence, take depositions and require the production of any books, records, or other papers of the insured bank which are relevant or material to the inquiry. For the purpose of any hearing, examination, or investigation under this act, the Board of Directors may apply to any judge or clerk of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such hearing, examination, or investigation is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, to issue a subpena commanding each person to whom it is directed to attend and give testimony or for the taking of his deposition and to produce books, records, or other papers relevant or material to such hearing, examination, or investigation at a time and place and before a person therein specified. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of any such papers may be required from any place in any State or in any Territory or other place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States at any designated place where such a hearing is being held or such examination or investigation is being made: Provided, however, That the production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena with respect thereto, such person either has furnished as directed a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy) or has entered into a stipulation with any authorized representative of the Corporation as to the information contained in such documents. Witnesses subpenaed under this section shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"(d) In cases of refusal to obey a subpena issued to, or contumacy by, any person, the Board of Directors may invoke the aid of any court of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such hearing, examination or investigation is carried on, or where such person resides or carries on business, in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, records, or other papers. And such court may issue an order requiring such person to appear before the Board of Directors or member or person designated by the Board of Directors, there to produce records, if so ordered, or to give testimony touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. All process in any such case may be served in the judicial district whereof such person is an inhabitant or carries on business or wherever he may be found. No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, records, or other papers in obedience to a subpena issued under the authority of this act on the ground that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled to testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"(e) Each insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) shall make to the Corporation reports of condition in such form and at such times as the Board of Directors may require. The Board of Directors may require such reports to be published in such manner, not inconsistent with any applicable law, as it may direct. Every such bank which fails to make or publish any such report within such time, not less than 5 days, as the Board of Directors may require, shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 for each day of such failure recoverable by the Corporation for its use.

"(f) The Corporation shall have access to reports of examination made by, and reports of condition made to, the Comptroller of the Currency or any Federal Reserve bank, may accept any report made by or to any commission, board, or authority having supervision of a State nonmember bank (except a District bank), and may furnish to the Comptroller of the Currency, to any Federal Reserve bank, and to any such commission, board, or authority, reports of examinations made on behalf of, and reports of condition made to, the Corporation.

"(g) The Corporation may cause any and all records, papers, or documents kept by it or in its possession or custody to be photographed or microphotographed or otherwise reproduced upon film, which photographic film shall comply with the minimum standards of quality approved for permanent photographic records by the National Bureau of Standards. Such photographs, microphotographs, or photographic film or copies thereof shall be deemed to be an original record for all purposes, including introduction in evidence in all State and Federal courts or administrative agencies and shall be proof of any act, transaction, occurrence, or event therein recorded. Such photographs, microphotographs, or reproduction shall be preserved in such manner as the Board of Directors of the Corporation shall prescribe and the original records, papers, or documents may be destroyed or otherwise disposed of as the Board shall direct.

"SEC. 11. (a) The Temporary Federal Deposit Insurance Fund and the Fund For Mutuals heretofore created pursuant to the provisions of section 12B of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, are hereby consolidated into a Permanent Insurance Fund for insuring deposits, and the assets therein shall be held by the Corporation for the uses and purposes of the Corporation: Provided, That the obligations to and rights of the Corporation, depositors, banks, and other persons arising out of any event or transaction prior to the effective date of this amendment shall remain unimpaired. On and after August 23, 1935, the Corporation shall insure the deposits of all insured banks as provided in this Act: Provided further, That the insurance shall apply only to deposits of insured banks which have been made available since March 10, 1933, for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business: Provided further, That if any insured bank shall, without the consent of the Corporation, release or modify restrictions on or deferments of deposits which had not been made available for withdrawal in the usual course of the banking business on or before August 23, 1935, such deposits shall not be insured. The maximum amount of the insured deposit of any depositor shall be $10,000: And provided further, That in the case of banks closing prior to the effective date of this amendment, the maximum amount of the insured deposit of any depositor shall be $5,000.

"(b) For the purposes of this act an insured bank shall be deemed to have been closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors in any case in which it has been closed for the purpose of liquidation without adequate provision being made for payment of its depositors.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever the Comptroller of the Currency shall appoint a receiver other than a conservator of any insured national bank or insured District bank, he shall appoint the Corporation receiver for such closed bank.

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, it shall be the duty of the Corporation as such receiver to cause notice to be given, by advertisement in such newspapers as it may direct, to all persons having claims against such closed bank pursuant to section 5235 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 193); to realize upon the assets of such closed bank, having due regard to the condition of credit in the locality; to enforce the individual liability of the stockholders and directors thereof; and to wind up the affairs of such closed bank in conformity with the provisions of law relating to the liquidation of closed national banks, except as herein otherwise provided. The Corporation as such receiver shall pay to itself for its own account such portion of the amounts realized from such liquidation as it shall be entitled to receive on account of its subrogation to the claims of depositors, and it shall pay to depositors and other creditors the net amounts available for distribution to them. The Corporation as such receiver, however, may, in its discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time after the expiration of the period of advertisement made pursuant to the aforesaid section of the Revised Statutes, and no liability shall attach to the Corporation itself or as such receiver by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment. With respect to any such closed bank, the Corporation as such receiver shall have all the rights, powers, and privileges now possessed by or hereafter granted by law to a receiver of a national bank or district bank and notwithstanding any other provision of law in the exercise of such rights, powers, and privileges the Corporation shall not be subject to the direction or supervision of the Secretary of the Treasury or the Comptroller of the Currency.

"(e) Whenever any insured State bank (except a district bank) shall have been closed by action of its board of directors or by the authority having supervision of such bank, as the case may be, on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, the Corporation shall accept appointment as receiver thereof, if such appointment is tendered by the authority having supervision of such bank and is authorized or permitted by State law. With respect to any such insured State bank, the Corporation as such receiver shall possess all the rights, powers, and privileges granted by State law to a receiver of a State bank.

"(f) Whenever an insured bank shall have been closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, payment of the insured deposits in such bank shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible, subject to the provisions of subsection (g) of this section either (1) by cash or (2) by making available to each depositor a transferred deposit in a new bank in the same community or in another insured bank in an amount equal to the insured deposit of such depositor and subject to withdrawal on demand: Provided, That the Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed before paying the insured deposits, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the validity of a claim for an insured deposit, it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim.

"(g) In the case of a closed national bank or District bank, the Corporation, upon the payment to any depositor as provided in subsection (f) of this section, shall be subrogated to all rights of the depositor against the closed bank to the extent of such payment. In the case of any other closed insured bank, the Corporation shall not make any payment to any depositor until the right of the Corporation to be subrogated to the rights of such depositor on the same basis as provided in the case of a closed national bank under this act shall have been recognized either by express provision of State law, by allowance of claims by the authority having supervision of such bank, by assignment of claims by depositors, or by any other effective method. In the case of any closed insured bank, such subrogation shall include the right on the part of the Corporation to receive the same dividends from the proceeds of the assets of such closed bank and recoveries on account of stockholders' liability as would have been payable to the depositor on a claim for the insured deposit, but such depositor shall retain his claim for any uninsured portion of his deposit: Provided, That, with respect to any bank which closes after May 25, 1938, the Corporation shall waive, in favor only of any person against whom stockholders' individual liability may be asserted, any claim on account of such liability in excess of the liability, if any, to the bank or its creditors, for the amount unpaid upon his stock in such bank; but any such waiver shall be effected in such manner and on such terms and conditions as will not increase recoveries or dividends on account of claims to which the Corporation is not subrogated: Provided further, That the rights of depositors and other creditors of any State bank shall be determined in accordance with the applicable provisions of State law.

"(h) As soon as possible after the closing of an insured bank, the Corporation, if it finds that it is advisable and in the interest of the depositors of the closed bank or the public, shall organize a new national bank to assume the insured deposits of such closed bank and otherwise to perform temporarily the functions hereinafter provided for. The new bank shall have its place of business in the same community as the closed bank.

"(i) The articles of association and the organization certificate of the new bank shall be executed by representatives designated by the Corporation. No capital stock need be paid in by the Corporation. The new bank shall not have a board of directors, but shall be managed by an executive officer appointed by the Board of Directors of the Corporation who shall be subject to its directions. In all other respects the new bank shall be organized in accordance with the then existing provisions of law relating to the organization of national banking associations. The new bank may, with the approval of the Corporation, accept new deposits which shall be subject to withdrawal on demand and which, except where the new bank is the only bank in the community, shall not exceed $10,000 from any depositor. The new bank, without application to or approval by the Corporation, shall be an insured bank and shall maintain on deposit with the Federal Reserve bank of its district reserves in the amount required by law for member banks, but it shall not be required to subscribe for stock of the Federal Reserve bank. Funds of the new bank shall be kept on hand in cash, invested in obligations of the United States, or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, or deposited with the Corporation, with a Federal Reserve bank, or, to the extent of the insurance coverage thereon, with an insured bank. The new bank, unless otherwise authorized by the Comptroller of the Currency, shall transact no business except that authorized by this act and as may be incidental to its organization. Notwithstanding any other provision of law the new bank, its franchise, property, and income shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority.

"(j) Upon the organization of a new bank, the Corporation shall promptly make available to it an amount equal to the estimated insured deposits of such closed bank plus the estimated amount of the expenses of operating the new bank, and shall determine as soon as possible the amount due each depositor for his insured deposit in the closed bank, and the total expenses of operation of the new bank. Upon such determination, the amounts so estimated and made available shall be adjusted to conform to the amounts so determined. Earnings of the new bank shall be paid over or credited to the Corporation in such adjustment. If any new bank, during the period it continues its status as such, sustains any losses with respect to which it is not effectively protected except by reason of being an insured bank, the Corporation shall furnish to it additional funds in the amount of such losses. The new bank shall assume as transferred deposits the payment of the insured deposits of such closed bank to each of its depositors. Of the amounts so made available, the Corporation shall transfer to the new bank, in cash, such sums as may be necessary to enable it to meet its expenses of operation and immediate cash demands on such transferred deposits, and the remainder of such amounts shall be subject to withdrawal by the new bank on demand.

"(k) Whenever in the judgment of the Board of Directors it is desirable to do so, the Corporation shall cause capital stock of the new bank to be offered for sale on such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors shall deem advisable in an amount sufficient, in the opinion of the Board of Directors, to make possible the conduct of the business of the new bank on a sound basis, but in no event less than that required by section 5138 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 51), for the organization of a national bank in the place where such new bank is located. The stockholders of the closed insured bank shall be given the first opportunity to purchase any shares of common stock so offered. Upon proof that an adequate amount of capital stock in the new bank has been subscribed and paid for in cash, the Comptroller of the Currency shall require the articles of association and the organization certificate to be amended to conform to the requirements for the organization of a national bank, and thereafter, when the requirements of law with respect to the organization of a national bank have been complied with, he shall issue to the bank a certificate of authority to commence business, and thereupon the bank shall cease to have the status of a new bank, shall be managed by directors elected by its own shareholders and may exercise all the powers granted by law, and it shall be subject to all the provisions of law relating to national banks. Such bank shall thereafter be an insured national bank, without certification to or approval by the Corporation.

"(l) If the capital stock of the new bank is not offered for sale, or if an adequate amount of capital for such new bank is not subscribed and paid for, the Board of Directors may offer to transfer its business to any insured bank in the same community which will take over its assets, assume its liabilities, and pay to the Corporation for such business such amount as the Board of Directors may deem adequate; or the Board of Directors in its discretion may change the location of the new bank to the office of the Corporation or to some other place or may at any time wind up its affairs as herein provided. Unless the capital stock of the new bank is sold or its assets are taken over and its liabilities are assumed by an insured bank as above provided within 2 years from the date of its organization, the Corporation shall wind up the affairs of such bank, after giving such notice, if any, as the Comptroller of the Currency may require, and shall certify to the Comptroller of the Currency the termination of the new bank. Thereafter the Corporation shall be liable for the obligations of such bank and shall be the owner of its assets. The provisions of sections 5220 and 5221 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, secs. 181 and 182) shall not apply to such new banks.

"SEC. 12. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Corporation as receiver of a closed national bank or District bank shall not be required to furnish bond and shall have the right to appoint an agent or agents to assist it in its duties as such receiver, and all fees, compensation, and expenses of liquidation and administration thereof shall be fixed by the Corporation, and may be paid by it out of funds coming into its possession as such receiver.

"(b) Payment of an insured deposit to any person by the Corporation shall discharge the Corporation, and payment of a transferred deposit to any person by the new bank or by an insured bank in which a transferred deposit has been made available shall discharge the Corporation and such new bank or other insured bank, to the same extent that payment to such person by the closed bank would have discharged it from liability for the insured deposit.

"(c) Except as otherwise prescribed by the Board of Directors, neither the Corporation nor such new bank or other insured bank shall be required to recognize as the owner of any portion of a deposit appearing on the records of the closed bank under a name other than that of the claimant, any person whose name or interest as such owner is not disclosed on the records of such closed bank as part owner of said deposit, if such recognition would increase the aggregate amount of the insured deposits in such closed bank.

"(d) The Corporation may withhold payment of such portion of the insured deposit of any depositor in a closed bank as may be required to provide for the payment of any liability of such depositor as a stockholder of the closed bank, or of any liability of such depositor to the closed bank or its receiver, which is not offset against a claim due from such bank, pending the determination and payment of such liability by such depositor or any other person liable therefor.

"(e) If, after the Corporation shall have given at least 3 months' notice to the depositor by mailing a copy thereof to his last-known address appearing on the records of the closed bank, any depositor in the closed bank shall fail to claim his insured deposit from the Corporation within 18 months after the appointment of the receiver for the closed bank, or shall fail within such period to claim or arrange to continue the transferred deposit with the new bank or with the other insured bank which assumes liability therefor, all rights of the depositor against the Corporation with respect to the insured deposits, and against the new bank and such other insured bank with respect to the transferred deposit, shall be barred, and all rights of the depositor against the closed bank and its shareholders, or the receivership estate to which the Corporation may have become subrogated, shall thereupon revert to the depositor. The amount of any transferred deposits not claimed within such 18 months' period, shall be refunded to the Corporation.

"SEC. 13. (a) Money of the Corporation not otherwise employed shall be invested in obligations of the United States or in obligations guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States: Provided, That the Corporation shall not sell or purchase any such obligations for its own account and in its own right and interest, at any one time aggregating in excess of $100,000, without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury may waive the requirement of his approval with respect to any transaction or classes of transactions subject to the provisions of this subsection for such period of time and under such conditions as he may determine.

"(b) The banking or checking accounts of the Corporation shall be kept with the Treasurer of the United States, or, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, with a Federal Reserve bank, or with a bank designated as a depositary or fiscal agent of the United States: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury may waive the requirements of this subsection under such conditions as he may determine: And provided further, That this subsection shall not apply to the establishment and maintenance in any bank for temporary purposes of banking and checking accounts not in excess of $50,000 in any one bank, or to the establishment and maintenance in any bank of any banking and checking accounts to facilitate the payment of insured deposits, or the making of loans to, or the purchase of assets of, insured banks. When designated for that purpose by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Corporation shall be a depositary of public moneys, except receipt from customs, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the said Secretary, and may also be employed as a financial agent of the Government. It shall perform all such reasonable duties as depositary of public moneys and financial agent of the Government as may be required of it.

"(c) In order to reopen a closed insured bank or, when the Corporation has determined that an insured bank is in danger of closing, in order to prevent such closing, the Corporation, in the discretion of its Board of Directors, is authorized to make loans to, or purchase the assets of, or make deposits in, such insured bank, upon such terms and conditions as the Board of Directors may prescribe, when in the opinion of the Board of Directors the continued operation of such bank is essential to provide adequate banking service in the community. Such loans and deposits may be in subordination to the rights of depositors and other creditors.

"(d) Receivers or liquidators of insured banks closed on account of inability to meet the demands of their depositors shall be entitled to offer the assets of such banks for sale to the Corporation or as security for loans from the Corporation, upon receiving permission from the appropriate State authority in accordance with express provisions of State law in the case of insured State banks. The proceeds of every such sale or loan shall be utilized for the same purposes and in the same manner as other funds realized from the liquidation of the assets of such banks. In any case where prior to the effective date of this amendment, the Comptroller of the Currency has appointed a receiver of a closed national bank other than the Corporation, he may, in his discretion, pay dividends on proved claims at any time after the expiration of the period of advertisement made pursuant to section 5235 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 193), and no liability shall attach to the Comptroller of the Currency or to the receiver of any such national bank by reason of any such payment for failure to pay dividends to a claimant whose claim is not proved at the time of any such payment. The Corporation, in its discretion, may make loans on the security of or may purchase and liquidate or sell any part of the assets of an insured bank which is now or may hereafter be closed on account of inability to meet the demands of its depositors, but in any case in which the Corporation is acting as receiver of a closed insured bank, no such loan or purchase shall be made without the approval of a court of competent jurisdiction.

"(e) Whenever in the judgment of the Board of Directors such action will reduce the risk or avert a threatened loss to the Corporation and will facilitate a merger or consolidation of an insured bank with another insured bank, or will facilitate the sale of the assets of an open or closed insured bank to and assumption of its liabilities by another insured bank, the Corporation may, upon such terms and conditions as it may determine, make loans secured in whole or in part by assets of an open or closed insured bank, which loans may be in subordination to the rights of depositors and other creditors, or the Corporation may purchase any such assets or may guarantee any other insured bank against loss by reason of its assuming the liabilities and purchasing the assets of an open or closed insured bank. Any insured national bank or District bank, or the Corporation as receiver thereof, is authorized to contract for such sales or loans and to pledge any assets of the bank to secure such loans.

"(f) Prior to July 1, 1951, the Corporation shall pay out of its capital account to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Federal Reserve banks, respectively, an amount equal to 2 percent simple interest per annum on amounts advanced to the Corporation on stock subscriptions by the Secretary of the Treasury and such banks, from the time of such advances until the amounts thereof were repaid.

"SEC. 14. The Corporation is authorized to borrow from the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to loan to the Corporation on such terms as may be fixed by the Corporation and the Secretary, such funds as in the judgment of the Board of Directors of the Corporation are from time to time required for insurance purposes, not exceeding in the aggregate $3,000,000,000 outstanding at any one time: Provided, That the rate of interest to be charged in connection with any loan made pursuant to this section shall not be less than the current average rate on outstanding marketable and nonmarketable obligations of the United States as of the last day of the month preceding the making of such loan. For such purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to use as a public-debt transaction the proceeds of the sale of any securities hereafter issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, and the purposes for which securities may be issued under the Second Liberty Bond Act, as amended, are extended to include such loans. Any such loan shall be used by the Corporation solely in carrying out its functions with respect to such insurance. All loans and repayments under this section shall be treated as public-debt transactions of the United States.

"SEC. 15. All notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations issued by the Corporation shall be exempt, both as to principal and interest, from all taxation (except estate and inheritance taxes) now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority: Provided, That interest upon or any income from any such obligations and gain from the sale or other disposition of such obligations shall not have any exemption, as such, and loss from the sale or other disposition of such obligations shall not have any special treatment, as such, under the Internal Revenue Code, or laws amendatory or supplementary thereto. The Corporation, including its franchise, its capital, reserves, and surplus, and its income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any Territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

"SEC. 16. In order that the Corporation may be supplied with such forms of notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations as it may need for issuance under this act, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare such forms as shall be suitable and approved by the Corporation, to be held in the Treasury subject to delivery, upon order of the Corporation. The engraved plates, dies, bed pieces, and other material executed in connection therewith shall remain in the custody of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Corporation shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any expenses incurred in the preparation, custody, and delivery of such notes, debentures, bonds, or other such obligations.

"SEC. 17. (a) The Corporation shall annually make a report of its operations to the Congress as soon as practicable after the 1st day of January in each year.

"(b) The financial transactions of the Corporation shall be audited by the General Accounting Office in accordance with the principles and procedures applicable to commercial corporate transactions and under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States. The audit shall be conducted at the place or places where accounts of the Corporation are normally kept. The representatives of the General Accounting Office shall have access to all books, accounts, records, reports, files, and all other papers, things, or property belonging to or in use by the Corporation pertaining to its financial transactions and necessary to facilitate the audit, and they shall be afforded full facilities, for verifying transactions with the balances or securities held by depositaries, fiscal agents, and custodians. All such books, accounts, records, reports, files, papers, and property of the Corporation shall remain in possession and custody of the Corporation. The audit shall begin with financial transactions occurring on and after August 31, 1948.

"(c) A report of the audit for each fiscal year ending on June 30 shall be made by the Comptroller General to the Congress not later than January 15 following the close of such fiscal year. On or before December 15 following such fiscal year the Comptroller General shall furnish the Corporation a short form report showing the financial position of the Corporation at the close of the fiscal year. The report to the Congress shall set forth the scope of the audit and shall include a statement of assets and liabilities and surplus or deficit; a statement of surplus or deficit analysis; a statement of income and expenses; a statement of sources and application of funds and such comments and information as may be deemed necessary to inform Congress of the financial operations and condition of the Corporation, together with such recommendations with respect thereto as the Comptroller General may deem advisable. The report shall also show specifically any program, expenditure, or other financial transaction or undertaking observed in the course of the audit, which, in the opinion of the Comptroller General, has been carried on or made without authority of law. A copy of each report shall be furnished to the President, to the Secretary of the Treasury, and to the Corporation at the time submitted to the Congress.

"(d) For the purpose of conducting such audit the Comptroller General is authorized in his discretion to employ by contract, without regard to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, professional services of firms and organizations of certified public accountants, with the concurrence of the Corporation, for temporary periods or for special purposes. The Corporation shall reimburse the General Accounting Office for the cost of any such audit as billed therefor by the Comptroller General, and the General Accounting Office shall deposit the sums so reimbursed into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"SEC. 18. (a) Every insured bank shall display at each place of business maintained by it a sign or signs, and shall include in advertisements relating to deposits a statement, to the effect that its deposits are insured by the Corporation. The Board of Directors shall prescribe by regulation the forms of such signs and the manner of display and the substance of such statements and the manner of use. For each day an insured bank continues to violate any provisions of this subsection or any lawful provisions of said regulations, it shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100, which the Corporation may recover for its use.

"(b) No insured bank shall pay any dividends on its capital stock or interest on its capital notes or debentures (if such interest is required to be paid only out of net profits) or distribute any of its capital assets while it remains in default in the payment of any assessment due to the Corporation; and any director or officer of any insured bank who participates in the declaration or payment of any such dividend or interest or in any such distribution shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both: Provided, That, if such default is due to a dispute between the insured bank and the Corporation over the amount of such assessment, this subsection shall not apply, if such bank shall deposit security satisfactory to the Corporation for payment upon final determination of the issue.

"(c) Without the prior written consent of the Corporation, no insured bank shall (1) merge or consolidate with any noninsured bank or institution or convert into a noninsured institution or assume liability to pay any deposits made in, or similar liabilities of, any noninsured bank or institution or (2) transfer assets to any noninsured bank or institution in consideration of the assumption of liability for any portion of the deposits made in such insured bank, and no insured State nonmember bank (except a District bank) without such consent shall reduce the amount or retire any part of its common or preferred capital stock, or retire any part of its capital notes or debentures.

"(d) No State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank) shall establish and operate any new branch unless it shall have the prior written consent of the Corporation, and no State nonmember insured bank (except a District bank) shall move its main office or any branch from one location to another without such consent. The factors to be considered in granting or withholding the consent of the Corporation under this subsection shall be those enumerated in section 6 of this act.

"(e) The Corporation may require any insured bank to provide protection and indemnity against burglary, defalcation, and other similar insurable losses. Whenever any insured bank refuses to comply with any such requirement the Corporation may contract for such protection and indemnity and add the cost thereof to the assessment otherwise payable by such bank.

"(f) Whenever any insured bank (except a national bank or a District bank), after written notice of the recommendations of the Corporation based on a report of examination of such bank by an examiner of the Corporation, shall fail to comply with such recommendations within 120 days after such notice, the Corporation shall have the power, and is hereby authorized, to publish only such part of such report of examination as relates to any recommendation not complied with: Provided, That notice of intention to make such publication shall be given to the bank at least 90 days before such publication is made.

"(g) The Board of Directors shall by regulations prohibit the payment of interest on demand deposits in insured nonmember banks and for such purpose it may define the term 'demand deposits'; but such exceptions from this prohibition shall be made as are now or many hereafter be prescribed with respect to deposits payable on demand in member banks by section 19 of the Federal Reserve Act, as amended, or by regulation of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. The Board of Directors shall from time to time limit by regulation the rates of interest or dividends which may be paid by insured nonmember banks on time and savings deposits, but such regulations shall be consistent with the contractual obligations of such banks to their depositors. For the purpose of fixing such rates of interest or dividends, the Board of Directors shall by regulation prescribed different rates for such payment on time and savings deposits having different maturities, or subject to different conditions respecting withdrawal or repayment, or subject to different conditions by reason of different locations, or according to the varying discount rates of member banks in the several Federal Reserve districts. The Board of Directors shall by regulation define what constitutes time and savings deposits in an insured nonmember bank. Such regulations shall prohibit any insured nonmember bank from paying any time deposit before its maturity except upon such conditions and in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Board of Directors, and from waiving any requirement of notice before payment of any savings deposit except as to all savings deposits having the same requirement. For each violation of any provision of this subsection or any lawful provision of such regulations relating to the payment of interest or dividends on deposits or to withdrawal of deposits, the offending bank shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100, which the Corporation may recover for its use.

"(h) Any insured bank which willfully fails or refuses to file any certified statement or pay any assessment required under this act shall be subject to a penalty of not more than $100 for each day that such violations continue, which penalty the Corporation may recover for its use: Provided, That this subsection shall not be applicable under the circumstances stated in the proviso of subsection (b) of this section.

"SEC. 19. Except with the written consent of the Corporation, no person shall serve as a director, officer, or employee of an insured bank who has been convicted, or who is hereafter convicted, of any criminal offense involving dishonesty or a breach of trust. For each willful violation of this prohibition, the bank involved shall be subject to penalty of not more than $100 for each day this prohibition is violated, which the Corporation may recover for its use.

"SEC. 20. It is not the purpose of this act to discriminate in any manner against State nonmember banks and in favor of national or member banks; but the purpose is to provide all banks with the same opportunity to obtain and enjoy the benefits of this act. No bank shall be discriminated against because its capital stock is less than the amount required for eligibility for admission into the Federal Reserve System.

"SEC. 21. The provisions of this act limiting the insurance of the deposits of any depositor to a maximum less than the full amount shall be independent and separable from each and all of the provisions of this act."

SEC. 3. The third paragraph of section 709, title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Whoever, except as expressly authorized by Federal law, uses the words 'Federal Deposit,' 'Federal Deposit Insurance,' or 'Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation' or a combination of any three of these words, as the name or a part thereof under which he or it does business, or advertises or otherwise represents falsely by any device whatsoever that his or its deposit liabilities, obligations, certificates, or shares are insured or guaranteed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, or by the United States or by any instrumentality thereof, or whoever advertises that his or its deposits, shares, or accounts are federally insured, or falsely advertises or otherwise represents by any device whatsoever the extent to which or the manner in which the deposit liabilities of an insured bank or banks are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; or."

SEC. 4. Section 220, title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"Whoever, being an officer, director, employe, agent, or attorney of any bank, the deposits of which are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, of a Federal intermediate credit bank, or of a National Agricultural Credit Corporation, except as provided by law, stipulates for or receives or consents or agrees to receive any fee, commission, gift, or thing of value, from any person, firm, or corporation, for procuring or endeavoring to procure for such person, firm, or corporation, or for any other person, firm, or corporation, from any such bank or corporation, any loan or extension or renewal of loan or substitution of security, or the purchase or discount or acceptance of any paper, note, draft, check, or bill of exchange by any such bank or corporation, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year or both."

Mr. SPENCE (interrupting the reading of the bill). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read, that the bill and committee amendments be printed, that the committee amendments be considered at this time and that the bill be open for amendment at any point. At the conclusion of the reading of the committee amendments, which are not controversial, I shall move that the Committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the committee amendments, as follows:

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment. I do not think that the point of order will be disposed of this afternoon, and I do not know that I will press the point of order. I ask unanimous consent that my reservation of the point of order upon this amendment be considered after the consideration of other amendments to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 61, immediately following line 13, add the following new section:

"SEC. 5. Subsection (b) of section 405 of title IV of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

" '(b) In the event of a default by any insured institution, payment of each insured account in such insured institution which is surrendered and transferred to the Corporation shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible either (1) by cash or (2) by making available to each insured member a transferred account in a new insured institution in the same community or in another insured institution in an amount equal to the insured account of such insured member: Provided, That the Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed before paying the insured accounts, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the validity of a claim for an insured account, it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim.' "

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the same reservation of a point against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other committee amendments?

Mr. SPENCE. There are other amendments, Mr. Chairman, that may be controversial, that are not committee amendments.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I might say that I do not think the amendment which I understand the gentleman from Kentucky is to offer on page 45, is controversial, if the gentleman will offer it now.

Mr. SPENCE. No; it is not controversial. I do not think there is any objection to it; in fact, I am sure there is not.

Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SPENCE:

On page 15, line 4, strike out "1949, and" and insert in lieu thereof "1950, and as of December 31 of."

On page 15, line 9, after the word "bank", insert "becoming due," and strike out the words "Such credits" and insert in lieu thereof "Each year such credit."

On page 15, line 11, strike out the word "assessments" and insert in lieu thereof "assessment."

On page 15, line 12, insert before the period the following "and any excess credit shall be applied upon the assessment next becoming due."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FORAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title XII, sec. 264), had come to no resolution thereon.

GENERAL LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have five legislative days to extend their remarks on the bill S. 2822.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

AMENDING SYNTHETIC LIQUID FUELS ACT

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 8975) to amend the Synthetic Liquid Fuels Act, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, will the chairman of the committee explain the bill?

Mr. PETERSON. This is an extension of the synthetic fuels bill, moving up the period 3 years longer, and providing additional funds during that period of time. An extension came up on a previous occasion and it passed the House unanimously. It has done good work. The time is just about to expire. The funds run out the early part of next year and the actual life runs out the spring of the following year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, this Synthetic Fuels Act started back in 1944, when the Congress laid down the policy of developing synthetic fuels from oil shale, lignite coal, gasification of coal underground, and the production of synthetic gas, at which time we appropriated some $30,000,000 to be spent over a 5-year period for research and pilot-plant work.

Mr. PETERSON. Yes.

Mr. CRAWFORD. At the end of 1948, I believe, we extended it another 3 years.

Mr. PETERSON. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. We gave them then an appropriation of $30,000,000. This is a third extension, for an additional 3 years, with an appropriation of $27,600,000.

Mr. PETERSON. That is correct.

Mr. CRAWFORD. This give us an 11-year program with a total expenditure of $87,600,000.

Mr. PETERSON. That is correct. Uniformly industry and Government have praised the program. It has been of untold benefit.

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is my understanding. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman if this is a bill to cover only a situation in which an experiment is being carried on to transpose, we will say, coal into a different type of fuel, or is it broad enough to cover a situation in which an experiment could be carried on to transpose the coal itself into power at the mine, instead of transporting the coal to be used somewhere else for the production of power?

Mr. PETERSON. We make no change in existing law. We merely extend the period. The existing law provides for producing synthetic liquid fuels from coal, oil shale, and other substances. It is rather broad in its power.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] may care to comment on the gentleman's question. He has given a great deal of study to this matter.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The research in the pilot-plant work is doing an enormous amount of work in connection with the study of the gasification of coal at its natural location, or in the ground.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Not only the gasification but actually the transfer of the coal into power there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. That is correct. It covers every phase of the conversion of oil shale and lignite coal and bituminous coal, and even peat, going into the question of peat bogs up in some of our States where the price of soft coal has now advanced to approximately $18 a ton, which becomes extremely burdensome.

This covers the whole field. I have gone into the matter rather in detail with a large coal company, such as the Hannah Coal Co. and Babcock-Wilcox people, and all the oil people, such as Standard Oil, Phillips Petroleum, Pure Oil, and the big chemical companies, and as far as I can find out the administration of these funds and this whole program is being carried on with extraordinary approval of all the different branches of the industry looking forward to giving us fuel at greatly reduced cost at the mine location, as the gentleman has pointed out.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman and withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, the original synthetic fuel bill was passed in 1944. It was an emergency need because of the war and we were running low on gasoline and oil. It was mainly for research and investigation in the mining operations and utilization of coal, petroleum, and other minerals. The original act was for a 5-year period. In 1948 it was extended for a 3-year period until April 5, 1952, and that is the intent of this new bill, H. R. 8975, to extend the act for another 3 years. To all intents and purposes we are at war again.

The United States is hard pressed for chemicals and byproducts of coal and oil, and it is through such experimentation as carried on in this work that they are discovered and made available to the American people.

The program has been in operation now for 6 years and we cannot afford to stop it; as I said before, we are at war, and we do not want to be caught like we were with the synthetic-rubber industry at the start of World War II, as an all-out contest between the ideologies of communism and Christianity develops. As I have said many times in the past 2 years, I feel the ones who believe in these two theories will never be able to live side by side peacefully for one is based on godlessness and the other on the teachings of the Master of Galilee.

This is a long-range program and is for the best interests of those Americans who are to come after us, for we are developing more and more into a mechanical Nation in which we are needing all kinds of liquid fuels. This program does not put the Government in business at all, for all the knowledge and modern methods developed in these plants is made available to all of the industries of the Nation.

As for the Morgantown plant, it is one of the fundamental research laboratories in the entire system. Since the present establishment is temporary and not now adequate for their needs, other quarters would have to be made available in the form of a permanent plant. When this is done the work at this station will be increased to include service to the petroleum fields of the entire Appalachian region. I think it is one of the most important bills to come before the Congress at the present time.

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as a member of the Mines and Mining Subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands we have gone into this bill to quite an extent. We have visited some of these plants, particularly the Rifle plant at Colorado. We have heard testimony from the Bureau of Mines. This is an important bill in connection with the war effort. You will remember that Germany depended very largely on synthetic fuels for the operation of its war machinery during the last war. You will also remember that in this country we were very short of gasoline and other fuels. This experiment and this work to be carried on under this bill can be of immeasurable benefit to the country in supplementing our power resources for the war effort at the present time. I think it is important legislation and should be enacted.

Mr. PETERSON. That was well developed in the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON]?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Synthetic Liquid Fuels Act of April 5, 1944 (58 Stat. 190), as amended by the act of March 15, 1948 (62 Stat. 79), is further amended by changing the words "eight years" in the first sentence to read "eleven years", and by changing the amount "$60,000,000" in section 6 to read "$85,000,000."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following language: "That the Synthetic Liquid Fuels Act of April 5, 1944 (58 Stat. 190), as amended by the act of March 15, 1948 (62 Stat. 79), is further amended by changing the words "eight years" in the first sentence to read "eleven years," and by changing the amount "$60,000,000" in section 6 to read "$87,600,000."

"SEC. 2. Of the sum authorized in section 1 of this act, not to exceed $2,600,000 shall be used for the construction and equipment of an experiment station in or near Morgantown, W. Va., for research and investigation in the mining, preparation and utilization of coal, petroleum, natural gas, peat, and other minerals."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

PERSONAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. McCONNELL. Mr. Speaker, due to the fact of an operation to a member of my family in Philadelphia I was necessarily delayed in taking a train to the Capital today. Because of that I missed the vote on roll call No. 210 on the bill to amend the Mutual Assistance Act of 1949.

If I had been here in time and voting, I would have voted "aye."

CRIME INVESTIGATION IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 495), and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of conducting the studies and investigations authorized by House Resolution 340, Eighty-first Congress, first session, incurred by the Committee on the District of Columbia, not to exceed $40,000, in addition to the funds authorized by House Resolution 396, Eighty-first Congress, first session, including the expenditures for the employment of expert, special council, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, and signed by the chairman of the committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 4, strike out "$40,000" and insert "$20,000" in lieu thereof.

Mr. LECOMPTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. LECOMPTE. By this amendment the Committee on House Administration has cut the amount asked in two, is that not correct?

Mr. STANLEY. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. LECOMPTE. I want to say for the benefit of the House that the Committee on House Administration has reduced the amounts asked by all the special committees which have come before the Subcommittee on Accounts. Of course, when the House by an overwhelming vote decides to have an investigation, there is nothing that the Committee on House Administration can do but furnish the money for the investigation. But the subcommittee, headed by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. STANLEY], and the committee headed by the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], have tried to hold down these appropriations, and in practically every case have reduced the amount that has been asked for. Is that not true?

Mr. STANLEY. That is generally true. I think some of the resolutions have gone through for the amounts as requested.

Mr. LECOMPTE. There are three or four other similar resolutions which the gentleman proposes to submit to the House today?

Mr. STANLEY. That is correct.

Mr. LECOMPTE. The one presently before the House is for the expenses of the committee that is engaged in investigating crime in the District of Columbia. The District of Columbia has been described as the worst spot in the United States as far as crime is concerned. I do not know that that is true, but that has been said of Washington and the District of Columbia. I believe the situation justifies the $20,000 that is asked for in this resolution.

Mr. STANLEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STANLEY. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. If the committee knows that crime is so bad in Washington, why do they not do something about enforcing the laws instead of investigating crime?

Mr. STANLEY. It is proposed, when the investigation is completed, to offer remedial legislation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Well, why wait? You say you know about it. Why not go ahead?

Mr. STANLEY. The investigation has not been completed.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. But do we not start to make prosecutions whenever we see crime is obvious?

Mr. STANLEY. I understand the committee will bring in their final report as soon as they have completed their investigation.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. The gentleman is not very definite in his statement.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 652), with an amendment, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigation to be conducted pursuant to House Resolution 643, by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $25,000, including expenditures for the employment of investigators, attorneys, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee or subcommittee, signed by the chairman of such committee or subcommittee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

Committee amendments:

Strike out "$25,000" and insert "$15,000."

Strike out the words "or subcommittee."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INVESTIGATION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 690) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the expenses of the investigations to be conducted by the special committee created by House Resolution 635, not to exceed $50,000, including expenditures for the employment of investigators, attorneys, and clerical, stenographic, and other assistants, shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House on vouchers authorized by such committee, signed by the chairman of such committee, and approved by the Committee on House Administration.

Committee amendment: Strike out "$50,000" and insert "$40,000."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ADDITIONAL PAY TO EMPLOYEES OF GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer House concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 233) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That, effective August 1, 1950, there shall be paid, one-half out of the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, until otherwise provided by law, to employees of the Government Printing Office engaged in the preparation of the semimonthly and session indexes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, additional compensation per annum, payable monthly, as follows:

(1) To the chief indexer, the sum of $2,454.

(2) To the cataloger whose present salary is $5,111, the sum of $1,489.

(3) To each of the two catalogers whose present salary is $4,068, the sum of $1,560.

(4) To the cataloger whose present salary is $3,515, the sum of $1,500.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRINTING ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ON S. 1832

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer Senate concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 96) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

(b) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of not to exceed $6,000 to carry out the purposes of this joint resolution.

The joint resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MCKINNON (at the request of Mr. HAYS of Arkansas) was given permission to address the House for 30 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative business of the day and any special orders heretofore entered.

TWENTIETH-CENTURY MINUTEMEN

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Speaker, current headlines tell of the armor we are dispatching to our hard-pressed forces in South Korea and of our generals who are directing our fighting forces there. But little is said of the heroic and valiant deeds, far beyond the call of duty, that our mud-slogging GI's, the boys from your home town and mine, are daily accomplishing there. These are our twentieth-century minutemen upon whom the fate of western civilization may ultimately depend. In their struggle against odds that surpass anything experienced by our forces during World War II, we must convey to them all the tribute and honor that this proud Nation can muster. Whatever we did for our brave soldiers in the war against Hitler, Mussolini, and Tojo, we must do for these boys. I hope that their mothers, wherever they are today throughout our great Nation, feel America's pride in their children. Let us back up these brave boys by staying at our jobs without respite until the tide of battle has safely turned. I call upon this Congress to go on record that it will not adjourn as long as these boys face peril. I call upon this Congress to stay in session to its last minute, if necessary, to insure complete and rapid victory.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ALBERT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an address by R. W. Frazier, of Southeastern State College, Durant, Okla.

Mr. VAN ZANDT (at the request of Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts) was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two separate instances and in each to include extraneous matter.

Mr. MULTER asked and was given permission to extend in the Appendix of the RECORD a proposal made by Walter P. Reuther, president of UAW-CIO entitled "A Total Peace Offensive" notwithstanding the fact that it will take 5⅔ pages of the RECORD and is estimated by the Public Printer to cost $464.68.

Mr. BIEMILLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in two separate instances.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole today and include therein excerpts from House Report No. 846.

Mr. HAVENNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. D'EWART asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HARVEY asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include an editorial.

Mr. CANFIELD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks and include a newspaper article.

SPECIAL ORDER

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend in the RECORD at this point an editorial appearing in this morning's Washington Post.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

(The editorial referred to follows:)

NOT THE AMERICAN WAY

Passage of the Hobbs bill by a vote of 326 to 15 in the House must be regarded as a popular demand for tightening up the law in regard to deportable aliens. Since the bill was debated for only 40 minutes, it is reasonable to suppose that many Members who voted for it were not familiar with its details. They voted affirmatively, we suspect, because they believe that subversive and criminal aliens should not be allowed to roam the country without check or supervision so long as the countries from which they came refuse to take them back again. We sympathize with that point of view while deploring the drastic remedy that the Hobbs bill would apply.

The bill has been substantially improved by amendment. Its most drastic provisions are aimed only at alien criminals and subversives who have been found guilty of violating the law and then ordered deported. Certainly aliens of this type should not be footloose merely because the country from which they came is unwilling to receive them. In some instances subversives from the iron-curtain countries continue to do their nefarious work here because regimes which sent them to the United States refuse to take them back again. This makes a mockery of American law. We should not put ourselves at the mercy of communistic agents in this fashion. But we ought to deal with these people in accord with the pattern of American justice and not merely give the Attorney General power to throw them into concentration camps, which is the Communist method.

The bill would not require imprisonment of the deportable aliens in question. As an alternative, the Attorney General could require them to report regularly to the Immigration and Naturalization Service, to submit to medical and psychiatric examination, to give information under oath as to their habits and activities, and to conform to reasonable regulations to be laid down by the Attorney General, until their deportation could be arranged. Properly administered, this section of the bill would afford a salutary check upon the activities of the undersirables in question. It would enable the Government to keep close watch on what they were doing. Under even the amended bill, however, the Attorney General could step in at any time and order that any alien so controlled and supervised be sent to prison.

It is this provision that is utterly out of keeping with the American concept of due process. We have no doubt that some of the subversive deportable aliens now at large ought to be locked up. But let it be done by bringing proper charges and giving each a fair trial. Proponents of the bill made much of the fact that the individuals concerned have already been tried. But they have also paid the penalty for the offenses for which they have been convicted. What is involved under this bill is a second punishment, without any second trial, merely because deportation cannot be carried out. This is certainly un-American and probably unconstitutional. No such sweeping discretion should be vested in the Attorney General.

Any extensive exercise of this power would result in the establishment of concentration camps. The experience of other countries has proved that once established, the concentration-camp habit grows. How long would it be before citizens regarded as dangerous to our national security would be thrown into concentration camps without trial? The only safe and reasonable course is to hold fast to the principle of imprisoning people only for crimes for which they have been convicted through our established judicial process. The maintenance of liberty within the country is no less important than defense against enemies without. It is up to the Senate to reshape the Hobbs bill into an effective control system over aliens awaiting deportation without turning over to the Attorney General the power to make the United States a concentration-camp country.

DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on an editorial that appeared in the Washington Post this morning which at one point made almost as good a speech as some of those that were made in favor of H. R. 10 Monday when that bill was passed by a vote of 326 to 15.

I read one of the passages that I think is excellent:

Its most drastic provisions are aimed only at alien criminals and subversives who have been found guilty of violating the law and then ordered deported. Certainly aliens of this type should not be footloose merely because the country from which they came is unwilling to receive them. In some instances subversives from the iron-curtain countries continue to do their nefarious work here because regimes which sent them to the United States refuse to take them back again. This makes a mockery of American law. We should not put ourselves at the mercy of communistic agents in this fashion.

Now, that quote from the editorial meets with my hearty approval. But the gentleman who wrote the editorial was mistaken in his opening statement, which is as follows:

Passage of the Hobbs bill by a vote of 326 to 15 in the House must be regarded as a popular demand for tightening up the law in regard to deportable aliens.

Mr. Speaker, that is one of the fundamental errors into which the distinguished editor has fallen. This bill, H. R. 10, has nothing in the world to do with deportable aliens, but those that have been finally ordered by legitimate authorities of your Nation and mine to be deported after exhausting all of the remedies provided by law to protect their rights. It is only after the warrant of deportation, which is the final step after all of the courts have spoken, has been issued that this bill takes effect and when after this alien, who has been received into our country, not forced to come here but by our grace, and who has violated his sworn pledge of allegiance to our institutions, our laws, and to the United States, into which he has been allowed to come as our guest, violates his oath of entry, tramples our laws underfoot and is a criminal alien in our midst, who finally, after exhausting all of his remedies in the courts, has been ordered deported by the sovereign might of our Nation, as every free nation has, which has been thwarted in some way, usually by bribery of some petty officer of a foreign nation.

That is what the experts tell me. Of course, Russia does not want those who come here as propagandists of their fifth column to come back home if they are doing good work here. So, the big shots stay unmolested, because there never has been a single passport for the return of one of them ever granted by Russia, although in one case 13 applications of your Government were turned down flat, cold, and then a few months later when the man himself applied he got it in 5 days. So, the manifest joker in it is just that. It is not the deportable aliens; it is those that have been ordered finally deported.

I want to tell you the story very briefly of the Joe Strecker case. Joe Strecker was a tailor in Little Rock, Ark. He did well; he was thrifty, hardworking, made money, and he invested every cent of his money in Soviet bonds, because he said he believed in the principles of Soviet Russia; that he was a member of the Communist Party and that he knew that the bloody purge, the world purge, was coming to capitalist countries, and he wanted to be on the right side when our Government was overthrown. So, he put every cent of his savings in Soviet bonds. Well, when the law which said then that all Communists, or those who had any traffic with that organization which aims at the overthrow of our Government by force and violence—so the courts have held—were subject to arrest, Joe Strecker was arrested, was tried by the administrative tribunal of our Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization. Then, when they declared that he should be deported, he asked for a writ of habeas corpus, and habeas corpus has been pooh-poohed on this floor in debate as though it did not amount to anything but due process of law. But, on the habeas corpus hearing in the court at Little Rock, Ark., he was ordered deported. His application for a writ of habeas corpus was denied and he was ordered turned over to the immigration authorities, but while the immigration authorities were taking him to New Orleans to put him on the boat he hired a lawyer, went before Judge Borah, the former Senator's brother, who was United States judge at New Orleans, swore out another writ of habeas corpus, had another trial, and Judge Borah, after a full hearing, turned him down. He took an appeal then to the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. The Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals gave him a full hearing and a trial on appeal, such as they always do, and they reversed Judge Borah and held that he ought to be freed because he had resigned from the Communist Party pending the deportation proceedings. So, that settled that habeas corpus case.

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, what happened to this man?

Mr. HOBBS. I am going on to tell you. I thank the gentleman for the question.

Then, after the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals had ordered him freed because he failed to pay his dues or had resigned, maybe, the Government took certiorari to the Supreme Court and the Supreme Court upheld that contention and that decision by the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals. They said, "Why, it is manifest that when the law says that you can only deport those men prosecuted in this case because they were Communists, that means at the present time. If a man has resigned or failed to pay his dues, then he has ceased to be a Communist." So they construed the law that way.

I had the pleasure of getting the statute changed to say that any man who had ever been a member of the Communist Party, no matter for how short or how long a time, or how long in the past, or where, should be deportable. Then that was too late to catch Joe Strecker. The Supreme Court freed him, and he is just as free today as you are or anybody else, but he says he has not changed his convictions a particle and, so far as I know, he may still be investing every cent of his savings, money earned here, in Soviet bonds.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LUCAS. I think the gentleman has pointed out a flaw in the present Taft-Hartley law in relation to the anti-Communist oath. The gentleman knows that it is written in the present tense. A labor leader who is a Communist may throw away his card and say, "I am not now a Communist," and retain his place by taking an oath in the present tense. I think it is a good thing the gentleman has changed this law to this effect. I believe we should change the Taft-Hartley law to give greater protection to our workingmen.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman very much for that contribution. I hope any such error will obviate any question about such a decision as was rendered in the Joe Strecker case.

The Joe Strecker case pointed out to me and to those of us who are thinking on this point why we could not deport Harry Bridges, because Harry Bridges quit the Communist Party in 1938 after he had been, according to the evidence, to several international and national meetings as Comrade Something-or-Other. He had several aliases. But he finally quit when they got too hot behind him. So he was not at the moment a Communist, and under the Strecker decision he would have continued to be free. So it is under our amendment of the 1940 statute that this has now been accomplished finally. The only step left is to get Australia to take him back, but if they say they will not take him back, as they have solemnly and publicly said, then the only other answer is H. R. 10, which is just the thing to cure the ill about which we are talking.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Why, of course, I am very glad to yield to my friend the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I want to both thank the gentleman and congratulate him for his contribution, not only now but for the wonderful work that he has done ever since he has been in the Congress for the protection of our beloved country. I was interested a few moments ago when the gentleman from Alabama spoke about these Communists who are working for the overthrow of our Government by force and violence.

Does not the gentleman believe, and I am sure he does, that those Communists and fellow travelers and those who follow their line, who seek to destroy us, not by force and violence, but by deception, deceit, sabotage, and stirring up dissension and the fomenting of strikes are even a greater menace to America than those who advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

Mr. HOBBS. Why, certainly, sir, and I would love to amend that law so to to provide, but I do not believe that is feasible at the moment.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Why, of course, I will. I will be delighted always to yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. I, too, want to commend the gentleman from Alabama. I think it is a sad commentary that Harry Bridges has a beachhead on our western coast opposing everything that our boys are fighting for in Korea today and trying to negate all that we in the House of Representatives are trying to do to end this conflict and promote world peace.

Mr. HOBBS. Thank you, sir; I appreciate your contribution, as always.

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Please let me say just before I yield to my dear friend from Alabama that there is no question about the status of Harry Bridges now. If H. R. 10 becomes a law, as I will point out in just a minute, it not only is abundantly buttressed by the Constitution, but it will fit him like a glove because this, giving him every right in the world, is not dependent upon the consent of his own Government. He came here on a skilled or able seaman's ticket. He knows better than you or better than I that he can go back the same way.

As I said on Monday, if 10,000 aliens have come here in one of the three easy ways—able seaman's enlistment, jumping ship in our ports, and getting travel documents which means coming through the United States, for instance, from Canada and going to Mexico, and just stopping here; or if they get a visitor's visa good for 90 days and overstayed, why, if 10,000 of them know how to use that kind of thing now to come in here, is it not reasonable to suppose that 5,000 aliens who come under the bill H. R. 10, according to the testimony of Mr. Ugo Carusi before our committee when he was head of the Immigration and Naturalization Commission, is it not reasonable to suppose those 5,000 can somehow find their way out?

Do you not know that Harry Bridges will not say in the jug 10 minutes? I do. But I am not interested in keeping him locked up. I want him to get out. If his own country says he is such a bad citizen that they will not have him back, then I do not know of a better atmosphere to cool his fevered brow until he gets the inclination to ship again as an able seaman. That is the way he came in. He can go back that way, anywhere he wants to, and jump ship without any fear of being bothered.

Mr. BOYKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy to yield to my good friend from Mobile.

Mr. BOYKIN. I am sure you know most of us here consider you one of the greatest constitutional lawyers, not only in this House but in this country. That is not me talking, but I have talked to men on both sides of this House. I remember when you were selected to try one of the greatest cases ever tried in this House, and I want to ask you one of the most important questions that I know of.

Do you not think we can outlaw the Communist Party in the United States? Let us get rid of all of them forever and ever, so that they never could come here if they ever had been a Communist or ever expected to be.

Mr. HOBBS. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. I dislike to delay you ladies and gentlemen at this hour of the day, but I will be glad to answer my friend's question. I do not. So many of the members of the Communist Party are American citizens, I am sorry to say. Therefore, you would not strike at the root of the tree. That is one thing. Then, in the second place, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, the great Director of the FBI——

Mr. BOYKIN. I agree. He is one of the greatest men living.

Mr. HOBBS. That is right. He has done more to clean up crime in this country than any other man. He has absolutely cleaned up one of the crimes that H. R. 10 is aimed at; namely, the Lindbergh Act, kidnaping. He has not had a glaring instance of kidnaping in some time. We had dozens of them every year until we passed that act. But Mr. Hoover says he would rather have them known to him. For instance, there is a place in this town which is run for and used by the Young Communists of America. You cannot touch them. But it is good to know who frequents that club. He does not want them to go underground where he will be unable to reach them. The same thing applies all over the country. The majority of the membership of the Communist Party in the United States is American, and you cannot touch one of them. That is all right. We bow to that, and pray for their redemption and that they may see the light. But we have got some of them. We have got rid of Fritz Kuhn. We have got rid of a number of his crowd. We have done a pretty good job, in spite of having our hands tied behind us. So I do not believe that against the advice of our enforcement officials we ought to just do what the gentleman suggests.

Mr. BOYKIN. What can we do, then?

Mr. HOBBS. Pass H. R. 10.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. GWINN. I am very much interested in the question asked by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BOYKIN].

Mr. HOBBS. So am I.

Mr. GWINN. Is not our problem in connection with this question a problem of defining what communism is, or what the Communist Party is? So when we attempt to outlaw an abstract concept we are in difficulty. Could we not do this? Could we not describe that association or that grouping, such as the Communist Internationale, the Comintern, the Cominform, and their agencies and groupings, whatever they are, to be enemies of the United States, just as we can treat a nation or a group as enemies? Now we are at war; we recognize certain parties or groups or associations as enemies; then if our fellow travelers support them and send their literature about and do positive acts in aid of the enemy we have the legal procedure by which we can handle them. Is there not a possibility of that sort?

Mr. HOBBS. I do not know. I have put a lot of gray hairs in my head trying to do just that. You take the bill which I still have pending to curb subversives: I cannot get to first base with it because it also does what I think is exactly what we should do, it not only punishes the man who accepts employment in our Government, but also the man who appoints him and also the Congressman who recommends him for appointment; and that is what is killing my bill. There are too many fellows who might get caught. I said: "You are the very man I am talking about. You have got to be sure you recommend no one who is not absolutely loyal to the United States to work in our Government."

If our Government has sunk to the low plane where we cannot have absolute loyalty in the service of the Government, then I say we had better close up the whole establishment except the absolutely necessary departments and just shut them out from employment entirely, because if we cannot run with honest-to-God Americans then we do not need to run those departments in which we have to employ anybody with a question mark after him.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. O'SULLIVAN. My thought is that communism is not a political ideology, but in its last analysis is a conspiracy to commit treason, no matter what country it originates in. It seems to me that FBI Director Hoover is a little too tender with them when he says he does not want to drive a political conspiracy to commit treason underground. We drive every other crime underground. The grand divisions of crime are treason, felony, misdemeanor. I cannot understand the philosophy of trying to keep a conspiracy to commit treason above the ground. I think it ought to be put under the ground, and perhaps 6 feet deep.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman may be entirely right. I was simply answering the question as to why we were not trying to do just that at the moment. I certainly appreciate the gentleman's comment.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I yield.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. I wish to support the position of the gentleman from Alabama addressing us, from a legal standpoint. To be a Communist is certainly not treasonable in Russia, nor in Yugoslavia, nor in China; it is treasonable in the United States and ought to be. However, if we believe in representative government, in democracy as we practice it here, then if a majority of the people who are citizens, as the gentleman has so well said, would be foolish enough, unwise enough, un-American enough to vote a Communist into the office of President of the United States and to vote Communists into control of Congress, there is nothing we can do about it.

The answer and the remedy lies in education, in putting the light of day on what these Communists attempt to do. In spite of that, if a majority of the people should vote those persons into office, then to deny our people that right would be defeating the very purpose for which we have been in existence. And the same would apply to every other party, a Progressive Party, the Free Soilers, or any offshoot political party that has risen in the past. If the overwhelming majority should go that way, then representatative government is out. I pray God that never will happen, and I hope it will not in America; I am sure it will not. But if we want to stop people from following the evils of the Communists or a false philosophy of government, we must educate those people to what a following of this false philosophy will ultimately do to their beloved country.

Mr. HOBBS. And we have got to show them that we have a better way.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. That is right.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for another 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, let me call attention to the fallacy of this editorial. This is the crux of the objectionable feature of the editorial: "What is involved under this bill is a second punishment," may I pause at that comma to say that the Supreme Court in the Turner case gives the lie to that. This is not punishment. Deportation is not a criminal trial, it is not a criminal procedure. It is no punishment to send a man back home. As I said in my speech on Monday, Brer Rabbit when he was protesting so violently to Uncle Remus because he was sent back where he was born and raised was not really sincere. He was just as happy as he could be when he was thrown back into the briar patch, his native home. I think that would be true here. It should not be punishment if you are the right kind of a person. It should not be punishment to be sent back home. That is all this is.

So I do not believe the editorial is sound in its statement that they would object to that, but whether they object or not, the Supreme Court stated in the Turner case it is not punishment. I cited that in my remarks Monday. It is in the RECORD. The Supreme Court said it is not punishment, it is not second jeopardy; it is nothing in the world but a civil remedy known to every civilized independent government to get rid of its poisonous trash. When he violates his pledge of entry we have a perfect right to oust him by the civil remedy of deportation. So it is not punishment.

Reading after the comma: "without any second trial merely because deportation cannot be carried out."

I want to dwell for a moment on those words "without any second trial." Did Harry Bridges have any second trial? He has had six. Did Joe Strecker have a second trial? He did in the forum of his own choosing—mark you that—not in his home. That did not suit him because the judge there decided against him, so he took another forum and went there, and when he had the same luck with the trial judge, he took an appeal to the fifth circuit that decided with him, and the Supreme Court, by denying the writ of certiorari, affirmed their decision. But, he had all the chance in the world.

Now I want to give you just exactly what the program is, not as to those who are deportable but those who have been ordered deported, against whom an order of deportation has been issued, made after an administrative trial, which is due process of law. The Supreme Court says they do not have to have a jury trial, they do not have to have a judicial trial, because a trial by the agency put in charge by our Congress to administer the deportation law, the Department of Justice, where it belongs, gives them due process of law and they cannot complain. And even that administrative trial is subject to full right of appeal, first to the Board of Immigration Appeals of the Department of Justice, then to the review by the Attorney General himself, who is the head of the Department of Justice, then by habeas corpus to his own home or wherever he wants to take it, his habeas corpus, to any district court, then appeal to the circuit court of appeals and then by certiorari to the Supreme Court.

Now then, that is what this editor says is a wholly absence of second trial. It is just the reverse. We gave Joe Strecker six trials; we gave Harry Bridges six, and they were freed by the Supreme Court on what Mr. CELLER—bless his heart—says is no remedy at all; but, they were freed on habeas corpus by appealing to the Supreme Court through certiorari. So, habeas corpus does result in thousands of releases. And, they are not through then. They are freed sometimes on certiorari by the Government and sometimes by the man that has been ordered to be deported.

Now, I am not going to keep you longer; I just want to tell you one or two other stories. It will not take but a minute. I want to tell you the story of Caeserio Valenti, of Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love. He admitted that he was the head of the Philadelphia poison ring, but his lawyer said that I lied on May 5, 1939, to the House of Representatives in my speech when I said that he was responsible for the murders committed by the poison ring of which he was the head and who, by poison, for the sake of collecting insurance money, had poisoned or was charged with poisoning over 100 citizens of Philadelphia; and he said that I lied; that his client, Caeserio Valenti, although he was the head of it, was not responsible for poisoning but 21 himself. Well, the reason we could not deport him was not because that was a good defense, but it was because he was imprisoned in the Eastern State Penitentiary of Pennsylvania for life for first-degree murder. He did not have but one life to give to his country and he did not want to give that. He wanted to kill anybody that had an insurance policy. But when I checked up to see if he had been paroled or anything of that sort, I was informed today that he had been denied parole because since he had been imprisoned he has gouged out the eye of another prisoner. Therefore, his behavior has not been so excellent as to warrant consideration for parole.

Mr. BOYKIN. Does the gentleman remember the name of his lawyer?

Mr. HOBBS. No; I do not.

Now I want to tell you about the Detroit case, about Bernard Niedzialkowski, who is either a Russian or from a satellite country. The immigration authorities were ready to deport him, and he has been finally ordered deported. That was for a crime. The warrant was issued in 1930, and he never got out, never paid any attention, but he was convicted of murder and was arrested for murder. While this was pending, while they were taking him to jail, he went by and just did a little job that he had wanted to do for a long time. Now that he knew his time was short, he went by and killed a friend of his in Detroit. So he was arrested for murder, and they could not deport him. Then while they released him on bond, I believe, or suspended the order of deportation, he killed his second man, and possibly a third. The authorities are in dispute as to whether he got his third or just shot at him. At any rate, he is still imprisoned in the Michigan State Penitentiary, and he cannot get out even to be deported.

So these men have been with us and we cannot get rid of them. But the authorities testified before our committee that there were several thousand criminal aliens who had been finally ordered deported, and whose deportation was not stopped by prison bars, but because they did not care to leave. At least, that is about what it amounts to. There is only one way I know to do it, and that is by H. R. 10, which we passed so overwhelmingly Monday.

I just want to correct in the minds of any of you ladies or gentlemen who are present any impression that there has been any punishment inflicted, that there has been any criminal charge prosecuted. This bill specifically says that they shall be detained in aid of deportation, our sovereign power, though not at hard labor. That is to meet the decision in the Michigan case. You keep them as parlor boarders. We mean to do just that until they come to the conclusion that they have to obey the orders of the duly constituted law of the land, which they swore to uphold and obey.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURDOCK). Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. FURCOLO] is recognized for 20 minutes.

BETTER RELATIONS BETWEEN THE NATIONS OF THE WORLD

Mr. FURCOLO. Mr. Speaker, may it please the House, shortly before the war in Korea began, I had sent a suggestion to the President and the Secretary of State that I felt might be considered as one possible road toward the ultimate goal of better relations between the nations of the world.

I had intended to discuss the matter on the floor of Congress after the President and the Secretary of State had had an opportunity to analyze my proposal. With that end in view, I had obtained permission to speak under a special order back some weeks ago. However, the war in Korea began 1 day before the time scheduled for my talk in Congress and 2 days before a radio program that had been scheduled for the purpose of discussing my suggestion with the people of the Nation.

I found that people who had been extremely interested in the idea abandoned all hope for it as soon as the war in Korea started. Newspapers that had given front page attention to it when I first broached the idea changed right after the war in Korea started. Their attitude changed from one of apparent enthusiasm to one of "Well, no use talking about peace now. The war has started."

I, too, fell into that same frame of mind, but I now believe I was mistaken to have ever paused even momentarily. I am firmly convinced that we must devote our every effort to every possible means of achieving lasting peace in the world—and we must do it every moment until we have succeeded.

I have been encouraged to find that many of our national leaders apparently hold this same belief. A little later on I will quote from the testimony of those leaders—testimony that they gave in July that seems to be an endorsement of at least the principle of the plan I suggested to the President and the Secretary of State in June. But first, let me tell you of the suggestion I made in June.

I had better emphasize right now that the suggestion I am about to discuss is for every nation in the world—not simply Russia, although I illustrate by Russia—but the idea is intended to apply to all nations.

Now, this is the substance of the proposal I made in June:

Recent history has shown that, regardless of the cause of the situation, the fact remains that diplomacy at high government levels does not seem to create confidence and understanding between nations. That is particularly true of the relations of the United States and Soviet Russia. While the idea I am suggesting is to be applied to all the nations of the world, let me illustrate its workings by using Russia as an example.

Russia and the United States regard each other with skepticism and distrust. Everything that is done by either Government merely increases the climate of hatred and fear in the people of each nation. High-ranking diplomats have been unable to pierce the iron curtain, and the true story of America never gets to the Russian people. Statements and statistics from our governmental agencies are derided by the Communists as nothing but capitalistic propaganda. We are pictured as an imperialistic nation seeking to destroy Russia and enslave her people. The average, everyday Russian is also led to believe that the United States is about to collapse because of the failure of the capitalistic system. Our people are maligned as corrupt, impoverished, unfriendly, intolerant—just about everything that is bad.

We in this country may scoff at the idea of anyone taking such statements about us seriously. We may find it difficult or impossible to believe that any people think of us in such terms. Let us not be deceived. We must realize that the average Russian does not know us. He does not have the faintest conception of what the people of America are really like. He is not given the truth about our belief in freedom and justice, our standard of living, our ideals and aspirations, and our American way of life. In brief, he does not really know us.

The average Russian merely knows what the Russian governmental officials tell him. If he should doubt their word, he has no way of learning the truth even if he earnestly seeks to ascertain it. His schools, newspapers, radios, literature—every medium of information, in fact—is rigidly controlled by a Soviet Government that pictures us in whatever terms will suit the wishes of the Communists. The other side of the story—our side of the story—never really penetrates the iron curtain.

In the first place, the Soviet Government tells its people only those things it feels they should know. It does not hesitate to use falsehoods and half-truths if it believes such strategy is necessary in the best interests of the cause of communism. In the second place, assuming they get by Soviet censorship, official statements of our Government are disbelieved by the Russian people. They have been taught that we are lying, warlike imperialists who are trying to deceive the world by false propaganda. Our official statements are taken either with the greatest skepticism and suspicion or with outright disbelief. Before we blame the Russian people for that, let us ask ourselves whether we would believe a statement of the Soviet Government if our own American Government, newspapers, and radios all emphasized that the Russian statement was false. Why do we expect the people of Russia to take any statement of our Government in preference to that of their own government, newspapers, and radio? That is why I believe that we must seek to achieve a people-to-people diplomacy because, whatever be the reason, our official diplomacy alone is not succeeding quickly enough to insure peace in the world.

We must get to know the Russian people better and they must learn to know what the people of the United States are really like. How can that be achieved?

I offer the following suggestion in the full realization that it may not be the complete answer. But it may help to implement our official foreign policy. I also realize that as far as Russia is concerned, my suggestion may be doomed to failure by the refusal of the Russian Government to join with us in any mutual undertaking of friendship and understanding. Even so, I believe it will be at least a gesture of good will and attempted cooperation that may inspire the true confidence of the world, including the people of Russia. And, regardless of Russia's rejection of it, I believe most nations of the world would cooperate and participate in the movement.

I propose that, as part of our foreign policy, we inaugurate an attempt to establish better relations abroad by what I am terming a Truth Through Youth movement. I propose that under the United Nations, a world Truth Through Youth foundation be established with the aim of creating better understanding among the peoples of the world. I hope every nation will participate—but to illustrate how Truth Through Youth might operate, let me cite as examples Russia and the United States.

Every month we would select a hundred high-school youths from the States of this country to go on a tour of Russia. I use the figure 100 for illustration. At the same time, a comparable number of Russian youths would be brought to this Nation. In this country, they would be free to go anywhere and everywhere, talk to anyone and everyone, and see anything and everything in which they might be interested. It is hoped that Russia would grant the same privileges to our touring youngsters.

Each group might visit the officialdom of the nation in which they were visiting, but that would not be the primary objective of the tour. The main purpose would be to mix with the people themselves of the nation, to visit shops and factories, schools and playgrounds, farms and stores, and places where the people play, study, work, and live. It is possible that each group might even make some friends in the country visited, friends who would exchange correspondence and ideas in succeeding years.

During their visit, without their even consciously or intentionally telling of America, our youngsters would be conveying to the people of Russia the first authentic picture of what our country really is and what our people are really like. Most important of all, they will be believed as no official statement of our Government is ever believed. They will get to the people as no official of our Government ever gets to the people. They will create friendship and understanding as no official of our Government has ever been able to create friendship and understanding. High-school youngsters are not mature enough to be considered as spies or propagandists or people of cunning and guile. We may hope that the Russian people will accept them at face value, as they will never accept mature diplomats and statesmen.

The Russian people or the American people might disbelieve statements of the press, radios, or officials of the other nation, but these same people would find it more difficult to disbelieve their own eyes and ears. And, which is even more important, they would place absolute faith and confidence in the reports of their own children after they had returned from the country of their visit.

If Truth Through Youth worked as it might well work, let us imagine over a thousand American children a year visiting all parts of Russia. I have enough faith in our youngsters to be willing to rely on them as the best ambassadors of good will we can have. I think the Russian people will believe them and through them will see Americans as we really are.

At the same time, a thousand Russian children are visiting all parts of the United States. On their return to Russia they tell their parents, neighbors, and schoolmates of what they have seen in this country, what the Americans are really like, and what the American way of life really is. Will they be believed? We all know that the people of Russia will take the word of their own youngsters in preference to anything our Government or the Russian Government might say.

It is double-barreled in that both the Russian and the American youngsters will be ambassadors of good will in both countries—over 2,000 ambassadors a year who do not talk in diplomatic language on high governmental levels but who reach the people themselves. It will not be dollar diplomacy, military diplomacy, power deplomacy, or any other kind of diplomacy that is subject to misunderstanding or misinterpretation. It will be the only type of people-to-people diplomacy that may create friendship and understanding in the people themselves. I believe the attainment of that objective may be begun by the Truth Through Youth movement.

It may take a long time, perhaps too long. I see no shorter way. If we in this generation have failed to achieve mutual trust, understanding, and good will, perhaps the next generation may succeed where we have failed. They cannot succeed if we have not given them the opportunity. Let the youth of each nation understand each other at the high-school level so that, when they take over the reins of leadership some years from now, their youthful experiences and knowledge may help to secure peace in the world.

The cost of financing any Truth Through Youth movement would not be prohibitive. The cost of war today is prohibitive. The cost of peace cannot be measured in terms of money. The real question is, Can we afford not to do it? Actually the cost would be approximately $1,000,000 a year for 1,000 American high-school youngsters. We are already spending over $3,000,000,000 a year to buy friendship abroad.

In terms of economy, the Truth Through Youth movement will actually save us money in the long run because it is not intended to be merely a temporary, stop-gap solution. It is based on the hope of permanent gains of friendship, understanding, and good will.

It is also not a waste of money even if it accomplishes nothing but a more broadened education for some of the youth of this country. Those who participate in the movement will have received knowledge and education that will repay them, and ultimately this country, many dividends.

I propose the venture even if it be financed solely and completely by the Government of the United States. However, I do not believe that will be necessary because I think other nations, perhaps even Russia, will participate gladly and willingly bear their own share of the expense. I also think that if the people of the United States believe in the idea of a Truth Through Youth movement, we have enough patriotic citizens who will voluntarily contribute to finance it without burdening the Government.

I readily admit the idea may have many flaws in it. I do not pretend to know whether it is the best possible solution or not. I hope the people of this Nation will think about it and give me the benefit of their advice.

I want to emphasize that I do not seek the abandonment of our diplomatic endeavors but merely the implementation of them by a people-to-people understanding.

I believe the movement will also be added proof to the world of our earnest endeavors to achieve peace and good will—to open the door to friendship and understanding through the medium of a generation that must achieve those ends or perish.

Of one thing I am certain: If such a movement had been in effect for the past 20 years, our relations with Soviet Russia would be vastly better than they are today. Let us not have our children repeat the same statement 20 years from now.

Let me also emphasize that the movement is intended to apply to all nations, not just Russia. Too often we have waited for trouble some place, then take action to correct it. Let us start this movement right now, even in places where there is no trouble yet—but where there may be in the near future—let us sow the seeds of friendship before the trouble—positive diplomacy, where we take the initiative right now with the generation that will rule those countries pretty soon.

The fate of the world may be decided in the next few years. Let us be sure we have made every possible effort, no matter how small it may be, to bring good will, trust, and understanding to the peoples of the world. Only in that way will lasting peace for the world ever be attained. I suggest the Truth Through Youth movement I have proposed as at least one step in that direction.

That was the substance of the suggestion I made. Not long after I advanced that suggestion to the President and the Secretary of State, the war in Korea began and I postponed my discussion of it with the Members of Congress. Since that time several national leaders have testified before the Thomas subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee considering Senator BENTON'S Senate Resolution 243 of a Marshall plan of ideas. Let me quote excerpts from the testimony of several of the witnesses who testified about July 5—see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD July 6, page 9696, and so forth. I believe the testimony speaks for itself.

John Foster Dulles:

On the effectiveness of our propaganda against that of the Russians may hang the question of war or peace in the next few months.

Senator BENTON:

The problem is how to shatter Russian propaganda with truth. If the people of the world believe we are right as well as strong, communism will become easy to contain. The fight is for the minds and loyalties of all mankind. It is nothing less than that. It is to tell the world what we stand for, so it can choose for itself between our freedom and the world's freedom, or Red Russian enslavement.

Senator BENTON also emphasized the point in his resolution that—

We must encourage a vast two-way flow of students from all the countries of this earth and from America to these free nations.

Senator BENTON also gave many illustrations to show that the true story of America is not getting to the people of the world—see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pages 9696–9701.

Secretary of State Acheson:

We must make the truth known to the peoples of the world. * * * One of the strategic objectives of the Communist campaign * * * is to confuse the world about the nature of democratic aspirations and ideals. * * * Another is to spread deception about the free world's strength and resources. * * * We must, therefore, make unmistakable the truth about the United States and the other free nations.

Acheson quoted from President Truman's statement that—

Our task is to present the truth to the millions of people who are uninformed or misinformed or unconvinced. Our task is to reach them in their daily lives as they work and learn. We must be alert, ingenious, and diligent in reaching peoples of other countries * * * we must make ourselves heard around the world in a great campaign of truth.

The Secretary of State then said:

The task of telling the truth as the President has emphasized is not separate and distinct from other elements of our foreign policy. It is a necessary part of all we are doing to build a peaceful world. It is essential to the success of our foreign policy that the military, political, and economic measures we are taking be accompanied by an effective information program. * * * I welcome particularly this emphasis on private participation. Governments can do only a very small part of the task. It is the individual citizens, the private organizations, the independent groups, who make the major contribution to insuring that the truth is known.

The Secretary of State concluded by saying:

There has never been a time when men everywhere who value freedom have a greater need to know the truth.

The Members are all familiar, of course, with General Eisenhower's statement to the effect that truth is our greatest weapon in the world today.

Senator LEHMAN and Senator FLANDERS also testified and their testimony can be read on pages 9700 and 9701 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for July 6.

As I stated above, I believe the testimony of these witnesses speaks for itself. The testimony indicates very clearly, in my opinion, the need to go ahead on any effective campaign of truth even while the war in Korea is on. I agree with that outlook.

While those witnesses were not talking about truth through youth, but were merely considering any and all ideas that might help to spread truth, I believe there testimony gives support to the suggested truth-through-youth movement.

I do not know what the Members think of the idea of truth through youth which I propose but I hope you will all give it thoughtful consideration. I had again better emphasize the same thing that I pointed out on several occasions back before war in Korea started, namely, that I believe the program should be put into effect regardless of whether Russia will cooperate or not. There are many, many nations that will cooperate, and we should begin with those nations even if Russia will not cooperate.

If time permits before adjournment, I may introduce a resolution in order to have an expression of opinion by the Members so that the President and Secretary of State may know that the Congress either approves or disapproves of the idea of a truth-through-youth movement.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1950

Rev. F. Norman Van Brunt, associate minister, Foundry Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the light of all that is true, the strength of all that is good, the glory of all that is beautiful, we are inwardly led to seek Thee daily. Thy guidance and the knowledge of Thy will gives us insight and assurance in the trying tasks of life. Graciously help us to abide in Thee, that evermore we may be steadfast and strong. May our days be filled with a high sense of the sacredness of life and the value of time. Uplift us by the thought of the importance of our task in this day and let our hearts flow over with gratitude in the fact that we can serve in such a time as this. Above all, manifest Thyself to us in the daily round of life that Thy precepts may become our law. We pray in the dear Redeemer's name. Amen.

THE DAIRY INDUSTRY—RESOLUTION OF PURE MILK PRODUCTS COOPERATIVE OF WISCONSIN

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the Pure Milk Products Cooperative, an association of over 20,000 Wisconsin dairy farmers, through its board of directors adopted a resolution on May 4, 1950, at Fond du Lac, Wis., relating to the dairy industry, which I ask unanimous consent to be printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY TOWARD BIG BUSINESS

Pure Milk Products Cooperative, an association of over 20,000 Wisconsin dairy farmers, makes the following resolution concerning the pending antitrust suit against a large buyer of Wisconsin milk:

The members of Pure Milk Products Cooperative, to a large degree, sell their milk to evaporated-milk plants, where it is manufactured and then sold outside of the State of Wisconsin.

Recognizing the complex economic problems in marketing milk in Wisconsin, we feel the following facts must be considered:

1. Wisconsin has ideal conditions for producing milk, making it the largest milk producer in the world.

2. Although Wisconsin land and climate are ideal for dairying, other possible alternative products are not readily open to the Wisconsin farmer.

3. Because of these conditions, Wisconsin produces much more milk than is consumed in Wisconsin, with the surplus milk manufactured into various dairy products.

4. This surplus milk has led to diversified manufacturing of dairy products in Wisconsin, such as cheese, evaporated milk, butter, and other dairy products.

These manufactured dairy products must be sold throughout the United States, and the channels of distribution include national firms having outlets all over the United States. Particularly is this true with evaporated milk produced in enormous quantities in Wisconsin. The two principal means of national distribution of evaporated milk are through nationally advertised brand names or through the national retail chain stores.

We in Pure Milk Products Cooperative sell large amounts of milk to many national firms and seek to sell more milk in the national market in the ordinary free and nonmonopolistic channels of trade.

An antitrust suit against the A. & P. and its subsidiary, the White House Milk Co., if successful, will remove the White House Milk Co. as a customer of Pure Milk Products Cooperative in the evaporated-milk field.

The White House Milk Co. is nowhere near the factor in national sales of evaporated milk as are other and larger customers of Pure Milk Products Cooperative. If the Antitrust Department is successful in eliminating A. & P. and its subsidiary, the White House Milk Co., from the evaporated-milk field (White House Milk Co. has all its plants in the Wisconsin area), will other national firms be also eliminated from the evaporated-milk field? If so, this would radically affect agriculture in Wisconsin, because evaporated milk is the great user of surplus milk in Wisconsin. The elimination of the evaporated-milk industry in Wisconsin would restrict the opportunity of production on Wisconsin farms without available alternatives for the land.

Pure Milk Products Cooperative members, as dairy farmers, own and operate their farms. To strike down the markets for these members and for other Wisconsin dairy farmers will tend to cripple one of the vestiges of private ownership and operation in America: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That we recommend to our Representatives and Senators in Congress that a complete investigation be made of the present antitrust suit as to its effect on the dairy industry; we further recommend that Congress itself make a completely new study of the antitrust laws, with a view toward determining what the place of national firms should be in the marketing of dairy products.

COMMUNISM—RESOLUTION OF KIWANIS CLUB OF WATERTOWN, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I received in the mail today from the Kiwanis Club of Watertown, Wis., a comprehensive resolution on the reactions of the people in my State to the Communist menace at home and abroad. I think that this resolution reflects the grass-roots sentiments of many of the people of my State. They recognize the fact that at this very moment I am speaking brave American boys are dying in the muddy foxholes of Korea. Our men are giving their lives that freedom might endure, and it is absurd that we should fail to protect freedom here on the home front. That is why I have long urged that the so-called Mundt - Ferguson - Johnston anti-Communist bill which has been pending before us for so long, and which we on the Senate Judiciary Committee reported, be taken up in the full Senate.

Under this legislation at long last we would be able to identify Reds and Red-front groups. I ask unanimous consent that the text of the Kiwanis resolution be printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the Kiwanis Club of Watertown, Wis., fearing only God and His justice, alarmed by the Korean-Communist situation, concerned about the internal security of the United States, and disgusted with the indifference of our governments toward the danger of Communist infiltration in Federal, State, and municipal governments, as well as in private institutions that influence public opinion, such as radio stations and networks, newspapers and magazines, press wire services, and motion-picture interests, and being convinced that the expenditure of American lives in Korea is the result of these conditions;

Now, therefore, we resolve and demand that all departments of government—State, Federal, and municipal—awaken to the realization of conditions of our time; that these governments adopt a joint policy declaring that no individual has a constitutional right to be employed by our governments; that the burden be put upon the individual employee to prove his loyalty in seeking or retaining Government employment; that all Government employees who are or have been members of the Communist Party, or who are or have been members of any Communist-front organizations, or who have continuously associated with such party organizations and their members, be removed from Government employ, and that no such individuals be so employed in the future. That where doubt of loyalty of an employee or applicant cannot be removed, his employment be terminated or denied; that the dupes of the Communist Party be treated in the same category as the members because it makes little difference whether we are injured purposely or unwittingly; be it further

Resolved, That the citizens of the United States be urged to forgive those administrators who have allowed their departments to become infiltrated in innocent ignorance, provided that they cooperate to the utmost to rid the Government of this vermin and refrain from cover-ups and whitewashings when investigations are made; be it further

Resolved, That our heroic defenders in Korea and elsewhere be given unlimited support and cooperation; that the daily reports on movements of troops, naval units, and supply be discontinued; that the best of our military weapons and equipment be put at the disposal of our fighting men; that the severest punishment be meted out to those who knowingly or negligently cause one drop of American blood to be needlessly shed; be it further

Resolved, That all such radio stations and networks, newspapers and magazines, press wire services and motion picture interests or other news gathering agencies make thorough scrutiny of any and all news copy which may contain even the slightest hint of Communist propaganda, and which tends to vilify editorially those loyal Americans in our governments who stand courageously for good, clean, Communist-free American constitutional government, yet which makes martyrs of known Communists, dupes, and fellow travelers. That these radio stations and networks, newspapers and magazines, press wire services and motion picture interests or other news gathering agencies herein described, when upon discovering such Communist slanted copy passing through their facilities, make every effort to block the transmission of same, and that the person or persons responsible for the authorship of such Communist slanted copy be dismissed immediately from the employ of such agencies. That any and all writers or correspondents upon applying for employment with the above-described agencies, shall have imposed upon them the burden of proof of loyalty to the United States, and if unwilling or unable to demonstrate this proof of loyalty, be forever denied employment with these agencies even on a part-time or free-lance basis. That any and all writers presently so employed shall also have imposed upon them the burden of proof of loyalty to the United States, and if unwilling or unable to demonstrate said proof, that they be dismissed immediately from the employ of these agencies. Further, that these agencies instruct their employees to avoid any "accidental" reports of troop or supply movements when handling news during the prosecution of a war; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the Honorable Harry S. Truman, President of the United States, the Hon. Alexander Wiley, United States Senator from Wisconsin; Hon. Joseph McCarthy, United States Senator from Wisconsin, and each of the 10 Representatives in Congress from the State of Wisconsin; the Hon. Oscar Rennebohm, Governor of the State of Wisconsin; city manager Dean Van Ness, of Watertown; the United Press, Associated Press, and International News Service; WTTN, Watertown, Wis., the Watertown Daily Times, Watertown, Wis., and major newspapers in the State of Wisconsin; and Kiwanis International.

The above resolution was adopted unanimously by the Kiwanis Club of Watertown, Wis., on July 17, 1950.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY ON THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, AND NEWSPAPER COMMENT

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the body of the RECORD at this point a statement prepared by me regarding the President's message to Congress on July 19, 1950, together with pertinent articles and an editorial.

There being no objection, the statement, articles, and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY REGARDING PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO THE CONGRESS ON JULY 19, 1950

I strongly support the recommendations embodied in the President's message of July 19.

The President has reported the developments in Korea and given to the Congress a factual statement of action taken on the part of our Government in response to the resolution of the United Nations. This statement should reassure the American people of our activity and the purposes for which we have dedicated the strength and honor of this Nation in the Korean crisis. I shall support the President's request for additional funds for national defense and national security. Increased appropriations are needed if we are to protect our national security and be properly prepared to meet any eventuality in view of the uncertain conditions that prevail in the world today.

I support the President's proposal to remove limitations upon the Army, Navy, and Air Force personnel. The armed forces must be increased in strength and numbers. The President's proposal of the use of selective service, National Guard, and the Organized Reserve to fulfill the needs of the military will be supported by the Congress.

I support the President's recommendations for the utilization of our industrial and productive resources for the purposes of national defense. It is absolutely imperative that we have a system of allocations and priorities to meet defense production requirements. The economic controls proposed by the President upon consumer credit and the cutback in Government construction program must be undertaken if we are to control inflationary tendencies which are now everywhere evident.

It is to be hoped that we can evade the necessity of reestablishing rigid price control and full-scale rationing. The decision on this subject will be primarily up to the American people. There is an adequate supply of food and consumer goods to meet regular needs. However, if some sections of the public persist in hoarding and in price gouging, the Government must act to protect the public interest. A drastic increase in prices could very well threaten the economic solvency of our country.

The recommendation of the President for increased taxes as a brake upon inflationary pressures merits prompt action on the part of the Congress. Every effort must be made to pay for additional military and national defense expenditures out of current revenues. This will require a marked increase in taxes both upon corporations and individuals. The disastrous effect of uncontrolled inflation cannot be overemphasized. Nothing would be more dangerous than to permit our economy to get out of hand and thereby greatly add to the costs of national defense and at the same time cheapen the value of the dollar and destroy the value of savings.

I believe that the Congress should reenact the excess-profits tax. Every effort must be made to prevent war profiteering. War profiteering and price gouging should be branded as un-American activities. Those who rig prices to take advantage of a critical international situation are guilty of undermining the strength and productivity of our country. Our industrial production and the faith and confidence of our people can be seriously injured by drastic price increases and the creation of false shortages of critically needed materials.

War profiteers should be branded as home-front subversives and saboteurs. War profiteers are dangerous to American security and American morale. Price gouging and profiteering in this critical hour give aid and comfort to our enemies, and place undue strain and burdens upon the American people.

I shall support all measures necessary to channel needed materials and manpower into defense plants. I shall support all measures necessary to regulate prices and to assure an adequate distribution of goods and services. I shall urge vigorous prosecution by every agency of Government of those who are guilty of war profiteering and selfish greed as exemplified in hijacking the market by exorbitant prices.

The crisis in Korea cannot be met by half-hearted and "business as usual" attitudes and practices. Every American has an equal responsibility to cooperate with his Government and the United Nations. Every American has a great stake in the welfare of our people and economy. Unchecked inflation can be as disastrous as invasion.

INSTINCT OF GREED—SUPERPATRIOTS SEEN OUT TO EXPLOIT WAR PSYCHOLOGY FOR SELFISH PURPOSES

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

Wars—even rumors of wars—arouse the greedy instinct in some human beings.

Our present situation is no exception. Again there are the signs familiar to any one who has watched the necessary preparations for our national defense from a front seat here before—here where the necessary steps must be taken to curb the greedy instinct.

The old characters bob up once more across our Nation.

There are the hoarders who rush out to stock up and thereby cause shortages, which begins a vicious circle of inflation, and there are those greedy purveyors of goods who exploit the psychology thus created to jack up prices and make a quick profit for themselves—while young men are dying. Fortunately, the Senate Banking Committee is now moving to investigate the wave of price increases that have occurred already since the North Korean invasion.

CRY OF SUPERPATRIOT

Now we hear again, too, as before, the mock earnest cry of a sort of superpatriot among those opposed to social and welfare proposals and expenditures who rise up to exploit the war psychology for their own selfish purposes. Wrapping themselves in the flag, they piously demand a cut in what they call unnecessary expenditures for our domestic economy. They don't say so, but they mean those things that Government has come to do to promote the welfare of our people. They shout bombastically for entire concentration on military expenditures.

It is their aim, under the convenient cloak of national defense, to stop or slow down some of the programs we have adopted in the general public interest. The technique is to starve them out, that is to deprive these functions of necessary appropriations and running expenses.

These are still a very small part of our budget.

We're going to need plenty for our military, no doubt about that, and we'll get it without the help of superpatriots here described. That will be needed on the firing line in Korea, or wherever, and to bolster our position all over the world. But there is a firing line here at home, too. It must remain strong.

A FIGHT FOR DEMOCRACY

We are engaged, on the Korean front and all over the world, in a fight for democracy. To us, democracy has come to mean the welfare, as well as the freedom, of people, our people and people elsewhere.

In the last few years we have strengthened our democracy here at home by many measures well known to all, too numerous to list, to improve the living conditions of our people through better housing, better health, opportunities for jobs at good pay, protection in employment and security for old age, development of natural resources, including our great river basins, which provide facilities for better living as well as opportunities for new employment for a growing population.

They reinforce the freedoms for which we fight, for they have freed us from the worries and cares that weaken other people to give up their freedoms. We have something to protect, a more full and rounded way of life than anywhere else in the world.

These are established functions of Government. They must be expanded gradually, in our democratic way, rather than curtailed, for we need a balanced program here at home to keep ours a dynamic democracy, an ideal not only for ourselves, but for those whom we would enlist on our side in the world-wide struggle.

[From the Washington Evening Star of July 19, 1950]

DEMAND FOR CONTROLS INCREASES AS PRICES CONTINUE TO CLIMB

Increased demands for stern Government measures to prevent runaway prices for food and other products were voiced anew today as the Korean crisis spurred a buying wave throughout the country.

As Government officials kept a close watch on the situation with a view to using limited authority under existing legislation to hold prices down, the Senate Banking and Currency Committee prepared to open hearings into recent increases that have been described in varying circles as "unconscionable" and "outrageous."

Chairman MAYBANK of the Senate group said the inquiry will give special reference to increased prices for eggs and meats.

Developments included:

1. William P. Kennedy, president of the 220,000-member Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, telegraphed President Truman and congressional leaders, demanding the return of price controls and rationing in order to protect American consumers from unconscionable increases.

2. Coffee prices climbed to new record highs in the New York market. Kroger's stores, one of the country's larger chains, announced increases of 4 and 5 cents on bag-packed coffee and 4 cents on vacuum-packed.

3. More manufacturers of rubber tires for passenger cars and trucks posted price boosts ranging from 5 to 12½ percent.

4. Esso Standard Oil Co. raised the price of gasoline in all its marketing areas 0.2 to 0.5 of a cent a gallon.

5. While many prices were increasing, a big break in commodities sold for future delivery occurred in yesterday's trading. The drop coincided with news that the Communist drive in Korea had been checked, but the selling was attributed largely to profit taking by previous purchasers.

6. The cotton market broke sharply shortly before the Government acted late yesterday to stabilize rising prices by announcing that 4,320,000 bales stored under price-support programs will be kept available for market sales.

7. Marriner S. Eccles, of the Federal Reserve Board, offered a six-point program to curb inflation which he said is developing rapidly because of the Korean situation. The program included no tax reductions, reimposition of a corporation excess-profits tax of 75 percent, and a request to organized labor to seek no wage increases while the tax boost remained in effect.

AUTHORITY EXISTS

As many prices continued to increase, attention was directed to the Government's authority under existing legislation to place curbs on markets for such commodities as wheat, corn, cotton, dry beans and peas, butter, flaxseed, linseed oil, cottonseed oil, cheese, dried eggs, and dried milk.

Power to set up what amounts to price ceilings exists in provisions of farm law relating to Government authority for disposing of farm surpluses acquired under price-support programs.

By offering these products at set prices, the Government could pretty well fix the top limit of prices, at least as long as its supplies lasted. Few if any buyers would pay more than the Government selling price.

In the case of nonperishable and storable commodities, the Government may sell at prices equal to 5 percent above the current price-support rate, plus reasonable carrying charges.

In the case of perishable products—such as butter, cheese, dried eggs and milk—the Government may sell at any price it sees fit, when there is danger of these products deteriorating.

Despite recent price advances on some foods at the retail level, most commodities owned by the Government are still selling for less than minimum levels at which Uncle Sam could sell them.

Wheat, for example, is selling at close to the price-support level, which is 90 percent of parity, or a farm average of about $1.99 a bushel. Parity is a standard for measuring farm product prices. It is declared by law to be equally fair to farmers and those who buy their products.

The Government's minimum selling price for wheat would be 5 percent above the support price—about 10 cents—plus charges involved in Government storage and handling, which would be around 12 cents. Added together, this would give a wheat sales price of about $2.21 at the farm.

Certainly the Government, with its large stocks of grains, is in a position now to keep wheat from climbing to postwar peaks of $3.50, and corn from advancing above the $2 level.

The Government would jump at the chance of selling present large stocks of butter and cheese.

The situation is different with regard to meats and sugar, two foods which have gone up considerably during the past 2 weeks. It owns none of these foods. Neither does it hold any coffee or wool, other items which have jumped in price. Large stocks of wool bought during the war have long since been sold.

At what stage in a prolonged price rise the Government might toss its supplies on the market to check the advance is a question which cannot be answered at this time. Officials have made no commitments.

It is generally believed, however, that the Government would not attempt to keep prices of farm products—except perishables—from advancing to full parity, inasmuch as parity is the goal of farm legislation and programs.

In mid-June only five major farm products were bringing parity or more. They were wool, soybeans, beef cattle, lambs, and veal calves.

[From Washington Post of July 20, 1950]

CONTROL PROGRAM

In his message to Congress President Truman pointed out that industrial production is 81 percent higher than in 1939 and food production is a third higher than at any time before the war and practically as high as it was during the war years when we were sending far more food abroad than we are now. Furthermore, there is still some leeway for increasing the national output. Under these conditions the country can unquestionably support a substantial increase in military expenditures without serious strain. However, it will be necessary to restrict civilian consumption of steel, construction materials, and various other products already in short supply in order to provide additional supplies of such materials for the Armed Forces.

If businessmen, labor, farmers, and consumers show good sense and exercise restraint in buying, the control program recommended by the President will, we believe, enable the Government to meet its military needs without an inflationary rise in living costs necessitating resort to price controls and rationing. This is a very big "if," and there is no certainty that the warning that drastic controls will be recommended if prices continue to rise will put an end to profiteering and hoarding. But the President has wisely decided to test the efficacy of a system of limited and indirect controls before turning to methods that are difficult to enforce, costly to administer and deeply resented by the public. He has asked Congress for authority to establish priorities and allocate materials needed by the military. Otherwise he is relying on credit controls and increases in taxation to check consumer buying of goods in scarce supply and to curb inflation. The mere authority to requisition supplies needed for national defense would check excessive inventory accumulation. And if industrial managements succeed in working out voluntary plans for insuring prompt and adequate supplies of goods for military use, it may not be necessary for the Government to issue allocation orders.

The proposal to establish controls over consumer credit would also make it possible to reduce the buying of automobiles and other durable goods on the installment plan, thereby releasing steel and various scarce materials for military use. His orders for a cutback in public housing construction and tighter restrictions on Government-insured home mortgages will slow the pace of a building boom fostered by extremely liberal housing credits that has boosted the cost of building and intensified scarcities of materials needed for military use. The President further recommends application of controls to prevent an expansion of privately financed real-estate credit, but does not indicate the type of legislation required to effect it. In this case, too, the mere authorization to apply such controls might induce bankers to take steps to restrict such loans of their own volition.

All these plans for tightening credit serve the dual purpose of relieving inflationary pressures on the economy and releasing materials for production of military equipment. They will not, of course, prevent a general rise in prices and living costs, unless steps are taken to offest increases in the Federal budgetary deficit brought about by an unexpected expansion of military spending. The President is requesting approximately $10,000,000,000 more for defense purposes. That sum, added to a prospective deficit in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, would lay the foundation for runaway inflation unless taxes are raised. Tax increases are in fact, as the President says, "our basic weapon in offsetting the inflationary pressures exerted by enlarged Government expenditures." And it is important to remember that heavier taxes make direct controls over prices and rationing less necessary.

Civilian government agencies have been instructed to review their spending program for the purposes of cutting down outlays that compete with the military for manpower and scarce materials. It is to be hoped that Congress will take steps to see that substantial economies are effected by such means. At this juncture, however, it is impossible to estimate with any approach to accuracy the effect of the expanded military program. The one thing that is certain is that the 1951 deficit will be large enough to make higher taxes imperative. For that reason we hope that Congress will not adjourn until it has voted for an increase in taxes that will be at least sufficient to offset the inflationary effect of the larger expenditures that lie ahead.

GENERAL MACARTHUR'S MESSAGE ON KOREAN SITUATION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, yesterday the President sent a message to Congress, and last evening he addressed the American people over the radio. In his address to the American people he quoted a message from General MacArthur. I ask unanimous consent that I may read into the RECORD the full text of the message from General MacArthur.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. LUCAS. The message reads:

The following is my current estimate of the Korean situation:

With the development in Korea of major elements of the Eighth Army now accomplished, the first phase of the campaign has ended and with it the chance for victory by the North Korean forces. The enemy's plan and great opportunity depended upon the speed with which he could overrun South Korea once he had breached the Han River line and with overwhelming numbers and superior weapons temporarily shattered South Korean resistance. This chance he has now lost through the extraordinary speed with which the Eighth Army has been deployed from Japan to stem his rush. When he crashed the Han line the way seemed entirely open and victory was within his grasp.

The desperate decision to throw in piecemeal American elements as they arrived by every available means of transport from Japan was the only hope to save the situation. The skill and valor thereafter displayed in successive holding actions by the ground forces in accordance with this concept, brilliantly supported in complete coordination by air and naval elements, forced the enemy into continued deployments, costly frontal attacks, and confused logistics, which so slowed his advance and blunted his drive that we have bought the precious time necessary to build a secure base.

I do not believe that history records a comparable operation which excelled the speed and precision with which the Eighth Army, the Far East Air Forces and the Seventh Fleet have been deployed to a distant land for immediate commitment to major operations. It merits highest commendation for the commanders, staffs, and units concerned and attests to their superior training and high state of readiness to meet any eventuality. This finds added emphasis in the fact that the Far East Command, until the President's great pronouncement to support the epochal action of the United Nations, had no slightest responsibility for the defense of the free Republic of Korea. With the President's decision it assumed a completely new and added mission.

It is, of course, impossible to predict with any degree of accuracy future incidents of a military campaign. Over a broad front involving continuous local struggles, there are bound to be ups and downs, losses as well as successes. Our final stabilization line will unquestionably be rectified and tactical improvement will involve planned withdrawals as well as local advances. But the issue of battle is now fully joined and will proceed along lines of action in which we will not be without choice. Our hold upon the southern part of Korea represents a secure base. Our casualties despite overwhelming odds have been relatively light. Our strength will continually increase while that of the enemy will relatively decrease. His supply line is insecure. He has had his great chance but failed to exploit it. We are now in Korea in force, and with God's help we are there to stay until the constitutional authority of the republic is fully restored.

MACARTHUR.

Mr. President, I take this opportunity of commending and congratulating General MacArthur for the magnificent way in which he is handling the Korean situation. In the message I have read we find evidence of the courage, the fortitude, and the bravery which have characterized the activities of every American soldier in every war in which we have participated. It also indicates the superior training of our soldiers by our great military leaders everywhere. The Communists, ruled by tyrants, surely will understand that Americans in whom the love of freedom and independence have been engrained for centuries, will not permit the aggressor to destroy those sacred and God-given endowments which have been handed down to us through the Bill of Rights by the founders of the Republic and will continue through the years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels compelled to admonish Senators, including the Senator from Illinois, that debate during the morning hour is not permitted.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I asked unanimous consent to do what I did, and it was granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator to ask permission to read a message from General MacArthur, and that was accomplished. The Chair feels compelled to enforce the rule against debate during morning-hour routine business. If the Senator from Illinois intended to include in his request permission to comment on the message of General MacArthur, of course the Chair would recognize that fact.

Are there further petitions and memorials? If there be no further petitions or memorials, reports of committees are in order.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION (REPT. NO. 2108)

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a report of the Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, a resolution to investigate whether there are employees in the State Department disloyal to the United States——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would say to the Senator from Maryland that a report from the subcommittee is not in order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Which I have been instructed——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it is a report from the full committee it is in order.

Mr. TYDINGS. I referred to it as I did only for identification. I was instructed by the full committee to submit the report to the Senate, and that I now do.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report is filed.

Are there further reports of committees?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to inquire if this is a report of the subcommittee which the Foreign Relations Committee has been asked to report to the Senate, or whether the Foreign Relations Committee adopted this report and is making it as a committee report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland stated it was a report of the full committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

Mr. President, I move that the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made pursuant to Senate Resolution 231——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LODGE. If I understood correctly it was stated that this is a report of the full committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is a report of the majority of the committee, which is a report of the full committee. That does not mean that every member of the committee agrees to it.

Mr. LODGE. It does not mean that any members of the committee agreed to it, if I correctly understand the action that was taken. I understood that the full committee merely transmitted the report, just the same as the Post Office Department transmits a letter from one person to another. That is clear from the record.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland has submitteed the report as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I rise to take issue with the statement just made by the Senator from Maryland and say that the report is not a report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report of the committee speaks for itself, and it is not debatable.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. If this is not a full committee report, and is, as has been later stated, only a partial report of a subcommittee, I make the point of order that it is out of order and should not be filed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHERRY. Pardon me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order. It is presented by the Senator from Maryland as a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, by direction of that committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not want in any way to impose upon the time of the Senate by way of an appeal, but I should like to ask a question of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, to clear up the record. Is this a report of the full Foreign Relations Committee? Is it their report or is it a report of a subcommittee that the full committee has been asked to report to the United States Senate?

Mr. CONNALLY. Is the Senator asking me the question?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. Who has the floor, Mr. President?

Mr. WHERRY. I think I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair must sustain the rule that this report is not debatable. The Chair will recognize the Senator——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if there is no other way to do it, if I am foreclosed from taking any other action, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska need not be in such a hurry. The Chair was about to say that he recognized the Senator from Nebraska to make a motion. Whether that motion is in order or not is another matter.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have already appealed from the decision made by the Chair before the question of making a motion was even considered.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What decision of the Chair is it from which the Senator from Nebraska appeals?

Mr. WHERRY. That this is a report of the full Committee on Foreign Relations. The distinguished Senator from Maryland stated that it was authorized to be reported as a subcommittee report.

Mr. TYDINGS. No.

Mr. WHERRY. When that statement was made I asked the distinguished occupant of the chair to clarify it. I understood he clarified it with the observation that that is what it was. If that is what it is I make the point of order against the filing of the report on the ground that it is a report of a subcommittee, and I ask the Chair to rule on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair made no such observation. The Chair stated that the Senator from Maryland, as he understood, representing the full committee, or the majority of the Committee on Foreign Relations, was reporting this as a report from the committee. The fact that he said it was a report of the subcommittee to the full committee has no parliamentary substance because a subcommittee cannot report to the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct. Mr. President, both minority members of the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee rose to their feet and addressed the Chair and stated that this was only a subcommittee report recommended by the full committee to be reported to the United States Senate. On that ground I raised the point of order that it is not proper to file it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A report of a committee to the Senate of the United States cannot be made by individual members of the committee whether they are in the majority or minority, unless authorized by the committee to do so. The Chair understood that the Senator from Maryland had been authorized by the committee to make this report.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President, I should like to direct——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before I take my seat, I should like once again, if I may, to ask unanimous consent to address my inquiry again to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee has been standing on his feet for some time, awaiting an opportunity to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate that; and I have been on my feet waiting for the answer.

Mr. CONNALLY. I could not answer the inquiry when the Senator from Nebraska was talking and was yielding to other Senators.

Mr. WHERRY. I was trying——

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator did not do me the courtesy of waiting until I could answer.

Mr. WHERRY. I am always courteous to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, as all Senators know, the original resolution directed that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee or any subcommittee thereof should actually conduct the investigation. As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, I appointed the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee. It made the investigation, and, as a subcommittee, reported to the Foreign Relations Committee.

That committee, as the Committee on Foreign Relations, adopted a motion that the report of the subcommittee be reported to the Senate—not as the report of the subcommittee, but as the report of the full committee. I, as chairman of the full committee, designated the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], for the full committee, to make the report to the United States Senate.

That is all there is to the matter, so far as I know. Our records show that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under those circumstances, the Chair will hold that this is a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and is automatically entitled to be filed at this time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator from New Jersey address the Chair?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I rise as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee to say that I should like to state what at least one of the members of the committee understands about this matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair clarify the situation. This is an important question, and the Chair wishes to keep his rulings clear and keep the situation before the Senate clear.

Under the rules—and the Chair has, in advance, consulted the Parliamentarian about the precedents in these matters—a report of a committee is entitled to be filed automatically when we reach that point in the morning hour. No Senator can prevent—either by way of objection or otherwise—the filing of a report by a committee at that time. A report automatically may be filed at that time, and, if filed, is automatically received by the Senate. Motions in that connection are not in order at the time when the report is filed under such circumstances; and debates on it is not then in order.

So the Chair is bound to hold that under the circumstances and on the statement of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] himself and on the statement of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the chairman of the committee, this is a report of the committee. It has been filed. It is not debatable.

If a Senator wishes to discuss it, he may request unanimous consent for that purpose; but the Chair would be compelled to hold that the report is not debatable at this time, any more than any other committee report is debatable at this time.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may now discuss the report.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if we are going to have unanimous-consent requests made, and agreed to, to debate the report, probably we shall have unanimous-consent requests for that purpose all the remainder of the afternoon.

It seems to me that the proper course is to have the report filed. Thereafter, Senators may discuss it or may make any proper observations they may wish to make in regard to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has held that the report has been filed by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. If the report is a report of the subcommittee, and if all that the full committee did was merely to direct the transmission of the report of the subcommittee to the Senate, would the Chair's ruling be the same?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair's ruling would be the same, namely, that the Committee on Foreign Relations, acting in its official capacity, directed the chairman of the subcommittee to make the report to the Senate as a report of the full committee.

Mr. TAFT. However, Mr. President, my parliamentary inquiry is that if the full committee did not direct the chairman of the subcommittee to make the report as a report of the full committee, but merely to transmit the report of the subcommittee to the Senate, would the Chair's ruling be the same?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution under which the investigation was made directed the Committee on Foreign Relations to report to the Senate. It has done so.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. As a member of the committee, do I have the simple right to explain what happened at the committee meeting? I think I have that right.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Any Senator may request unanimous consent that he may do so; but any Senator may object to such a request. There is no inherent right of debate on the part of any Senator in connection with the filing of a report from a committee.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I do not intend to debate the report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Any statement or speech or explanation with regard to it is, in a parliamentary sense, debate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. I made a point of order, and the Chair overruled the point of order; is that correct?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair ruled that the report is a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the report cannot be filed at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair, because that is the only way this point can be raised, so that Senators, such as the Senator from New Jersey and others, may make their representations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that debate on the report is not precluded by the ruling of the Chair——

Mr. WHERRY. I understand that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Except that the morning hour is set apart for the purpose of the introduction of bills, joint resolutions, the submission of simple resolutions, the making of committee reports, and so forth, as every Senator understands.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course; that is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If matters properly coming in the morning hour's business are not concluded by the hour of 2 o'clock, automatically the unfinished business—which in the present case happens to be an appropriation bill—is laid before the Senate. Thereafter any Senator who obtains recognition may not only debate the unfinished business but may debate any other subject on the face of the earth which interests his intelligence.

So when the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, if morning business has not been disposed of, any Senator is eligible to debate this report or anything else, if he is recognized by the Chair. The Chair tries to be fair in recognizing Senators.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have no quarrel with the action of the Chair in that respect. However, the point of order has been made and has been ruled upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received the report, and it is not now debatable.

Does the Senator from Nebraska appeal from the Chair's decision?

Mr. WHERRY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair for the sole purpose that Senators who wish to make statements about what the committee did may have an opportunity to do so and to debate the matter to that extent.

The appeal is debatable, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I cannot understand why it is that Senators are insisting that this matter be taken up during the morning hour. The Vice President has ruled that the report can be filed, as a result of the action of the Foreign Relations Committee in advising the Senator from Maryland to file the report. Why Senators are insisting upon a discussion of this matter during the morning hour is difficult for me to understand. When the hour of 2 o'clock arrives, Senators can obtain the floor and can debate this issue as long as they wish to do so, and can make any motions in that connection which they may desire to make. However, it is not fair to the morning hour and it is not right to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair at this time.

Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That motion is not debatable.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Putting the question.]

Mr. WHERRY. I ask for a division.

The Senate proceeded to divide.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] are absent on public business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

So Mr. WHERRY's appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reports of committees?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. For what purpose does the Senator from Nebraska rise?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move that the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made pursuant to Senate Resolution 231—relating to an investigation of disloyalty among employees of the Government—shall not be printed and shall be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the following instructions:

First. The Committee on Foreign Relations shall conduct a full and complete investigation in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 231; or Second. In the event said committee decides by a majority vote that a continuation by said committee of such investigation is not in the public interest, the committee shall recommend to the Senate the establishment of a trained bipartisan Commission, wholly independent of the Executive, to conduct a full, complete, and relentless search into the whole subject of foreign penetration of the Department of State and other agencies of the Government in accordance with the provisions of said Senate Resolution 231.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the precedents and rules of the Senate, the Chair holds that the motion at this time is not in order. Therefore, the point of order is sustained.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LUCAS. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. WHERRY and other Senators requested the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Is the motion now before the Senate the motion of the Senator from Illinois, to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Nebraska?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

The legislative clerk resumed the call of the roll.

Mr. BREWSTER (when his name was called). Mr. President, I am happy that I still have the privilege of voting "nay."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wanted to put that on the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is on the RECORD, and the Chair's response is likewise on the RECORD.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] are absent on public business.

So Mr. WHERRY's appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there further reports of committees?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may submit my individual views with reference to the report submitted under Senate Resolution 231, and that they be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the individual views will be received and printed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, in accordance with the instructions of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate, I ask that the majority views and the minority views be printed separately, as suggested by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

POOLING OF UNUSED IMMIGRATION QUOTAS

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for the pooling of unused immigration quotas, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill, prepared by me, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the explanatory statement presented by the Senator from Minnesota will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill (S. 3950) to provide for the pooling of unused immigration quotas, introduced by Mr. HUMPHREY (for himself, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. KILGORE, and Mr. LANGER), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. HUMPHREY is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HUMPHREY

Under our present immigration laws our total immigration quota, as fixed under the Immigration Act of 1924, is approximately 154,000 per year. It is not our intention with this bill to either raise or lower that quota. It is very clear, however, that within the past 10 years less than 50 percent of the available quota visas have actually been used. The result has been that immigration to the United States has been on a far lesser scale than our laws intended and has thus caused untold hardships both to our own welfare as a Nation and also to a great many needy immigrants. To correct some of these hardships it has been necessary frequently for Members of the Congress to introduce hundreds of private bills.

A great many Americans have been concerned with this development in our immigration practice. I have also felt that the quota pattern established in 1924 among different nationalities is today, in view of the changes in the European political scene during the past 26 years, somewhat obsolete. Nevertheless, there is today no way whereby we can shift quota visas from a nation which does not allow migration, such as the Soviet Union, to a nation which does allow migration but which has a very low quota, such as Greece.

With this background in mind, the bill which we introduce is designed to correct some of the inequities without the necessity of waiting for an over-all revision and modernization of our immigration laws. This bill would not displace the present nationality quota system, but it would establish priorities for three classes of immigrants, regardless of their nationality, who would be given visas to fulfill unused quotas.

The three priority classes would be:

1. Those immigrants who are needed in the United States because they possess special skills. This would include many scientists who are now needed for our defense industries and many working men and women whose skills are necessary for our defense activities;

2. Husbands, wives, children, and other close relatives seeking to rejoin their families in the United States; and

3. Refugees from behind the iron curtain and others who face persecution because of their religion, race, or opposition to totalitarianism.

Under our bill no more than 25 percent of the total unused quota would be used by any one of the three priority imigrant classes. The Attorney General of the United States would determine the qualifications under each priority category and the number of valid applications. Unused quotas left over after the exhaustion of the three special priorities would be available to regular immigrants from countries with oversubscribed quotas in the order of their application dates. All of the present immigration restrictions based on freedom from disease, illiteracy, communism, and crime would continue to apply under the new bill.

It is our intention that these three classes of immigrants should be given regular quota visas, regardless of their nationality, to the extent that such visas under our present total immigration quota are unused by regular immigrants. The new priority system is to come into effect only to the extent that the nationality quotas are unused.

I am proud to say that the bill we introduce represents the united views of more than a score of national organizations which have been studying ways of modernizing and Americanizing our immigration laws. Representatives of these groups believe that our bill would make the needs and wishes of the United States and of American citizens the guiding basis of our immigration code.

These organizations, acting through the Joint Conference on Alien Legislation, include, among others: American Friends Service Committee, American Jewish Committee, American Jewish Congress, B'nai B'rith Anti-defamation League, Catholic Committee for Refugees, Church World Service, Federal Council of Churches, Hebrew Immigrant Aid Society, International Rescue Committee, Japanese American Citizens League, Jewish Labor Committee, National Board of the Y. W. C. A., National Catholic Rural Life Conference, National Catholic Welfare Conference, National Council of Jewish Women, National Council on Naturalization and Citizenship, National Lutheran Council, National Travelers Aid Association, Unitarian Service Committee, United Service for New Americans.

It is an honor for us to introduce this bill and bring it to the attention of the Senate Judiciary Committee for consideration.

DEFENSE PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950—AMENDMENT

Mr. THYE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 3936) to establish a system of priorities and allocations for materials and facilities, authorize the requisitioning thereof, provide financial assistance for expansion of productive capacity and supply, strengthen controls over credit, regulate speculation on commodity exchanges, and by these measures facilitate the production of goods and services necessary for the national security, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS—AMENDMENT

Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. MCCARRAN, Mr. LEHMAN, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. NEELY, Mr. GRAHAM, Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma, Mr. KERR, Mr. HUMPHREY, and Mr. PEPPER) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WAR RISK AND CERTAIN MARINE AND LIABILITY INSURANCE BY UNITED STATES MARITIME COMMISSION

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I submit for appropriate reference an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (S. 2484) to authorize the United States Maritime Commission to provide war risk and certain marine and liability insurance, and I ask unanimous consent that a statement prepared by me concerning the amendment be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and lie on the table, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Washington will be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The statement presented by Mr. MAGNUSON is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR MAGNUSON CONCERNING THE AMENDMENT TO SECTION 1213 OF S. 2484

As reported from committee, S. 2484 provides permanent authorization for the Secretary of Commerce to provide war risk and marine insurance under certain special circumstances.

This amendment is designed to meet the objection voiced by the Minority Calendar Committee to such permanent authorization, by placing a time limit of 5 years on the authority of the Secretary of Commerce to provide insurance and reinsurance under the bill.

The language of the proposed amendment is intended to effectively provide a definite expiration date on the Secretary's authority and at the same time to carry forward only those provisions of the bill which provide for the settlement and adjudication of claims and to continue the jurisdiction of the Admiralty Courts to hear and determine those causes of action arising out of the issuance of policies of war risk insurance by the Secretary of Commerce during the said 5-year period.

INCREASE IN LIMIT OF EXPENDITURES BY COMMITTEE ON RULES AND ADMINISTRATION

Mr. GILLETTE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 311), which was referred to the Commitee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That the limit of expenditures authorized under Senate Resolution 250, Eighty-first Congress, second session, agreed to April 13, 1950 (authorizing the expenditure of funds and the employment of assistants by the Committee on Rules and Administration, or any authorized subcommittee thereof, in carrying out the duties imposed upon it by subsection (o) (1) (D) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate) is hereby increased by $25,000.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

The following bills and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles, and referred, as indicated:

H. R. 7303. An act to amend section 120 of the Internal Revenue Code; to the Committee on Finance.

STATE DEPARTMENT LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I move that the report which has been filed in connection with Senate Resolution 231 be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations. The basis of my motion is this: The Chair has already ruled that the report speaks for itself as to whether it is the report of the subcommittee or the report of the full committee.

I have examined the report, and it clearly does speak for itself. It shows undeniably that it is the report of the subcommittee. On page 4 it says:

We, as members of the subcommittee.

The first witness to appear before us was Senator MCCARTHY.

On the same page:

Subpenas duces tecum calling for the production before us.

Finally, Mr. President, without examining the further details of the report, I invite attention to the fact that on page 170 the report is signed as follows:

MILLARD E. TYDINGS, chairman.
THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN.
BRIEN MCMAHON.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I demand the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has already ruled on the point, and holds again that the motion is not in order.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I yield to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] for an inquiry.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Missouri has been given the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has made his motion and has discussed it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Michigan for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a point of order.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not yield for a point of order.

Mr. LUCAS. A point of order.

Mr. DONNELL. I have not yielded for a point of order. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair appeals to the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from Illinois, as well as other Senators, to give the Chair an opportunity to make his ruling. In the first place, the Chair has held heretofore that this report is not debatable in the morning hour. He has held that a motion to recommit is not in order. An appeal has been taken from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to finish his statement. An appeal has been taken by the Senator from Missouri from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. The Senator from Missouri will be given all the time in the world.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appeal is debatable. The question arises whether when a Senator takes an appeal he is entitled thereafter to continue to have the floor, although the appeal may be debatable, or whether, having appealed from the decision of the Chair the Chair has an obligation to recognize another Senator to move to lay the appeal on the table. Previous occupants of the Chair have ruled that it is in order to move to lay an appeal on the table, and the Chair thinks that is the orderly procedure to follow.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I was assured that I would have ample opportunity. I ask the Chair whether I have the floor at this point.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri insists on keeping the floor after he has made his motion taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair. Such a motion is subject to be laid on the table. If the Senator insists on keeping the floor, the Chair feels that he is entitled to do so.

Mr. DONNELL. I so insist, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is in accordance with the precedents.

Mr. DONNELL. I so insist. I yield to the Senator from Michigan for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The question is this: On the flyleaf the committee report states:

Subcommittee Print. Senate. State Department Employee Loyalty Investigation. Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations Pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, a resolution to investigate whether there are employees in the State Department disloyal to the United States, together with individual views of Senator LODGE."

I ask the Senator from Missouri whether it does not display on the flyleaf that it is a subcommittee report.

Mr. DONNELL. My answer is in the affirmative. I think it very clearly does so state. I should like to say further, Mr. President, may we have order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield only for a question.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri whether he finds anywhere in this document——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Chair maintain order? I did not catch the Senator's question.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if he finds anywhere in the report an indication whether the report is a committee report or a subcommittee report.

Mr. DONNELL. I have not examined the entire report. I have examined it sufficiently, however, to make it perfectly clear in my mind that this is a report of the subcommittee and not a report of the full committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say that——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield only for a question.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator permit me to say to him that if he will consult the executive record of the Committee on Foreign Relations he will find that there is absolutely no question whatever that the full membership of the Committee on Foreign Relations merely voted to transmit this subcommittee report to the Senate. It did exactly what the Post Office Department does when it receives a letter from one American citizen and transmits it to another citizen.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I make a point of order.

Mr. LODGE. I have not finished.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Senator can yield to another Senator only for a question.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I yielded only for a question. I yielded for no other purpose. In accordance with the inquiry which the Senator from Massachusetts had partially framed, I think it would be highly informative if there were brought before the Senate, either by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] any other Member of the Senate, or the clerk of the committee, the record of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield solely for a question.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would it be agreeable to the Senator from Missouri to have produced for his information the record of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the vote of the committee?

Mr. DONNELL. It would be entirely agreeable to me that it be done, and I think it should be done.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question only.

Mr. MUNDT. I wonder if the Senator from Missouri would be good enough to assure the Senate that he will continue his discussion long enough to permit the clerk of the Committee on Foreign Relations to produce the executive minutes of the committee so that the Senate may have all the information before it.

Mr. DONNELL. The question is answered in the affirmative. I shall continue my discussion for a sufficient length of time to enable that to be done.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Missouri as a matter of courtesy, not as a matter of right. The Parliamentarian has repeatedly advised the Chair, and so advises the Chair now, that a Senator who makes a motion is not automatically entitled to the floor to discuss his motion. The question of recognition is up to the Chair. The Chair recognized the Senator from Missouri as a matter of courtesy, not as a matter of right.

Mr. DONNELL. I understand that I am recognized, and I shall retain the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield for that purpose?

Mr. DONNELL. If I may do so without losing the floor. I shall be glad to do so by unanimous consent if I may.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator can do so only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DONNELL. I ask unanimous consent that the parliamentary inquiry may be made without my losing the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Michigan will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FERGUSON. The parliamentary inquiry is this: After the Chair recognizes a Member of the Senate, even as a matter of courtesy, can the Chair revoke the recognition?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That question is not before the Chair. He has recognized the Senator from Missouri. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. I appreciate very much the courtesy of the Chair.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. JENNER. I ask the distinguished Senator from Missouri this question: Considering the fact that we are now at war, and considering what has transpired here this afternoon, how can we get the Reds out of Korea if we cannot get them out of Washington?

(Manifestations of applause in the galleries.)

Mr. DONNELL. That question is one which I think is very difficult to answer. I shall proceed to the discussion of the appeal which is now pending.

It has been ruled by the Chair—Mr. President, may we have order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. The occupants of the galleries will be in order. Under the rules of the Senate, the occupants of the galleries, while welcome, are not permitted to offer any demonstration of approval or disapproval with respect to what occurs on the floor of the Senate. Everyone must understand that a little conversation on the floor creates a great deal of disorder. The Senate is entitled to be orderly. Senators who are not willing to abide by the rules should leave the Chamber. If occupants of the galleries do not abide by the rules, the Chair has a remedy for that.

Mr. DONNELL. I greatly appreciate the courtesy of the Chair and the usual clear and explicit manner in which he has ruled.

Mr. President, as I see it, the question which is presented before the Senate is quite simple. We have had a document presented to the Senate. It has been ordered filed. It has been declared to be filed. The Presiding Officer of the Senate has so ruled. A motion was made to recommit the report, with certain directions which were set forth in the motion. A point of order was made, and sustained, that the motion was not in order. An appeal was taken, and, upon motion, the appeal was laid on the table. The conditions of the motion to recommit as presented by the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] were in the form of instructions. Perhaps I should read them.

That the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made pursuaut to Senate Resolution 231 (relating to an investigation of disloyalty among employees of the Government) shall not be printed and shall be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the following instructions:

1. The Committee on Foreign Relations shall conduct a full and complete investigation in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 231; or

2. In the event said committee decides by a majority vote that a continuation by said committee of such investigation is not in the public interest, the committee shall recommend to the Senate the establishment of a trained bipartisan Commission, wholly independent of the Executive, to conduct a full, complete, and relentless search into the whole subject of foreign penetration of the Department of State and other agencies of the Government in accordance with the provisions of said Senate Resolution 231.

The Vice President has ruled, in general effect, that he had previously declared that this report was filed, and that consequently a motion to recommit was not in order, and from that ruling the appeal which is now pending has been taken.

Mr. President, I submit, first, in connection with the appeal, that the motion to recommit as it was submitted by the junior Senator from Nebraska is not at all the same motion that is now pending, and action upon the motion to recommit as it was made by the junior Senator from Nebraska is by no means either res adjudicata or stare decisis of the motion which is now pending, made by the senior Senator from the State of Missouri.

In the first place, Mr. President, instruction No. 1 set forth in the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska does not at all appear in the motion which has been made by the Senator from Missouri. The Committee on Foreign Relations, according to the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska, "shall conduct a full and complete investigation in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 231." The motion which the Senator from Missouri has presented is a motion which makes no direction whatsoever to the Committee on Foreign Relations as to what shall be done.

Then, Mr. President, in the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska, provision is made for the event that the Committee on Foreign Relations decides by a majority vote that a continuance by said committee of such investigation "is not in the public interest, the committee shall recommend to the Senate the establishment of a trained bipartisan Commission, wholly independent of the Executive, to conduct a full, complete, and relentless search into the whole subject of foreign penetration of the Department of State and other agencies of the Government in accordance with the provisions of said Senate Resolution 231."

Mr. President, I digress at this point to mention the fact that this second instruction is not only not contained in the motion made by the Senator from Missouri, but that this particular portion of the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska is one as to which there may well be serious difference of opinion.

For instance, this portion of the motion made by the Senator from Nebraska would provide, as I have indicated, for "the establishment of a trained bipartisan commission, wholly independent of the Executive." I believe there can be no doubt as to the fact that entire independence from the Executive is a feature on which there could be, and certainly should be, no disagreement. But there may well be a question as to whether or not the Committee on Foreign Relations should recommend to the Senate the establishment of such a commission, rather than to have the Senate itself, through an appropriate committee, make the investigation.

I am not undertaking at this point to decide that question at all, but I do make the point that not only is there a difference between the motion which was made by the junior Senator from Nebraska and the motion made by the senior Senator from Missouri which would preclude the applicability of the ruling on the first motion to the second, but that the points of difference are very important, and are not mere insubstantial points. The point I have just mentioned certainly is one as to the substantiality of which there can be no doubt.

Mr. President, we now come to the question of whether or not the report which has been filed today is or is not the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hold in my hand what is denominated on the flyleaf as "Master copy." The words "subcommittee print" have been stricken out. I note, as did the Senator from Michigan a few moments ago, that the further portion of the title of this report, if I may so term it, namely, the flyleaf, has not been changed. What does it say? It says:

State Department employee loyalty investigation.
Report of a subcommittee.

I pause in the reading at that point. Can there be any doubt that a report of a subcommittee is not a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished occupant of the chair said that the report speaks for itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not a question.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the question, Is it not the report of the subcommittee?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in my opinion, the title upon it clearly delineates what the contents of the report itself likewise indicate, namely, that it is the report of a subcommittee.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Iowa solely for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if the President of the Senate did not say a few moments ago that the report as filed speaks for itself.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the Senator is precisely correct, and if he will recall, that was the ground on which I rose, and I stated the fact that the Chair had already so held.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri is a great lawyer, and he is familiar with the doctrine of obiter dictum.

Mr. DONNELL. In the first place, Mr. President, with all due deference to the Chair, I may say that I did not yield to the Chair for the purpose of making an observation. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposed that the Senator from Missouri would accord him the same courtesy the Chair showed the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I assure the Vice President that I shall do so, and I shall be very happy, if I may do so without losing the floor, at this point to yield to the present occupant of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will not take advantage of the Senator so far as occupying the floor is concerned.

Mr. DONNELL. May I state to the eminent Presiding Officer that the thought with respect to not yielding to the Chair was not original with me, but was suggested by my distinguished friend on my left? [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought it came from some extraneous source. [Laughter.]

Will the Senator yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. DONNELL. Before yielding to the Senator from Iowa, may I respond to the inquiry of the distinguished Vice President with respect to obiter dicta? I realize there are such things in court decisions, possibly in Senate reports, but I have observed—and I say this very sincerely—that the present occupant of the Chair, the distinguished Vice President of the United States, while he has not always made decisions with which the Senator from Missouri has agreed, which does not at all indicate that the decisions were wrong, I may say, nevertheless at least attempts to confine his observations to the point at issue. I am sure the Senate appreciates that attribute, as well as the very genial and pleasant method of handling the conduct of the business of the Senate which has been exhibited by the Vice President on numerous occasions.

Now, Mr. President, if I may do so without losing the floor, I yield to the Senator from Iowa solely for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri this question: Regardless of the geniality and the very frequent wit of the very eminent and able Vice President, does the Senator from Missouri feel that the Presiding Officer of the Senate has any higher right to interrupt a Senator in the course of his discussion on the floor for a personal observation of the Chair, than has any other Member of the Senate?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I agree thoroughly, and I am sure the distinigushed occupant of the chair does. The very kindly, genial manner with which the Chair addressed himself to the Senator from Missouri totally disarms me, and causes me to accede most willingly to any further question which the distinguished Vice President may care to address to me.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question only.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator from Missouri not refer to page 1 of the document he now has in his hand and tell us whether the language "Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report," indicates that this is a report from the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. DONNELL. I do not think that indicates any such thing at all. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is from the Foreign Relations Committee. He is a distinguished member of that committee. He has rendered very outstanding service. He comes from the Committee on Foreign Relations and submits a report, and, as the present distinguished occupant of the chair remarked only 20 or 30 minutes ago, "The report speaks for itself" as to what it is.

Mr. ELLENDER. But is it not a report from the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. DONNELL. That is the point I make: It is not a report from the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question only.

Mr. FERGUSON. The question is this: On the fourth page, from which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana read, appears: "Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report," and the flyleaf indicates—report of what? "Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations"; which indicates clearly that it is not a committee report.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I was not able to get the question of the Senator from Michigan. I yield to him further for the question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The question is this: On the fourth page of the document the distinguished Senator from Louisiana read this language: "Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report," and on the flyleaf there is an explanation as to what that report is: "Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations." Now is it not fair to say that he was submitting a subcommittee report, and not a report of the whole committee, for if it had been intended to be a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations it could have been stated there, "Report of the Foreign Relations Committee."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I agree thoroughly with the observation of the Senator from Michigan. And may I say, Mr. President——

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Louisiana for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I will yield in a minute.

When the Senator from Michigan first addressed his question to me, in fact, when he subsequently did, he referred to page 4 of the copy. As a matter of fact, what he was reading from was page 1 of the copy. I turned to page 4——

Mr. FERGUSON. It is the fourth page.

Mr. DONNELL. I do not yield for any observation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri does not yield.

Mr. DONNELL. No.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask if the Senator from Missouri will yield for a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Michigan for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan asks if considering the flyleaf as being one page, and the contents as being two pages, whether the next page would not be the fourth page in the book, although it is numbered "1", and the preceding pages of the book are numbered in Roman numerals?

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator may be quite correct, but I may say that by a very interesting coincidence, while the Senator from Michigan was addressing the Senator from Missouri as to page 4, the Senator from Missouri turned to the page which is denominated "4" at the left hand upper corner, and I find that at the beginning of the third paragraph upon that page is this significant language:

> We, as members of the subcommittee, did not approach our duties under the resolution in a vacuum—

And so forth and so forth. That, I think, Mr. President, in line with the very wholesome and salutary and accurate observation of the Chair that this report speaks for itself indicated beyond peradventure that this is a report of the subcommittee. And what, Mr. President, could the language mean: "We, as members of the subcommittee," unless the "we" to whom reference was made, are those by whom the report was submitted?

Mr. KEM, Mr. FERGUSON, and Mr. MUNDT rose.

Mr. DONNELL. I may say further, Mr. President, that in glancing through the flyleaves to which the Senator from Michigan referred—I trust the Senator from Michigan will be kind enough to pay attention to this particular reference—at the top of the table of contents, which appears on the flyleaf denominated Roman "III" appears this significant language: "Contents—I. Report of the subcommittee."

I observe, going down page after page, line after line, starting, for instance, with "Introduction," then "Conception of the subcommittee's duty," page 1, page 4, and so forth and so forth, that obviously these contents are the contents of a report of the subcommittee.

I yield to my distinguished colleague from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I should like to ask my colleague if it is not a fact that on page 170 of the document the signatures on the report appear, and that the signature of MILLARD E. TYDINGS, chairman, appears?

Mr. DONNELL. I did not understand the page.

Mr. KEM. I invite the attention of the Senator to page 170 of the document.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have page 170 before me. I may say that I think I already read into the RECORD the names that appear thereon. I am obliged to my distinguished colleague for emphasizing by his question the facts as they appear at the very conclusion, which goes back, I take it, and refers to the entire report:

> Respectfully submitted.
> MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Chairman.
> THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN.
> BRIEN MCMAHON.

Mr. KEM. Then I should like to ask my colleague another question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator if "MILLARD E. TYDINGS" is not identified on the second page of the document as the chairman of subcommittee on Senate Resolution 231.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am pleased that my colleague has called attention to that fact. May I read into the RECORD just what it states here on the flyleaf? It distinguishes between two things, one is "Committee on Foreign Relations." The other is "Subcommittee on Senate Resolution 231."

Mr. President, in the first place, what is Senate Resolution 231? It is shown—and I have it in my hand—that it was a resolution offered on February 21 by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], and on February 22 considered, amended, and agreed to. So the resolution to which reference is made on the flyleaf is obviously the Senate Resolution 231 from the heading of which I have just read.

We are the members of the two committees? The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations certainly is not the Senator from Maryland. The chairman is the distinguished Senator from Texas, "TOM CONNALLY, Texas, chairman," and he is so listed. I shall not read all the other names. They go on down through a very distinguished list of Members of our great body. "WALTER F. GEORGE, Georgia. ELBERT D. THOMAS, Utah. MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Maryland." Thus showing that he is "from the Committee on Foreign Relations."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. If I may have the indulgence of the Senator who desires me to yield for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I do not yield for the moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I do not yield at the moment. I call attention to the fact that immediately following the list of members of "Committee on Foreign Relations" is the list of the members of "Subcommittee on Senate Resolution 231." And who are they? "MILLARD E. TYDINGS, Maryland, chairman." That coincides with the capacity in which his name appears on page 170, to which my colleague from Missouri kindly called my attention.

Who are the other members? One is the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]. Likewise, the name of the Senator from Rhode Island appears on page 170.

Then the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] is listed as a further member of the subcommittee; and again the name of the Senator from Connecticut appears on page 170 as one of the signers of the report, which, as stated previously, is contained in a cover marked "Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations."

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Maine for a question.

Mr. BREWSTER. If the Senator from Missouri were advised that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, has verified his recollection as to the vote which was taken in the Foreign Relations Committee, would the Senator from Missouri ask unanimous consent for the Senator from New Jersey to be permitted to state that recollection?

Mr. DONNELL. The answer is in the affirmative, Mr. President; and I assume from the question that I am justified in inferring that the Senator from New Jersey has the information. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that, without losing my right to the floor, I may be permitted to yield to the Senator from New Jersey, to permit him to insert into the RECORD, orally, the information to which reference has been made.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey, speaking in his own right and for himself, ask unanimous consent that he may ask the Senator from Missouri to yield for that purpose?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I yield for the purpose of permitting the Senator from New Jersey to make that inquiry, provided I do not thereby lose the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, under the ruling of the Chair that this matter is not debatable, I think I shall be forced, notwithstanding my high regard for the Senator from New Jersey, to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The appeal is debatable. The Chair did not hold that the appeal is not debatable. The appeal is debatable. The report itself is not debatable.

Mr. CONNALLY. Furthermore, Mr. President, the Senator from New Jersey wishes to raise a question as to what transpired in the Foreign Relations Committee. Certainly that would be debating the whole question, not simply the appeal. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is heard.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I yield, if the Senator from New Jersey requests me to do so, if I may do so without losing the floor, for the purpose of enabling him to make the unanimous-consent request to which the Chair has alluded.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas objects.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well; if the Senator from Texas objects, I shall not make the request.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. MUNDT. Is the Senator from Missouri aware of the fact that the Senator from New Jersey now holds in his hand a copy of the executive minutes of the Foreign Relations Committee which will provide exactly the information the Senator requires?

Mr. DONNELL. I am not aware of that fact. However, as I stated earlier in my remarks, if a copy of the minutes of the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee is furnished to me, I shall be pleased to read it to this body at any time that the minutes are so furnished.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from South Dakota for a further question.

Mr. MUNDT. Would the Senator from Missouri be willing to yield to the Senator from New Jersey in order that the Senator from New Jersey may ask the Senator from Missouri some questions in connection with what he finds in the records of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be very happy to yield for that purpose, if the request is made by addressing the Chair, following transmittal of the matter to the Senator from Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is compelled to say that, as every Senator knows, any Senator who desires to ask the Senator who has the floor a question has a right to do so in his own right and on his own responsibility. It has not been customary for one Senator to ask unanimous consent that another Senator may be permitted to ask a question of the speaking Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield, if I may do so without losing the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator may yield to any Senator for a question.

Mr. DONNELL. I so yield to the Senator from New Jersey—for a question.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I would say to the Senator from Missouri that in the Foreign Relations Committee we have a rule that we do not use on the floor of the Senate transcripts of the minutes of the committee meetings; and I wish to say, further, that that rule will be observed by me.

However, I ask the Senator whether he will yield to permit me to state my recollection of what happened in the committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I do not yield for the purpose of permitting the Senator from New Jersey to state that recollection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey cannot ask the Senator who has the floor to yield for the purpose of permitting the Senator from New Jersey to make a statement, unless unanimous consent is given for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for the purpose of permitting me to state my recollection?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Missouri has declined to yield for that purpose, the Chair understands; and the Chair will protect the Senator from Missouri in his rights.

Mr. DONNELL. Yes, Mr. President; I decline to yield for that purpose. If the Senator from New Jersey wishes to ask me a question, I shall yield for the purpose of permitting him to do so.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, is the Senator from Missouri interested in knowing that my recollection of the situation in the committee and in relation to the report now under discussion is as follows: That there were two votes; one vote was that we receive the report of the subcommittee and that the subcommittee be discharged. We voted unanimously that that should be the case. Then, as I recall, I think it was the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER]——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am not yielding for a statement. If the Senator from New Jersey is framing a question——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has asked the Senator from Missouri whether he would be interested in this recital.

Mr. DONNELL. I would be.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not know whether the Senator from Missouri would or would not be interested in the recital. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am very much interested, and I shall continue to be interested in any question the Senator from New Jersey wishes to ask me.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Is the Senator from Missouri interested in the fact that the further vote was that the chairman of the committee be directed to report to the Senate the report of the subcommittee without comment?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am very much interested in that question and in replying to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Texas for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not desire to ask the Senator from Missouri a question.

Mr. DONNELL. Then, Mr. President, I do not yield. I do not yield for anything except a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri has yielded already to another Senator——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I did not yield for anything except a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. A Senator is not required to yield for any purpose; but he may yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. The question is this: That Report No. 1371, part 2, Foreign Economic Assistance, 1950, Supplementary Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations on Senate bill 3304, a bill to amend the Economic Cooperation Act of 1948, as amended, title V, an Act for International Development, being filed in the Senate from the Foreign Relations Committee, on the flyleaf reads as I indicated, and that would indicate that the report purports to be filed today; and it reads, "Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations Pursuant to Senate Resolution 231," which would indicate clearly that the Foreign Relations Committee has been in the habit, and that it has been its custom, to file reports as reports of the Committee on Foreign Relations, rather than as reports of subcommittees of the Committee on Foreign Relations—indicating that the one is a committee report and that the other is a subcommittee report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri wish to respond to that question? [Laughter.]

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, it is rather lengthy, but I shall endeavor to respond.

I shall say that the data furnished to the Senate by the Senator from Michigan in stating the question would be very persuasive to me as indicating the conclusion at which the Senator has arrived.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. President, let me say that it is approximately 23 minutes of 2, and I expect to yield the floor very soon, in order that there may be a vote in a short time.

I now yield to the Senator from Utah for a question.

Mr. WATKINS. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the page marked with the numeral "3", at the bottom of the page, in the report which has been under discussion. At the top of that page we find the following: "Contents—report of the subcommittee."

Then, on page 5 we find in Roman numerals the figure "II", and the following that we find this heading: "Individual views of Senator LODGE."

Does not that indicate to the Senator from Missouri that the entire contents of the report, according to those two pages, are made up, first, of the report of the subcommittee and, second, of the individual views of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I think that conclusion can readily be drawn by the Senator who has phrased the question.

At this time I shall conclude by saying that my appeal is based upon the sound statement made by the Vice President, namely, that the report speaks for itself as to whether it is a report of the subcommittee or a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I submit most earnestly and respectfully that the report does show, for itself, that it is a report of the subcommittee.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my appeal.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal on the table; and I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut withhold his suggestion of the absence of a quorum until we can request the yeas and nays on the question of sustaining the ruling of the Chair?

Mr. McMAHON. What is the Senator's purpose?

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to request that the yeas and nays be ordered on the pending question.

Mr. McMAHON. Very well.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I join in requesting the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the Secretary will call the roll.

So Mr. DONNELL's appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. What is now pending before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are still in order. Then the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution and ask that it be read, and I request its immediate consideration.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Resolutions would be the next order of business.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, my resolution is a Senate resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not a joint resolution, and the Chair cannot entertain it at this moment.

Are there any concurrent resolutions?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution. It comes under the order of concurrent and other resolutions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The legislative clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 312), as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made pursuant to Senate Resolution 231 (relating to an investigation of disloyalty among employees of the Government) be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the following instructions:

(1) The Committee on Foreign Relations shall conduct a full and complete investigation in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 231; or

(2) In the event said committee decides by a majority vote that a continuation by said committee of such investigation is not in the public interest, the committee shall recommend to the Senate the establishment of a trained bipartisan commission, wholly independent of the Executive, to conduct a full, complete, and relentless search into the whole subject of foreign penetration of the Department of State and other agencies of the Government in accordance with the provisions of said Senate Resolution 231.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. What time is it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is 1 minute of 2 o'clock.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I make a point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. LUCAS. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT OF RULE XIX

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, time ran out for submitting resolutions. I ask unanimous consent to send to the desk a resolution which amends rule XIX of the Senate, and I ask for its appropriate reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received, and the Chair will refer it to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The resolution (S. Res. 313) submitted by Mr. WHERRY was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That rule XIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to debate) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sections:

"7. (a) No Senator shall, in any proceedings conducted by any committee of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, directly or indirectly by any form of words impute to another Senator or to other Senators any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator.

"(b) If any Senator shall transgress the provisions of subsection (a) of this section in any committee proceedings, the chairman of the committee shall, or any member of the committee may, call him to order; and when a Senator shall be called to order he shall suspend and shall not proceed without leave of the committee, which if granted shall be upon motion that he be allowed to proceed in order, which motion shall be determined without debate.

"(c) If a Senator be called to order for words spoken in committee proceedings, upon demand of the Senator or of any member of the committee, the exceptionable words shall be taken down in writing and shall be read for the information of the committee.

"8. It shall not be in order for any committee of the Senate to file any report whether pertaining to a bill, joint resolution, concurrent resolution, resolution, or otherwise, which contains, directly or indirectly, any language which imputes to any Senator any conduct or motive unworthy or unbecoming a Senator."

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 247, in line 19, after the word "fund", to strike out the colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That $1,000,000 of the funds provided in this paragraph for the construction of transmission lines in South Dakota shall be available only for connecting the load centers of Armour with Watertown via Sioux Falls, and of Midland with Rapid City, and of Winner and Randall Dam.

And to insert:

Provided further, That $3,000,000 of the funds provided in this paragraph plus $3,000,000 contract authority shall be available for construction of transmission lines and substations in South Dakota, to include a transmission loop from Fort Randall through the load centers of Armour, Huron, Aberdeen, Andover, Watertown, Brookings, Sioux Falls, and Gavins Point to Fort Randall, and lines from Fort Randall to Winner and from Rapid City to Midland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 248, after line 24, to insert:

Such amount of the $1,300,000 appropriated in the Interior Department Appropriation Act, 1950, under the heading "Bureau of Reclamation", "General fund, contruction", "Fort Peck project, Montana", for the Havre-Shelby transmission line and substations as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior not to be required for termination of work on these facilities and the meeting of obligations heretofore incurred against said appropriation for such facilities shall be carried to the surplus fund and covered into the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "General administrative expenses," on page 250, line 5, after the word "Reclamation", to strike out "$7,000,000" and insert "$7,400,000."

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly to the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations. Because of misunderstandings with regard to this whole subject, I should like to make a statement with respect to my understanding of it. On Monday last, at about the hour of 4 o'clock, I was asked to comment on the report of the subcommittee. I had never heard of it. I immediately communicated with the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I was told that they did not know anything about it either, but that a report was to be submitted, probably in a day or two. I asked that as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations I be permitted to have a copy of the report, and one was obtained for me. I also asked that copies of it be sent to every other member of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, may we have order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate will be in order. The Chair insists that Senators and others who desire to converse leave the Chamber. Disorder in the Senate grows more and more noticeable with every week and every month. The Chair insists on order in the Chamber. The rule applies also to the occupants of the galleries.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I made the request so that when we came to consider the report we would know what it was all about. The report came to me at about 5 or 6 o'clock that evening. I had a dinner engagement and could not examine the report in detail. I was summoned to a meeting of the Committee on Foreign Relations the following morning to consider the report. When we arrived the chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], presented a report of what he said was the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations to which had been committed the investigation of the charges of disloyalty in the State Department. Let me emphasize that any findings of the subcommittee were to be reported to the full committee for action by that committee. It was brought out in the discussion that the report was submitted by the three majority members of the subcommittee, that one member of the subcommittee did not even know the report was being considered, and that another member of the subcommittee had been asked to file his own report, which he did, but without being given access to the report filed by the majority. My experience has been that when I served as a member of a subcommittee and a majority of a subcommittee was prepared to submit a report, a meeting of the entire subcommittee was held, in which all members participated. If the minority members cannot agree with the draft report of the majority members they are given the privilege of filing minority reports. Apparently in this case the draft of the majority report of the subcommittee was not submitted to the other members of the subcommittee.

Therefore I raise the question whether it was officially a report of the subcommittee, because no meeting was held for the purpose of approving or rejecting it. It was submitted by three members of the subcommittee without the other members of the subcommittee participating in its preparation, although one member of the subcommittee had filed a report of his own without, as I understand, having participated in the discussion of the pros and cons, which took place among the majority members of the subcommittee. The report came to the Committee on Foreign Relations in that form.

In the full committee the action that was asked to be taken was that the report of the subcommittee be accepted, that it be reported to the Senate by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and that the subcommittee be discharged. Objection was made to dealing with the matter in that way because the point was raised that there were different questions involved and that they should be voted on separately. According to my recollection the language of one motion was to the effect that the Committee on Foreign Relations receive the report of the subcommittee, and that the subcommittee be discharged. We debated that motion briefly, and by unanimous vote the report was received and the subcommittee was discharged with the distinct understanding that the receiving of the report of the subcommittee simply meant its being received for our information, and that we took no action one way or another with respect to it.

I raised the point that I had not had the opportunity to read the report, and therefore I could not pass on it one way or another. I said I did not feel we were in a position to deal with it. Other members of the committee said that they had not read the report. Therefore at no time was this report submitted to us for action. As I have said, after the report had been received by the committee and the subcommittee was discharged—and we had all voted for it, because we thought it was the proper disposition of the matter—it was moved that the Committee on Foreign Relations transmit to the Senate through the chairman, or someone designated by him, the report of the subcommittee without comment one way or another. I voted for that with the distinct understanding that it was simply carrying out the wishes of the subcommittee chairman that the matter be transmitted to the Senate as a subcommittee report for such use as the Senate might see fit to make of it.

I distinctly understood that it was not a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I doubt that anyone except the chairman of the subcommittee had read the report. I do not know that anyone else ever had a chance to read it. There was no discussion of its merits. The entire discussion was on procedure, and on the procedural question it was distinctly understood that we were merely having the report sent to the Senate by the chairman of the full committee, or someone designated by him. He very properly designated the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] who had been chairman of the subcommittee. I recollect very clearly that what was to be submitted to the Senate was the subcommittee report without comment. I want to make it clear, Mr. President, that it was to be the subcommittee report without comment, because there seems to be some misunderstanding as to what the committee did. Certainly I would not have voted "yea" on that motion if in doing so it meant that the committee was accepting the report and sending it to the Senate as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. While there was some discussion of whether we would debate the merits of the report and approve it or disapprove it we agreed that no one knew enough about it to discuss the merits. Consequently no vote was taken to approve or disapprove the report.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] simply stated that he wanted to submit his report, to have it received by the committee, and to have the subcommittee discharged. After that we could do anything we wanted to do with respect to it. Following that a member of the subcommittee made the motion that the report be transmitted to the Senate through the chairman of the subcommittee, but only as a subcommittee report without comment. It is clear in my mind that it meant we were not passing on it, but simply sending it to the Senate without comment, because we had all agreed that we did not have time to read it or pass comment on it.

I want to make my position clear, because those are the facts as I remember them. If any other member of the committee wishes to take issue with me, he may do so, but I thought that I must make this statement. I do so because it was perfectly clear that no position was taken one way or the other by the committee. We were simply transmitting to the Senate the report of the subcommittee. The form of the document as submitted is the report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations pursuant to this resolution with a deletion of some language that reflected on the minority members of the subcommittee.

Mr. President, I have made this statement for the benefit of the Senate. I now yield the floor.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER obtained the floor.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, did the Chair recognize me?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Chair had recognized me, I believe.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I do not know; I am just inquiring.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair). The Chair may state that he did say to the Senator from Wyoming that he would recognize him for the purpose of attending to a matter relating to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have no objection to the filing of a report, or something of the kind, by the Senator from Wyoming. I merely desire to make the situation clear. I believe I have the floor. If the Senator wishes to have me yield for the purpose of permitting him to put something in the RECORD from the committee, I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I can wait, but I thought I heard the Chair recognize the Senator from Wyoming, and I was about to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognized the Senator from Iowa, but stated to him that the Chair had previously told the Senator from Wyoming he would recognize him. The Chair did not see the Senator from Wyoming on the floor at the time the Senator from Iowa rose.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I shall not take the time now.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I do not want the Senator from Wyoming to think I refused to yield to him. I shall be glad to do so if he desires.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to make some comment on the pending business.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I shall be very brief, because my time is limited this afternoon.

Mr. President, with regard to the discussion which has proceeded about the so-called report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations in connection with Senate Resolution 231, I wish to make a few observations at this time, in an attempt to set the RECORD as straight as I know how to do so, and as straight as I can, according to my recollection of the facts.

I was appointed a member of the subcommittee when it was originally created pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, under the Committee on Foreign Relations. The subcommittee was in existence for approximately 5 months, held thirty-some sessions, called only 35 witnesses to investigate the comprehensive field of loyalty of employees, past and present, in the State Department of the United States Government.

What I shall have to say about this report in some detail will be submitted to the Senate, in one way or another, in the near future, but so far as the history of this so-called report is concerned, I desire to make a matter of record and to recite the recent history of this document which now is on the desk of the Secretary of the Senate, and alleged to be a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. President, I consider it not to be a report from the Committee on Foreign Relations for several reasons. In the first place, so far as I know—and I should have to ask the Senator from Massachusetts to give his own testimony on this point—there never was a meeting of the subcommittee in connection with this matter to pass on, to accept, or to refuse to accept, this document now called the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. There may have been a secret or a clandestine meeting of the three members of the majority party to peruse this proposed report, but if there was, no notice was sent at least to me, as a minority member of the subcommittee, to attend any meeting where any galley proofs, or any typewritten original drafts, or any proposals by way of a subcommittee report, were to be submitted. I never saw this so-called report until after it had been printed, denominated a report of the Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and it was after it had been given to the press at least 1 day before I ever saw it in its final form.

I never at any time had notice that there was to be a meeting of the subcommittee, nor was I ever in attendance on any meeting of the subcommittee, at which the question of the adoption or rejection, or alteration of or addition to the report, could have been brought up.

Mr. President, a couple of weeks or so before this report, so-called, was actually filed, I stated that I did not myself have any report to make, because I considered that the subcommittee had done a completely inadequate job in probing the subject-matter, that it had wholly failed to call witnesses who should have been called, that it had not been zealous to look into the very subject-matter which it was directed by the Senate to investigate. I said it was no time for a report, that we did not have sufficient evidence on which to base final conclusions, and that so far as I was concerned, I had no personal report I could develop, except to say we were not ready for a report.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, here is a document purporting to be a report from a subcommittee, when no meeting of the subcommittee was ever called to consider whether I, who had said originally that I did not think it was time for a report, could either agree with or disagree to any part of the verbiage that was proposed to be issued under the name of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

As I have said, Mr. President, except for rumor, thereafter I had no knowledge of the actual preparation of this report until last Friday, I believe it was, in the afternoon, when in the hands of one of the newspapermen who cover the Senate I saw this document. It had been given to the press. It had never been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations for its actions, but it had been given to the press, and although I cannot vouch for this, I am told that access was given to some members of the press to the galley proofs before the report had been printed, for their background and for their information.

Later, 2 or 3 days ago, there was a meeting of the full Committee on Foreign Relations. This document was laid before the full Senate Foreign Relations Committee by the chairman of the subcommittee, and the net result was, as will be disclosed if the record is read, that it was very carefully stated that this document was received, only, by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The record is replete with the discussion as to whether the word "accepted" should be used, or merely the word "received." By the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations the word "accepted" was deleted from the document by the committee, and the word "received" was substituted in its stead, to indicate that this was not the work of the Committee on Foreign Relations, but was only a document developed by the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Then a motion was made to discharge the subcommittee. I voted for the motion to discharge the subcommittee, and I said in effect, as appears in the record of the Foreign Relations Committee itself, that I thought the subcommittee must be discharged because the futility had been demonstrated of attempting, under the methods which had been forced on subcommittee, to go deeply into the matter which it had been set up to investigate, and to discharge the responsibilities which had been committed to it. I said the inability of the committee to do the job the Senate had told us to do was very apparent and that the subcommittee might just as well be discharged. So I voted to discharge the subcommittee because I thought we had not done a job, and that there was no evidence that the subcommittee was going to do a job of thorough and adequate investigation.

Then the motion was made, if you please, Mr. President, to transmit this document to the Senate, and the chairman was authorized to designate a member to transmit it to the Senate.

Mr. President, if Senators will read the record of the Foreign Relations Committee at that meeting they will find that there was discussion about the particular meaning of the words which were used, and that "transmit" was used to indicate that the full committee was only a conduit by which this document, developed by three members of the subcommittee, could flow onto the Senate floor. The word "transmit" was used advisedly, and in the records of the Foreign Relations Committee it will be found that the discussion of whether or not the committee should take action on this document was pushed aside, and the members of the committee said they would take no action except the transmittal of this particular document.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee never approved this document, never adopted it as the act of the Foreign Relations Committee, and there is no statement of adoption in the record of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. President, I believe the statements I am making are accurate. They are certainly as I remember them, and I have been in some intimate association with this committee.

As I said a moment ago, I have agreed with some other Members who want to make statements this afternoon, that I shall not attempt exhaustively to canvas the subject at this moment. I shall do so at a later day, either by way of written report or speech, if I am permitted to file any kind of minority views. I may say to the Senate that I was denied that right the other day in the Foreign Relations Committee. I was accorded the magnificent privilege of filing with the Foreign Relations Committee certain statements which I might want to make, and then the Foreign Relations Committee reserved the right as to whether they would transmit my personal views as a member of the minority to the Senate. So I suppose in that channel, Mr. President, I am subject to the tender mercies of a vote of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I shall have to abandon the age-old right of a member of the minority to express himself to the same degree that members of the majority express themselves on matters that come before his committee. But that is more or less beside the point at this moment.

I should like to say, Mr. President, that this so-called document—and I want to call this to the attention of the Senate now, because I shall dwell upon it at length at a later date—in its entire connotation and context is an attempt to assail, to criticize, and to condemn the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]. Its entire connotation and concept is not to probe the State Department nor to probe the areas the Senate resolution directed the Senate committee to go into. It is a document which attempts to put the Senator from Wisconsin on trial as an individual, and completely misses the point of the investigation of the serious things which the Senate resolution directed the committee to investigate.

I have admiration for the Senator from Wisconsin as a man who has taken a position in this matter. The Senator from Wisconsin, however, is more or less beside the point. The Senator from Wisconsin has made certain allegations. He has never claimed that he had all the proof to sustain the suggestions he made. But throughout this entire so-called report, Mr. President, it will be found that the majority members of the committee are attempting to hold the Senator from Wisconsin up to the manger, as we used to say in Iowa, as the prosecutor and prover, and that a failure on his part to produce every last iota of proof on every subject affecting the State Department must cause the whole resolution to fall. Practically no effort was made to undertake an investigation of disloyalty in the State Department as the committee was charged to do by the Senate resolution. The Senate resolution did not direct the committee to prosecute or persecute, to malign, condone, or condemn the Senator from Wisconsin. It directed the committee to examine into loyalty in the State Department, and that has not been done.

Mr. President, we have been talking about the mechanics of this thing today. But above and beyond that, I think there can be little question; in fact, there is no question in my mind, that this is neither a report of the Foreign Relations Committee nor is it actually a report of the subcommittee, because, so far as I know, no meeting of the subcommittee was ever called to pass upon this report, at least so far as I, as a member of the minority on that subcommittee, received any notice.

Mr. President, this document is a mysterious and a mysteriously prepared document. It is a document whose antecedents, paternity and maternity, might be open to some serious and rather revealing facets. It is a document whose generation raises question in the mind of anyone who has followed this matter rather carefully. The peculiar verbiage, the invectives, and the vindictive attitudes in the phraseology of the report certainly bespeak a studied attempt to avoid meeting the issue the subcommittee was created to meet.

Mr. President, I have a great deal of information about this matter. I have information respecting witnesses who should have been called. One of the last acts I did in the committee was to request that the four men who signed statements that they had been hired to loot State Department personnel files of derogatory information be called before the committee. Instead of that, they were brushed off, and in this report they are brushed off as unreliable people, without the committee ever calling them before it.

There are other illustrations, Mr. President, that I shall note, and in considerable number, in the future. I say that I believe there is no legitimate paternity to this document which was filed today, alleged to be a report of the Foreign Relations Committee. It is a compilation of the views, or an authorized compilation of the views of three members of the subcommittee. It never has, to my knowledge, received a vote pro or con by the subcommittee. It may have. I do not say that it did not, but to my knowledge it did not, and I never received a notice of a meeting at which these views could be passed upon, accepted or rejected. It came to the Senate as a result of being received by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and transmitted to the Senate. I question its legitimacy, Mr. President, and at a future time I expect to discuss in some detail this report, and my views about the evidence and about the lack of evidence, about the vigor and the lack of vigor with which the investigation under the Senate resolution was pursued. I hope to make some general conclusions on the entire matter.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I should like to set forth very briefly the reasons which prompted me to support the motion to set up a trained, bipartisan commission to go into this matter of foreign penetration.

My general views on the entire question are set forth in my minority report, and I shall be very brief in my remarks at this time.

I was animated first of all by the conviction, which has grown upon me as I have served on the subcommittee, and also based on years of observation and study as a Member of Congress and as a member of the press, that a congressional committee investigation is not well suited to this kind of a problem; it is not an effective tool. The methods available to a congressional committee—namely, publicity and the development of facts for public consumption and for the formulation of public opinion—are precisely not the methods which are practical and useful when it comes to ferreting out disloyal persons or when it comes to testing the effectiveness of a departmental security system.

The members of such a congressional committee, no matter how able they may be generally, are practically never men who have the technical background and training to do a job of this sort. Being Members of the Senate, they have a great many other duties to perform, duties which are extremely pressing, and that means that they have not enough time to give to work of this sort. They lack the tools and the equipment which it is necessary to have in order to conduct properly an investigation of this kind. By that, I mean they do not have at their disposal detectives and recording devices and all the other paraphernalia involved in checking on a security system. No congressional committee can possibly have those things.

Finally, congressional committees of the type on which I have served—the usual type of congressional committees—are set up on a majority-minority basis, which inescapably brings in a political factor; that is something which cannot be prevented.

Mr. President, the matter now before us is one which never should be considered on a political basis. The basis of its consideration should be nonpolitical. We should not have the minority investigating the administration; we should not have the majority investigating the administration. We never will get, in that way, results in which the country will have confidence.

So, Mr. President, I have favored—and today a great many of us have voted in favor of—a bipartisan, trained commission. By "bipartisan" I mean a commission composed of an equal number of representatives of both political parties. That is the way the Hoover Commission was set up, and it has produced good results.

When I say "trained" I mean men who have had distinguished careers in fields of activity which qualify them to investigate a security system. I have in mind a commission which would have power to subpena, which would have the necessary money with which to do the work required, which would operate in secret, which would make only one public report at the time it finished its work, and which would make that public report after the election, so as to take this matter out of politics, where it has absolutely no place.

I should like to see serving on the commission men of national reputation and outstanding character—men such as Admiral Nimitz and General Devers—to be in charge of such work, and to get the truth, let the chips fall where they may, regardless of politics. Then there would be a result in which the country would have confidence. It is that kind of system which foreign governments have set up.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that, regardless of whether we agree with him or do not agree with him, he certainly is moving along in a constructive approach to a very difficult problem.

I wish to ask the Senator whether he expects to submit a resolution of that kind, which would be referred to the proper committee, which committee could give the resolution sufficient study and the consideration it should receive.

Mr. LODGE. I have already submitted such a resolution, and I have discussed it in my minority views, which I hope the able Senator from Illinois will take the time to read, for they are quite short, as compared with the majority report.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall read the views of the able Senator from Massachusetts.

However, let me point out that it seems to me that in voting a few minutes ago, the Senator from Massachusetts was voting in regard to a matter on which hearings should be held, and in regard to which persons such as those the Senator from Massachusetts has been discussing or persons of like character and ability should come before the committee and should express their views as to whether the method thus proposed for handling the situation is the best method.

What I objected to so seriously a moment ago was the attempt to have the Senate pass upon, by its vote, a proposal to compel the committee to act upon a very important proposition of this kind without hearings.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Illinois, who is always perspicacious, and who usually grasps the point very quickly, that I do not think he understood the point of the motion. The motion simply was to instruct the Foreign Relations Committee to report such a resolution. I think the committee could very easily do that.

Mr. LUCAS. But the committee would have been instructed to make such a report before hearings were held.

My point is that I think the Senator from Massachusetts has done a correct thing, namely, to submit a resolution for that purpose, and then let the committee to which the resolution is referred hold hearings, and subsequently make a report which can be discussed on the floor of the Senate.

I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts will agree with me that as a result of the investigation, we have before us a very serious question as to how a matter of this kind should be handled.

It occurs to me that it cannot be done by insisting on the type of resolution on which we voted several times this afternoon, namely, a resolution authorizing and directing the committee to do something without holding hearings, in fact, without any study or consideration at all, other than what we heard on the floor of the Senate.

So I wish to compliment the Senator from Massachusetts on the resolution he has submitted. I sincerely hope the committee will hold hearings on it, and that something constructive may come about as a result of what the Senator from Massachusetts has done.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall simply reiterate my conviction that the motion which was defeated today would not in the slightest degree have precluded the Foreign Relations Committee from holding hearings. I would have been opposed to precluding the committee from holding hearings, because I favor the best hearings the Foreign Relations Committee can conduct.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. But the Senator will agree with me, will he not, that the motion authorized and directed the Foreign Relations Committee to do certain things, or a subcommittee of the committee? Of course, it would hold hearings. But we were taking the initiative in the first instance by taking the power away from the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. LODGE. I do not agree. I think that would have been the case had the motion directed the Foreign Relations Committee to report a specific bill. I think if that motion had directed the Foreign Relations Committee to report my bill, for instance, it would then have completely taken away the committee's function. It did not do that. It did something which is often done in the Senate: It simply instructed the Committee on Foreign Relations to report a general proposition. It is certainly within the right of the Senate to do such a thing, and it leaves to the committee a wide field for action.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. There is an aspect of this matter on which I desire to have the views of the Senator from Massachusetts. I hope I may also have the attention of the Senator from Maryland. Mr. President, I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator going to ask me a question?

Mr. BREWSTER. I am going to ask a question, but I desire the attention of the Senator from Maryland. Could the Senator from Maryland give attention to the question which I am about to address to the Senator from Massachusetts? I should like the Senator's attention, if possible.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wonder whether the Senator is going to get into an altercation with the Senator from Maryland and me, in my time. I wonder whether he could not do it later. I have a continuity of thought which I should like to develop.

Mr. BREWSTER. I may wish to direct a question to the Senator from Maryland, at the proper time. I wanted to inquire about the application of the rule on the subject of committee reports.

Mr. LODGE. I do not want to discuss that question now, I may say to the Senator from Maine. I am not getting into that at all, now. I am trying to develop the thought of why we want to have a bipartisan trained commission. I should like to get that off in one piece, before we undertake to discuss other questions. If the Senator from Maine will defer for a moment, I should be glad to yield to him then.

Mr. BREWSTER. The only reason for the query at this time is that the Senator from Iowa is obliged to leave, and it is a matter in which he also has been concerned, and with which he has been identified. That was the only reason.

Mr. LODGE. When I get through, will the Senator ask me the question then? I desire to submit to the Senate the thought that many foreign governments, when they are confronted with the problem of foreign penetration of their foreign offices, when they think there are spies in their State departments, do not have a big circus in the caucus room, with all the bright lights and with all the paraphernalia which goes with it. They have a trained, expert, nonpolitical commission which proceeds in secret, and the first thing that is heard about it is the last thing that is heard about it. That is when they have apprehended the people and have punished them and put them in prison or have done whatever else is to be done with them. That is an efficient way of doing it. Where that foreign system has detected any number of spies, the congressional system which we have been using, either in the Senate, or in the House, for 15 years, has bagged only a corporal's guard. It has not been efficient. I think we must consider this matter today. Mr. President, I should like to have order. I do not like to interfere with private conversation, but I doubt if there is any more important subject before the country than that which I am discussing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will please be in order.

Mr. LODGE. I think we must consider the State Department in the light of the war which is going on in Korea and which in my judgment is but one manifestation of a world-wide struggle. To be sure, the State Department is always of vital importance to the United States. The State Department is far more important to the average man, woman, and child at the crossroads of America than it is either to the people who work in the State Department or to the Senators of the United States, because the State Department represents our vital interests abroad.

Now that we are engaged in a struggle which is partly military and partly political, the State Department is our first line of defense all around the world. It was the State Department that I think very effectively persuaded the United Nations to make this brutal aggression in Korea a United Nations concern. That was done quickly; it was done effectively. That is one thing that the State Department means to us. It is the State Department which is on guard now in Indochina, in Burma, in India, and in all other places where there is unrest and where there is a possibility of danger, but where there is not as of today a military situation.

It is the State Department that we depend upon to hold together the whole Pan-American structure of friendship in this hemisphere, which has been one of of the glories of the New World for over a century. It is to the State Department that we look to galvanize the Atlantic Alliance, because, now that we are engaged in this conflict, we know that we cannot carry it alone, and we must not try to carry it alone. When one allows his eye to go across the Atlantic he knows that it is to the State Department that he will look to promote cooperation with the British and French and the Benelux countries and Italy and Scandinavia so that they will do their utmost.

Then there are the countries which are not now in the Atlantic community but which ought to be, and in connection with which the State Department can use its good offices to make the necessary political adjustments and changes that will make it possible, for example, for Germany to come as an equal partner into the organization of the west on a basis which will completely safeguard the security of the Atlantic nations.

Those are all life-and-death responsibilities which the State Department carries, and it has been one of the interesting assignments that have come to me since being a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, to have a chance to observe the State Department, to serve on the standing subcommittee which maintains contact with State Department personnel, and to be a member of the board of directors of the Foreign Service Institute, where our Foreign Service personnel go to school. I say to the Senate that we are lucky to have many good people, many fine men and women in the State Department, men and women who have a real spirit of dedication, and who have a real skill in the work they are doing. They have also the basis in the State Department today of a good security system if they invigorate it along the lines that are suggested in this report.

But I think it is obvious, and I have never met a candid and well-informed person in the State Department yet who did not admit it, that there was in the past an era of great laxity. That is not a partisan remark. It can be found in the hearings, in utterly nonpolitical testimony by nonpolitical officials of the State Department, that in the fall of 1945 and in the beginning of 1946, by a stroke of the pen, there were transferred into the State Department 4,000 people from temporary agencies, not one of whom received any screening whatever. That was careless. I do not think anybody who is now in the Department was to blame for it, but it was careless, and it was bad.

The Department has made an effort to get rid of some of the people who should not be there, and I think the effort is sincere. But there must be a clean ending to this whole business. It is not fair to the State Department, it is not fair to the country that there should be a great big question mark and a great big doubt. There is not a Senator, whether he agrees with me or not, and there is not a newspaper man, whether he agrees with me or not on the substantive question, who does not know in his heart that this majority report and my minority report are not going to provide a clean ending to this business. They are just not going to do it. There will still be the doubt. We are never going to resolve it this way. There are going to be extremists who will yell on one side, and there will be extremists who will yell on the other side, but the rank and file of the people who think they perhaps do not like some of the methods which have been used to bring this matter to public attention, nevertheless do think that there have been things which were careless and which were wrong, and they are never going to be satisfied with a verdict which they regard as political. A United States Senator is regarded as being political; some may be regarded as being a little more political than others. But we hold a political office, and cannot get away from that.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an inquiry?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to ask the Senator, as bearing on the question which was discussed earlier today as to whether the document which has been filed here and about which we had considerable debate today is the report of the Foreign Relations Committee or the report of the subcommittee. I ask the Senator whether he attaches significance to the fact that, at page 29 of this document, under the heading "Conclusion," there appears this language:

> The conclusions of this subcommittee in regard to each allegation made by Senator McCARTHY are as follows—

After which appear five different conclusions.

Does the Senator think that has a bearing on whether the document is the report of the subcommittee or the report of the entire committee?

Mr. LODGE. I think it has a bearing. I have already stated my view that this report represents the views of the three majority members of the subcommittee and it comes to the Senate by virtue of being transmitted by the Foreign Relations Committee acting in a purely mechanical capacity.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield for a very brief question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Would the Senator object if at the conclusion of his remarks there be set forth in the RECORD that portion of the report which appears on page 29, starting with the word "conclusion" and ending with the contents of paragraph 5, as illustrative of whether this document is the report of the subcommittee or the report of the full Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts that portion of the report to which I have referred may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there are questions in the minds of the American people which they want answered, and we shall not get a satisfactory result until those questions are answered. There has been some criticism of me, and it has been perfectly fair comment, because I stated in the report that one of the questions that was not asked was, Who was it who sponsored Alger Hiss? It has been said that I was trying to go back 14 years. Mr. President, there are millions of persons in this country who want to know the answer to that question, and they do not know it yet. It is a legitimate thing to want to know. It is very definitely in the interest of every outstanding, patriotic man and woman in the State Department to have that point cleared up. That is not going to hurt them at all.

The resolution which was adopted by this body unanimously—every Senator voted for Senate Resolution 231—directed us to see whether persons who are loyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State—note the words—"are or have been employed." That language was sufficiently broad to go back to Thomas Jefferson's tenure of office as Secretary of State, which is something that I do not advocate doing; but there is a very legitimate concern with what went on in the recent past, and it is not expressed with the purpose of digging up dead horses or of making a political issue. There are many sincere persons who want to know what happened in the past so they can prevent its happening in the future. That is a perfectly reasonable, decent, respectable desire. We make mistakes; we find out what they are; then we try to profit by them.

So, Mr. President, those were the reasons which actuated me in voting for the resolution to establish a bipartisan, trained commission to bring about a clean ending to this business. It is a hard enough problem, any way, a very difficult problem; it is a problem out of which I think we must try to extract all the heat and all the passions we possibly can extract. If ever there was a subject in which men who hold responsible public office should not engage in personal vituperation, should not engage in personal attacks, by name, I think this is the subject.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I should first like to finish this thought.

There surely must be enough brains and ingenuity in America to devise a system for an effective investigation into the subject without besmirching the character of innocent persons, without impairing the position of the United States before the world, and without hampering the work of the investigative agencies of Government. Surely we can develop a system in which the congressional independence of the executive is combined with the professional competence of the FBI. That should not be too difficult a thing to do. That, I submit, is what we were trying to do in voting for the motion today. I do not believe I shall ever cast a vote which I think will look better when it is viewed in retrospect than does a vote to bring a clean and constructive ending to this whole business by means of a bipartisan, trained commission which will take the whole thing out of politics, get at the truth, and let the chips fall where they may.

I now yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, I was very much interested in the Senator's very descriptive presentation, and I wanted to explore a little bit——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, may we have order? It is very difficult to hear what is going on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Let there be order in the Chamber and in the galleries.

Mr. MUNDT. I wish to explore with the Senator the importance which I am sure he feels is involved in such an investigation completely without partisanship, by making it strictly bipartisan, and also having it set up in such a fashion that when its report is finally made it will be understandable and reassuring to the general public.

In that connection, I wonder if the Senator would agree with me that in establishing such a commission or committee it should be the sole creature either of the Senate or of the Congress, inasmuch as its function is to investigate conditions prevailing in an executive agency.

Mr. LODGE. I think there is a deep-seated instinct in America that no matter how honorable and high-minded a person may be we cannot trust a man to investigate himself. In the business community we are great believers in what is called an independent audit. If this investigation is to have the kind of constructive and unifying result which I think it should have, then the people whose confidence we want especially to win are not the people who are not questioning us now; they are the people who sincerely doubt what is going on. The only way we can get such confidence is to have the commission established in such a way that it represents all elements in the community.

I contend that one of the purposes of the investigation is to restore confidence and unity so that we can close ranks before the world and the State Department can go ahead knowing it has the support of the American people. We shall not get that kind of confidence—we shall be merely shaking hands with ourselves all the time—if we have the executive investigate the executive. We are not going to get that kind of confidence if we have a commission whose sponsorship is entirely from the side of those who agree with what is being done. We are not going to get that kind of confidence under those circumstances. What we want is a commission whose sponsorship represents all the elements who are sincerely in doubt about what is going on. Then we shall get a result which will unify the people and achieve the confidence so greatly needed.

Mr. MUNDT. I agree thoroughly. I raise the question only because in the original, and, I believe, the tentative text of the proposed resolution contained on page 343 of the subcommittee report which I hold in my hand, it is said, as one of the devices to be used in creating such commission, reading from paragraph (3–b)—

> The six members of the commission who are not Members of the Senate shall be chosen from a panel submitted by the President of the United States, comprised of persons who as a result of training, experience, and attainments, are exceptionally qualified to ascertain the facts with respect to the matters referred to in subsection (a) and to make recommendations with respect thereto.

I respectfully submit that inasmuch as this investigation, necessarily, is to check on the loyalty of appointees of the President of the United States, to have an investigating committee comprised of persons selected from a panel which the President submits would simply be to pyramid insult upon injury and to achieve nothing. It is highly imperative that to investigate these conditions we have a panel which will be so meticulously selected and strictly balanced between Democrats and Republicans that its findings when they are made will be such as will eliminate the Presidential proposition entirely.

Mr. LODGE. I say to the Senator that I am not irretrievably wedded to the language. I offered the resolution to indicate the kind of approach that I think would be fruitful. I am not irrevocably committed to any language in the resolution, and I shall be glad to make any changes which may be necessary.

Mr. MUNDT. The deletion of that language would bring the resolution into strict conformity with the splendid criteria established by the Senator in his remarks immediately preceding my last interruption.

Mr. LODGE. I am in sympathy with what the Senator says.

I should like to say, Mr. President, that on the political side I realize there is a school of thought which holds—and I have noticed it for 20 years—"You must never admit that there has ever been anything wrong. The minute you do, the fat is in the fire and you will lose a lot of votes." Theodore Roosevelt found it to be tremendously popular to be candid, to admit that some things have gone wrong, and to be human. On this Amerasia case, for example, it seems to me the Department of Justice has put itself in an utterly impossible position by maintaining the attitude through thick and thin that they did not make an error of judgment. That leads us to only one possible conclusion, which is very far from complimentary. It seems to me that it is much better to be candid, to let the chips fall where they may, and to throw the light into dark places.

I remember President Coolidge's attitude with regard to the oil scandals. I should like to quote from the remarks of former Senator Wheeler, who, as Senators will remember, was a Democratic Senator from Montana. Senator Walsh also was a Democratic Senator from Montana. They conducted a splendid and most effective investigation into the oil scandals. In that connection Senator Wheeler said:

> I know of my own personal knowledge that he—
> Senator Walsh—
> got from the Department, or officials in the Department, information which he afterward used, and if he had not been permitted to do that, and if I had not been permitted to do it, I am sure there would have been a complete failure of the investigation of the Department of Justice.

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is a good example to follow in all congressional investigations. As I recall, following that investigation President Coolidge was elected by the largest plurality percentagewise, I think, by which anyone had been elected President up to that time. It did not seem to hurt him politically at all to be candid and cooperative, and to put himself on the side of those who were trying to correct errors which had been made, so that we could all join forces and move forward.

It is bad when we adopt violent attitudes, because a violent attitude on one side begets a violent attitude on the other side, and indulging in personalities on one side begets the same thing on the other side. With a war going on in the Far East, we should try to eliminate all personal remarks about each other. I shall not make any personal remarks about anyone, although some have been made about me, because I think it is very important that we keep our eyes on the hills and that we move ahead together and restore confidence in the State Department, so that within 2 or 3 years the great efforts which our Government is making and the sacrifices which the young men who are now going into the armed services are making will result in lasting peace. After all, that is what is at stake here. What is at stake in setting up a bi-partisan commission is precisely what was at stake in the message of the President of the United States yesterday. I hope we may approach this proposition with that kind of breadth of vision, manhood, and statesmanship, and not from the standpoint of personalities and politics.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like to ask a very appropriate question of the Senator from Massachusetts and to have him discuss it, because it concerns the very question of personalities, which I think is most unfortunate particularly to those who are not privileged to be Members of this body. One case in the report very effectively illustrates the point I have in mind, and I wonder whether it has been brought to the attention of the Senator. It concerns a young man, 34 years of age, of Spanish-Jewish extraction, named Ralph de Toledano, who was referred to in this report at page 93 in this language:

> One of the primary forces motivating our conclusion is the inescapable fact that Senator McCARTHY's charges are almost exclusively based on the Larsen article in Plain Talk. That Larsen was the true author of the quoted portions of the article appears doubtful. On the contrary, there is reason to believe that the allegations were in fact made by Isaac Don Levine, and, as will later appear, possibly by Ralph de Toledano. The fact that these persons have been reported to us as professional anti-Communists, whose incomes and reputation depend on the developing and maintaining of new Communist fears, while not deemed necessarily significant, has not been altogether overlooked by the subcommittee.

I think everyone will recognize the fact that that is certainly very damaging to Mr. de Toledano who, as I understand from what has been reported to me by the former editor of Newsweek, has been an author of various books, including Seeds of Treason, dealing with the Hill case. He was formerly on the staff of New Leaders, which was a Socialist publication. He served in the Army during World War II. Later he was associated with the Society for Ethical Culture, then was managing editor of Plain Talk magazine, and later served with David Dubinsky's ILGWU, leaving there to go with the magazine Newsweek, of which he was an assistant editor. Naturally, Mr. President, this reflection on him is a very serious one. The first question I wish to ask is, Has the Senator given consideration to the question whether a committee report possesses the immunity from legal liability possessed by debates upon the floor? Has that matter come to the Senator's attention?

Mr. LODGE. I regret to say that it has not. I do not know.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have been advised by the Parliamentarian that there have been repeated Supreme Court decisions to the effect that a committee report is in that category, namely, that a committee report is in the same category as a speech or debate in the Senate, for which, under the Constitution, a Member shall not be held accountable in any other place. That being the fact, I assume that the Senator from Massachusetts would agree that we must be all the more particular about injuring the reputation of other people by action which we take here, or words we utter, or reports we make.

Mr. LODGE. I will say to the Senator from Maine that there can be no doubt about that, and there is no one who feels more strongly on that subject than I do. No one feels more strongly than I do about besmirching the reputations of innocent persons. I think it is very unfortunate, very un-American, and it goes against everything we stand for. I say that regardless of who does it, whether he is a Republican or a Democrat. I do not like the procedure. That is one of the reasons why I wanted to have the proceedings of the subcommittee held in executive session, because I was afraid that innocent people would be hurt.

Mr. BREWSTER. I have a letter addressed to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] by Mr. de Toledano under date of July 16, 1950. I venture to read it because it seems to me that here is an excellent laboratory case of what happens in a case like this:

> DEAR SIR: I have just read the report of your subcommittee on Communists in the State Department. I note its condemnation of privileged "character assassination" and call to your attention two statements.

Mr. President, I shall not read the first statement again. It is the statement which appears at page 93, which is repeated verbatim at page 162.

> (2) If true, the action of Levine and his associates in connection with the Plain Talk article is one of the most despicable instances of a deliberate effort to deceive and hoodwink the American people in our history (p. 148).
> These statements, insofar as they refer to me, are untrue, malicious, damaging to my professional reputation as a newspaperman, and libelous. Based on the unsupported word of a man convicted of a serious crime against his country, they are given the dignity of senatorial endorsement.
> I therefore insist that you and/or the cosigners of your report publicly retract them, or that you repeat them where you are not cloaked by immunity so that I can take the necessary action.
> Sincerely yours,
> RALPH DE TOLEDANO.

I see the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] is present. It is my information that there was offered to the committee sworn documents, to which was affixed the signature of Mr. Larsen, demonstrating conclusively that the statements Mr. Larsen make regarding Mr. de Toledano and Mr. Levine were absolutely false. I think the Senator from Iowa has photostats of those documents.

Does the Senator from Massachusetts have any information regarding either of those documents, to refute the evidence of Mr. Larsen regarding Mr. Toledano?

Mr. LODGE. It so happens that I do not; but I do want to reiterate once again that the story he told us underlines the broad principle to which I have adhered all the way through, that these proceedings ought to be in secret in order to prevent exactly the kind of injustice to which the Senator from Maine refers. If my memory is correct, I think the Senator from Wisconsin was in favor of holding the proceedings in secret for the very same reason. Having secret proceedings in an investigation of this kind is not only a much more effective way to ferret out people who are guilty, but it is the only way I know of of protecting people who are innocent.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I had not intended to go into this matter today, and did not in the short statement I made a while ago, but I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, inasmuch as the matter has been raised, if he does not recall that at the last executive meeting of the subcommittee at which he and I both were in attendance, I brought up the subject that Mr. Isaac Don Levine, publisher of Plain Talk, had shown me original documents alleged to have been signed and corrected by Mr. Larsen, for the publication of this article, and that I asked that they be given an opportunity to bring these original documents in to prove the verity or lack of verity of Mr. Larsen's testimony. Does the Senator recall that?

Mr. LODGE. It is my recollection that the Senator from Iowa did that. In fact, I believe a reading of the executive records will confirm the statement. That certainly is my recollection.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I assure the Senator that a reading of the record will confirm the statement, because I have recently read the executive committee record; but I wanted the Senator to recall that.

Does the Senator recall that Mr. Levine was not called with these documents either to substantiate or disprove this matter, or that Mr. Larsen was recalled for examination.

Mr. LODGE. I am quite sure Mr. Levine was not called, because I certainly would have remembered it if he had been.

Mr. BREWSTER. Would it be the opinon of the Senator from Massachusetts that under the circumstances as developed here it would have been most appropriate for Mr. Levine and Mr. Toledano to have an opportunity to refute evidence of this character reflecting so seriously upon them? In fact, I thought the committee took action that was calculated to bring that about.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly it would have been a measure of justice to those men; there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. BREWSTER. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts had not had occasion to secure any opinion as to the immunity enjoyed by a committee report.

Mr. LODGE. No; I do not know what the legal facts are about that.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for another question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. On page 93 of the alleged report of the subcommittee there appears the following statement, which I shall have to read to the Senator as a preface for my inquiry. This is a statement of the three majority members, and it is apropos to the matter of the Larsen article, and the claim by Mr. Larsen that Mr. Levine distorted his article, and it is apropos to the question of bringing in Mr. Levine and his signed documents to get at the truth of the matter. This is the quotation from the alleged report, in connection with the matter of their refusal to bring Mr. Levine in with his documents:

> One of the primary forces motivating our conclusion is the inescapable fact that Senator McCARTHY's charges are almost exclusively based on the Larsen article in Plain Talk. That Larsen was the true author of the quoted portions of the article appears doubtful. On the contrary, there is reason to believe that the allegations were in fact made by Isaac Don Levine, and, as will later appear, possibly by Ralph de Toledano.

In view of the fact that the three members of the subcommittee say that one of the primary forces motivating their conclusion was this Plain Talk article, does the Senator consider that our subcommittee should have called Mr. Levine, with his documents, and with his published articles, O. K.'d by Mr. Larsen, to prove whether or not Mr. Levine and Mr. Toledano fabricated these articles, or whether Mr. Larsen was distorting the facts?

Incidentally, I have photostatic copies of the documents, with Mr. Larsen's alleged signatures, and corrections in his own handwriting of the article as it went to the printers, together with photostatic copies signed by him of letters after the article was printed, commending the publishers of Plain Talk on the article, soliciting their acceptance and publication of other articles from him, and pointing out how he can continue to help ferret out subversivism in the State Department. Does the Senator feel that that would have been a proper field for us to explore and probe in order to arrive at the truth, rather than to accept the statement of Larsen, a discredited human being in his own right, and to disregard and refuse to bring in testimony which might get at the truth of these allegations, which, in the words of the majority members of the subcommittee themselves, is one of the primary reasons for their conclusions?

Mr. LODGE. Of course, if we had the kind of bipartisan trained commission I advocate, they would run down matters of that kind, they would go into all these leads, which this subcommittee has not been able to go into at all, they would get at the truth, which would be a matter of justice to individuals who have been aggrieved, as it would be a matter of justice to all the splendid people in the State Department, whose Americanism cannot be questioned. I have talked with a cross section of some of the security officials, and they are men who make a splendid impression, and they are entitled, as well as the other people who work in the State Department are entitled, to have all this cleared up. Above all, the American people are entitled to have all these doubts cleared up, so that we can unite with confidence in the difficult years which are ahead.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to suggest that all the chairman of the subcommittee would have had to do would have been to send word to Mr. Levine asking him to come and bring his documents, and to Mr. Toledano, because both of them, to my own knowledge, were anxious and zealous to appear before the subcommittee; and that matter could have been cleared up merely by the use of the telephone in asking those men to appear before the subcommittee. Does not the Senator think it would have been a very easy matter? Even while I agree in great measure with him on the question of a nonpartisan, nonpolitical investigation of these matters, does not the Senator believe this is at least one case in which the committee was well equipped and able to go into at least that particular phase?

Mr. LODGE. I do not want the Senator to think I was trying to evade his question, because I was not. I think the question of which he speaks is definitely one which the subcommittee could have taken up, and it would not have taken too much time to dispose of it.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I take it this is one illustration of what the Senator referred to in number 2 of his observations, in which he said:

> Many essential witnesses were not called and essential questions were left unanswered. The subcommittee's record is a tangle of loose threads.

This would illustrate that point.

Mr. LODGE. I think so, yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Taking up the testimony of Mr. Larsen, I should like to refer the distinguished Senator to page 149 of the report of the subcommittee which has now been placed before the Senate. I read beginning with the fourth paragraph:

> Few people, cognizant of the truth in even an elementary way, have, in the absence of political partisanship, placed any credence in the hit-and-run tactics of Senator McCARTHY. He has stooped to a new low in his cavalier disregard of the facts.
> The simple truth is that in making his speech at Wheeling, Senator McCARTHY was talking of a subject and circumstances about which he knew nothing. His extreme and irresponsible statements called for emergency measures. As Senator WHERRY told Emmanuel S. Larsen:
>
> "Oh, Mac has gone out on a limb and kind of made a fool of himself, and we have to back him up now."

Did the Senator from Massachusetts hear that testimony?

Mr. LODGE. I think I did.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator join with whoever wrote the report in setting it out as a fact that KENNETH S. WHERRY, the junior Senator from Nebraska, ever made such a statement?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no. The Senator from Massachusetts was very careful not to sign this report; and the Senator from Massachusetts has tried to make it very clear that he does not agree with this report at all.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. Let me say further, because an interesting question is raised, that while I think that the bringing in of questions of personal prestige and senatorial vanity would be wholly out of place in these serious times, I do venture the guess that if a group of smart young lawyers were to go through the majority report and take out everything in it that is a violation of rule XIX and that savors of personal vituperation there would be very little left. I merely venture that as a guess.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator. I appreciate his statement.

I have not had time to read every page of the report. It has just been filed. I am not familiar with all the statements contained in it, but if the report in other respects is not more authentic than the words I just read from the report, "As Senator WHERRY told Emmanuel S. Larsen," whoever this man is, and so forth, I wish to say that so far as the American public is concerned I think they can throw it in the ashcan.

Mr. President, I want to say emphatically that I never made such a statement. I wish to say that on the floor of the Senate and in public utterances I have backed the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] on the theory that I think he has rendered a great service to the American people. I believe that if there were any way to prevent the filing of the report, and if a motion could be made to delete such material as I have read, the Senate of the United States should give the junior Senator from Nebraska the opportunity to have it deleted from the report, and that the matter not be broadcast throughout the whole United States by the circulation of 140,000 or 150,000 copies of the report.

I was not even given an opportunity to confront the man who is alleged to have made the statement. I was not given an opportunity to refute this testimony. But the statement of this man, whose honor is now being questioned, who is said to be untruthful, is taken at face value, and it is going to be broadcast to the American people that I made such a statement as he said I made.

Mr. President, I think that if rule XIX is applicable against impugning improper motives to a Senator on the floor in debate, certainly it ought to be applicable to written statements. I have submitted a provision to extend rule XIX to written statements. A Senator should have the right to delete from a report libelous statements, untrue statements, statements which have never been made by him.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his answer to my question that he did not have any part in having the statement included in the report, and that he did not believe the statement. That gives me much comfort and courage.

Mr. LODGE. I may say to my able friend, the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, that I accept his denial completely and without reservation. I do that not only because of the confidence I have in the Senator from Nebraska but also because of the credibility of the man who made the statement.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Are we to understand that as the result of the report Senators may now stand on the floor and say whatever they please about each other, in whatever language they care to use? Is that what the report means?

Mr. LODGE. Does it mean that because rule XIX was suspended, insofar as the report is concerned, that therefore it is suspended, insofar as the Senate is concerned?

Mr. CAPEHART. Yes. In other words, that the Senator from Massachusetts, or I, or any other Senator, can now stand up on the floor of the Senate and say just what he thinks about the other fellow without being called to order. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. I will say to my friend from Indiana that I do not see how the cause of American democracy in the world is going to be advanced by our eliminating all courtesy between Senators. I think the tone of the report is very deplorable. I do not talk about the substance of it or the argument of it. Individuals are entitled to their opinions, but I think this tone of personal abuse and vindictiveness is unfortunate.

Mr. CAPEHART. I agree with the Senator, but I wonder if, as the result of the report, all rules are suspended, and that no holds are to be barred from now on?

Mr. LODGE. I will say that, so far as the Senator from Massachusetts is concerned, he has tried since he has been here not to make personal reflections on Senators, and he is going to continue to try not to do that.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

EXHIBIT 1

CONCLUSION

The conclusions of this subcommittee in regard to each allegation made by Senator MCCARTHY are as follows:

1. There is no truth in the statement that Mrs. Brunauer was assistant to Alger Hiss at San Francisco.

2. The allegation that Mrs. Brunauer was responsible for getting the American Association of University Women to support Communist fronts is false. In fact, the allegation was based on incomplete evidence when the same evidence would have refuted the charge if it had not been deliberately withheld.

3. Mrs. Brunauer did attend two meetings of the Friends of the Soviet Union in 1934 and 1936. On both cases she attended for perfectly legitimate motives and no inference of Communist sympathies can be raised therefrom. She denied, and there is no evidence to show, that she was ever a member of the American Friends of the Soviet Union.

4. Mrs. Brunauer was a signer of the call to the Congress of Youth. However, the announced principles of the meeting were entirely proper and the list of signers conclusively refutes any implication of Communist sympathy because of this act. In addition, there is no evidence before the subcommittee that this particular meeting was under the domination of the American Youth Congress, as alleged.

5. Mrs. Brunauer was active in the American Union for Concerted Peace Efforts and the Committee for Concerted Peace Efforts in 1938. The latter was cited as an organization with the same aims as the American Congress for Peace and Democracy by the House Committee on Un-American Activities in 1944. There is no evidence before us to support the allegation that the editor of the Daily Worker was active therein.

Mr. TYDINGS obtained the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may suggest the absence of a quorum?

Mr. TYDINGS. If I do not lose the floor by yielding for that purpose, I yield. I make such a request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maryland that he may yield to the Senator from North Carolina to suggest the absence of a quorum, without losing the floor thereby? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A quorum is present.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, before discussing in some sequence the events which I shall presently relate, but referring now specifically to the point raised by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], I wish to read a letter:

JULY 3, 1950.

Hon. BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am scheduling a meeting of our subcommittee for 10:30 a. m. on Friday, July 7.

In accordance with the motion adopted at our last meeting——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The report has been filed, has it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Therefore the subcommittee is discharged.

Let me inquire who is the gentleman sitting to the right of the Senator from Maryland, and what authority has he to be on the floor of the United States Senate?

Mr. TYDINGS. Under the rules of the Senate, he is still the counsel of the subcommittee; he has not been discharged. I have conferred with him, and we are entitled to keep him until such time as we wind up our business.

Mr. WHERRY. Counsel of what? There is no subcommittee left.

Mr. TYDINGS. I still have many duties to perform; I have hundreds of documents which I have gathered from various governmental agencies, and which I have to return. I even have a Republican investigator on the payroll; I saw him today.

Mr. WHERRY. Aside from a Senator's secretary, special permission has to be granted to anyone to come on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I raise the point of order that this man is not a Senator's secretary, he does not have permission to be on the floor of the Senate, and he is not today entitled to the floor of the Senate.

I ask that the Sergeant at Arms see that all persons not entitled to the floor of the Senate are cleared from the floor of the Senate.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, this gentleman was appointed by a vote of our subcommittee; he is chief counsel of the subcommittee. I have asked him to bring numerous papers here, so that I may tell the Senate—without heat, without passion—exactly what occurred.

It will be a serious handicap to me to have to go through all these many folders and get the papers about which Senators may from time to time interrogate me.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the statement the Senator has made, and I wish to be fair.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator will be.

Mr. WHERRY. I have always respected the Senator from Maryland, and he knows it; and I should like to acquiesce in his request.

Mr. TYDINGS. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will do so.

Mr. WHERRY. But I just asked this man Morgan whether he wrote the portion of the report about the Senator from Nebraska, and he said he did. Mr. President, a man who will impugn a Senator, as he has done, is not entitled to the floor of the Senate, and should be ejected.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I know how the Senator from Nebraska feels about that matter; but I hope he will be magnanimous to me and will not put me to such a disadvantage.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not wish to put the Senator from Maryland to a disadvantage; but I do not think a man of that sort has the right to be on the floor of the Senate. I make the point of order.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, he is an employee of the full Senate Foreign Relations Committee; and I ask that he be permitted to remain here until he is discharged by the proper authority.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask that the rule be enforced. He is not entitled to the floor of the Senate. There is no justification for it. He has not been granted permission, and the present occupant of the Chair knows that to be so.

I ask that he be ejected from the floor of the United States Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will read the part of the rule under which he thinks the decision must be made in the present case.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, to what rule does the Chair refer?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To rule XXXIII, the last paragraph, on page 46 of the standing rules of the Senate, in enumerating the various persons who may be admitted to the floor of the Senate while the Senate is in session.

The following is the closing paragraph of the rule:

> Clerks to Senate committees and clerks to Senators when in the actual discharge of their official duties. Clerks to Senators, to be admitted to the floor, must be regularly appointed and borne upon the rolls of the Secretary of the Senate as such.

It is the understanding of the Chair that even though various employees of the several committees might not be covered by that particular description, yet it has been the uniform practice of the various committees to use on the floor of the Senate a clerk or a staff member who might be selected by the committee to function at that particular time.

The Chair is of the opinion that this person, being the person employed by the committee and designated to assist in the presentation of this matter, is entitled to floor. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. WHERRY. Then, Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have not yielded.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have a right to appeal from the decision of the Chair; but I shall be willing to withhold the appeal.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have not yielded. I do not wish to be technical; but I can see nothing to result from all this other than a loss of time. So I refuse to yield. I do not wish to be discourteous; but all we shall have, under the procedure suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, will be a roll call, and we shall simply waste 20 minutes. I refuse to yield for debate.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I made an appeal, not a point of order. A point of order is not debatable, but an appeal is debatable.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have not yielded.

Mr. WHERRY. However, the Chair has already recognized me.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have not yielded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair holds that the Senator who has the floor does not have to yield for that purpose; but any Senator has a right to appeal from a decision of the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I move to lay the appeal on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, on this question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MYERS. I announce that the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] are absent on public business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] is absent because of illness.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] is absent on official business.

The Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is absent on official business attending a meeting of the Special Committee To Investigate Organized Crime in Interstate Commerce.

The Senators from Ohio [Mr. TAFT and Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY] are detained on official business.

So Mr. WHERRY's appeal from the decision of the Chair was laid on the table.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, there is nothing in the report of the committee which purports to be testimony, whether it should or should not have been inserted as such in the report, which is not in itself testimony given under oath. As I was reading—and I shall not yield again until I have finished presenting in some sort of sequence the story of this investigation, and I hope Senators will not ask me to yield, because it will only bring forth a denial and will only postpone the time when I can yield and, at the end, answer questions.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] said that he had no chance to file a report. He said he did not know what was going on in reference to the filing of the reports, and that he had no opportunity to read the report, et cetera. On June 30, the committee, according to the record, had a meeting.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I dislike to interrupt the Senator, and if he will stick to the facts, I will not interrupt. I did know that a report was being prepared, but I had no opportunity to read it after it was prepared.

Mr. NEELY. Mr. President, I call for the regular order. The Senator from Maryland has the floor. No other Senator has a right to interrupt him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is called for. The Senator from Maryland will proceed.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, during the course of the discussion this afternoon I have heard some of the most erroneous statements made that I have ever heard in my life, and I shall go to the RECORD in order to prove their erroneous character. But I did not interrupt. I have learned to wait for my opportunity. I have taken in the past 3 months much punishment in the newspapers by a colleague of mine who has used every epithet and every term of opprobrium and calumny to blackguard me, the Senator from Connecticut, and others. But I have not returned the favor, because I do not want to sink to that sort of level, even off the Senate floor; and anything I say on the Senate floor, I shall say outside the Senate floor, and I shall not retract it afterward. [Manifestations of applause in the galleries.]

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; I will not yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I desired to make a correction for the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. On June 30, there was a meeting of our committee, which was attended by all five members. The question of filing a report came up. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] had said several times that he wanted to make his own observations regarding the case; which was fitting and proper. He was keeping notes, and he said he wanted to write his own report. The Senator from Iowa said he did not want to make any report; he did not think the investigation was complete enough.

in his opinion, and what he had to say he would say on the Senate floor.

I returned to my office, and on the following Monday, July 3, I addressed letters to all members of the subcommittee, and one, particularly, to the Senator from Iowa, a copy of which I hold in my hand, and from which I now read:

JULY 3, 1950.

HON. BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am scheduling a meeting of our subcommittee for 10:30 a. m., on Friday, July 7.

That was a week from the time we had agreed to write a report.

In accordance with the motion adopted at our last meeting, the business of this meeting will be devoted to the formulation of a report by our committee. I am consequently asking each member of the committee to have his views in written report form ready for adoption either as majority or minority views at that time.

It is essential that this matter be in readiness so that the report, containing all views, may be simultaneously sent to the printers.

With best wishes, I am,
Sincerely yours,
MILLARD E. TYDINGS.

On the following Monday I told the members of the committee that they would not be held to the strict time, but would be allowed three more days of grace, so as to give them time to make their reports. When we met, the Senator from Massachusetts repeated his position, and I thought that perhaps there would be some area we could carve out, as five Members of the Senate, on which we could agree. So I said, "I suggest we start with the case of Ambassador Jessup," who, incidentally, had the clearest kind of supporting evidence from General Eisenhower and General Marshall, two men who rank almost as high as any of the 96 United States Senators in integrity and in standing before the people of the country. So I said, "Let us see whether we feel that the evidence before the committee supports or does not support the charges against Ambassador Jessup."

We took a vote. The three Democratic members said it did not support the charges. The two Republican members, as they had a right to do, said, "We refuse to vote." So it was a vote of 3 to 0. I said, then, "What is the use of going on? Certainly, if we cannot agree on the case of a man like Jessup, who has the reputation of being a great patriot, supported by the Secretary of State under whom he served and a great general of the American Army, Dwight Eisenhower, I do not think we can agree on anything."

They said they thought that was correct. I asked the Senator from Massachusetts to submit his report, and he gave it to me. In order to keep faith with him, I did not read his report so that I could pick it to pieces; I did not want to comment adversely on it. I took his report to the counsel and said, "Here is Senator LODGE'S report. Put it into the record." He said, "Have you read it?" I said, "No; I have only glanced at it." So, if the Senator from Massachusetts did not see my report, I did not see his. He had everything I had. That is how fair I was with him.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] made no report. He told the members of the press repeatedly, so newspaper columnists say, that what he had to say he would say on the floor of the Senate.

So much for the report, Mr. President.

I want to start out by saying that there are few offices on the face of the globe that carry such tremendous prestige, wide responsibility, and glorious opportunity as that of a Senator of the United States. So exalted is that position that a man who speaks here speaks for a whole State. The Senator from New York [Mr. LEHMAN] who represents, in part, the people of New York, speaks for more people in this legislative body than are to be found in all Holland and perhaps Belgium combined. It is a position of tremendous eminence, degraded though it may have been at times in its history, but, in the main, the annals of this body are studded with the names of illustrious men who have written in imperishable language the history of this great Republic, this great democracy which is the United States of America.

At any rate, Mr. President, that is the general acceptation that goes with the term "Senator," even though many of us, and I, perhaps more than any of my colleagues, cannot measure up even remotely to such a position of eminence. But in the public mind, generally, when a Senator speaks, the thought is, "It must be so." The only exception to that is when we leave the precincts of this Chamber and go forth onto the hustings where the people take what we say with more or less latitude because they know that beneath our togas and our ability to strut sitting down, we have very human personalities.

Mr. President, when the eminent chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee asked me to head this subcommittee I told him twice that I should prefer not to do so. I was carrying a very heavy load, I thought, as the chairman of the Armed Services Committee to which I devoted most of my energies, and although I was serving on his committee I did not think I could, in justice to myself and to the work which lay ahead, take the responsibility. The third time he came to me I told him that I would take the job, and I took it as a public duty, realizing remotely, not clearly, that there would be no praise, no plaudits, no encomiums, because, in the very nature of such charges as these, there would be only scars, wounds, misunderstandings, and misrepresentations by men of little character who preferred to serve their own ends rather than those of their country.

At any rate, Mr. President, the first thing I wanted to know when the subcommittee organized was what were the charges, not only the charges made here, but also the charges which the people of the country had heard. So I set about trying to find out what the American people had been told, so we could find the answer as to whether those charges were true or false.

The first thing that came to my attention was the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], as he had every right to do, had spoken in Wheeling, W. Va., on the 9th day of February before the Ohio County Republican Women's Club at a Lincoln Day dinner.

The Wheeling Intelligencer, of Wheeling, W. Va., on the following morning carried this particular paragraph in its news column. I have had it enlarged so that Senators can read it. The original I have in my hand. In big banner headlines it said:

MCCARTHY charges Reds hold jobs. Truman blasted for reluctance to press probe—

And so forth. It is written over the byline of Mr. Frank Desmond. It is not merely a promiscuous article, but it was written by a reporter who signed his name "Frank Desmond."

Here is what this particular paragraph in the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin says:

Referring directly to the State Department, he—

The Senator from Wisconsin—

declared, "While I cannot take the time to name all the men in the State Department—

All the men—who have been named as members of the Communist Party and members of a spy ring; I have here in my hand a list of 205 that were known to the Secretary of State as being members of the Communist Party, and who, nevertheless, are still working and shaping the policy in the State Department."

There we have a spy ring known to Acheson. There we have 205 Communists known to Acheson. He will not do anything about it. I shall come back to this later.

I then asked the radio station whether the Senator from Wisconsin had made any such statement. Mr. Paul A. Myers, who is program direction of radio station WWVA, made the affidavit which I hold in my hand. This is an enlargement of the original affidavit.

As program director of radio station WWVA, I read the attached 13-page speech script before it was delivered by Senator JOSEPH MCCARTHY on February 9, 1950. I reviewed our tape recording of the delivered speech before WWVA broadcast it on the same evening, and again reviewed it against the script on the following day.

Mr. President, I should like to read that again:

I reviewed our tape recording of the delivered speech before WWVA broadcast it on the same evening, and again reviewed it against the script on the following day.

I certify that the tape recording was the same as the attached script with the exception of interpolations and connective words such as "a's," "and's," and "the's"; which to my way of thinking do not change the meaning of the text.

I have initialed each page of the attached photostatic copy of Senator MCCARTHY'S speech.

PAUL A. MYERS.

And so forth. These [indicating] are the pages of the speech made by the Senator from Wisconsin which were handed to Mr. Myers, and he initialed them on each page.

So far, Mr. President, we have the Wheeling Intelligencer and the program director, who say the same thing. I have before me an affidavit by Mr. James A. Whittaker, who is the news editor of the radio station WWVA, who says under oath:

An news editor of radio station WWVA I was in charge of the tape recording of Senator JOSEPH MCCARTHY's speech at the Hotel McLure, Wheeling, W. Va., on February 9, 1950. At the hotel I followed the prepared script as I listened to the speech.

I certify that the delivered speech as recorded by me and on that evening broadcast by station WWVA was in the same form as the attached photostat of the prepared script—

And so forth. Here [indicating] are all the notations, page for page.

I asked the Senator from Wisconsin, on one occasion when he was before our committee in executive session, if he had said that. He said "No." He was asked repeatedly on the floor of the Senate by the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] and the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY] if he had said that. He refused to answer either one way or another after being asked to give an answer on four separate occasions. I rose, and without heat, said, "It seems to me the Senator is an honest man and could answer the question yes or no." He did not answer it.

Mr. President, I am not investigating the Senator from Wisconsin. However, I must investigate the charges made by the Senator if I am to do the job and put credence and credibility in what might be connected with these charges. That is what the American people want to know, because when a Senator says there are 516, 205, 57, 108, or 25 spies, or 1 spy, even in the State Department, it is not the statement of a man on the corner of Ninth and G Streets who is carrying on a casual conversation with people who are going home from work. It is the voice of the Republic. It is the voice of the Government. It is a challenge, at a time when men are faced with perhaps the cruelest and most violent enemy in all the history of Christendom, the Red Communists who today in Europe and in the Far East and all over the globe are taking such a toll of freedom, democracy, human life, and liberty.

It was not long ago, Mr. President, that I rose on the floor of the Senate and denounced the infamous trials behind the iron curtain by which Cardinal Mindszenty by methods which we were asked to adopt here and which, thank God, we did not adopt, was pulled from his altar, sacred to God, and human rights as it was, and thrust into a slimy dungeon. For that I received the encomiums of much of the press. I have visited the capitals of Europe, and all the battlefields, including Hiroshima and Nagasaki; I observed the plane drop the atomic bomb over Bikini; I have interviewed nearly every defense minister in Europe and have brought home information with regard to the defense program, to the end that communism might be held in check, while some of those who now parade their patriotism were voting against the Marshall plan, the arms aid plan, and the North Atlantic Security Pact, and the other day, here in public, made the biggest double somersault I have ever seen when for the first time they said, "I will take a different course now because the Reds are actually in South Korea."

However, Mr. President, let us proceed with the narrative. I have referred to what was in the script which the Senator from Wisconsin gave to these two eminent gentlemen and gave to the newspaper reporters. It was the same old thing. It refers to 205 members of the Communist Party. It refers to the members of the spy ring, who are known to Acheson. Think of that, Members of the Senate. Here is a Secretary of State with 205 known Communists in his Department, with a spy ring in his Department, and he is so low and vile and unpatriotic that he permits them to stay there and whittle away at the vitals of our Government and to tear down our freedom, tradition, heritage, and history of which you, Mr. President, and I are so proud.

The Senator from Wisconsin denied it.

Mr. President, I wonder if I could get unanimous consent to play a radio recording of the Senator's own voice on one of these occasions. I ask unanimous consent that I may play a recording of the Senator's own words. I am not asking Senators to take my word, but to hear the Senator's own voice, who says he has not made a statement of this character.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would be the last man on earth to stop a complete and full report of the distinguished Senator from Maryland. I feel it ought to be done some place else than on the floor of the United States Senate. The reason I say that is that we have certain rules pertaining to the use of this Chamber.

Mr. TYDINGS. I withdraw the request.

Mr. WHERRY. Just a moment, please.

Mr. TYDINGS. I withdraw the request.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to state my reasons.

Mr. TYDINGS. If the unanimous-consent request is to be denied, I withdraw it. I withdraw the unanimous-consent request and retain the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly I can give my reasons, can I not?

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, regular order.

Mr. TYDINGS. I withdraw the request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has withdrawn his request, and therefore the Senator from Maryland has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Later I shall give my explanation.

Mr. TYDINGS. I will play this record off the Senate floor in due time, but admission will be by card only. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I then went to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I had not been on the floor taking part in any of the debates. I read how the Senator from Illinois had persistently repeated more or less the same language which I have repeated, and asked the Senator from Wisconsin if he had nor had not said, and although it seemed easy to say "yes" or "no," no answer was forthcoming for a long, long while. Finally the Senator from Wisconsin did read on the floor of the Senate a verbatim copy of the same speech which these radio people and newspaper people in West Virginia had been given, except that when we got down to this place (indicating on chart) the language had changed in this paragraph. The Senator then in his written speech said:

I said I had in my hand the names of 57 persons in the State Department who were either Communists—who were either Communists or loyal to the Communist Party.

Not card-carrying—

Thus we have gone from 205 card-carrying Communists, and persons in the spy ring, to 57 who were either Communists or loyal to the Communist Party.

But in the meantime the eminent Senator from Wisconsin and my good friend from Nevada made a little excursion to Salt Lake City, and there both of them went on the radio again, as the Senate will remember. The Senator from Wisconsin talked about communism. The Senator from Nevada talked about world trade, and a little about communism. I have a record of that. I shall be delighted to play it, but I suppose I shall have to play that outside, too.

This is what the record would say if I could play it, but my hearers will never get the full beauty they would through hearing the golden voice itself telling it. [Laughter.] It is like going to the Metropolitan Opera in New York and hearing Lauritz Melchoir, the great Danish tenor, reading the libretto instead of with a full-throated orchestra in full cry accompanying him, singing it with his soaring golden tenor, reaching out and reverberating through the halls of the Metropolitan Opera. But, even so, it is fairly interesting.

Here it is. I shall try to imitate it a little, because I have played it several times. [Laughter.] Listen to this. This is Dan Valentine, the radio announcer:

As I understand, Senator McCarthy, you have a rather startling statement to make. Is that right? That you've made earlier in the day.

Senator MCCARTHY. I gather you think it's startling, Dan.

DAN VALENTINE. I think all America would think it startling.

Senator MCCARTHY. Last night I discussed the Communists in the State Department.

"Last night" was at Wheeling, W. Va. Keep that in mind. This is only the following day. This is the 10th.

Last night I discussed the Communists in the State Department. I stated that I had the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party.

Not members of the Communist Party, not people who were alleged to be Communists, but the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party. We have gone from 205, in Wheeling, on the 9th, down to 57 in Salt Lake City, in 24 hours, and in the process we have lost how many? How many is 57 from 205?

Mr. KILGORE. One hundred and forty-eight.

Mr. TYDINGS. We have lost 148, and I would not be surprised—and I say this with a smile—if it did not happen as the plane went over Nebraska. [Laughter.] I know of no better place to put them, because the Senator from Nebraska could take care of them.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I would rather not.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh——

Mr. TYDINGS. That was a compliment.

Mr. WHERRY. I want to thank the Senator. I certainly appreciate that very much, indeed.

Mr. TYDINGS. It was intended only as a compliment.

Mr. WHERRY. If I had know this was going to be so eloquent I think it would have been better to have the record played. I do not believe the record is as good as the Senator from Maryland is.

Mr. TYDINGS. At any rate, remember what the Sentor from Wisconsin has said—and I can show it, page and date, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. He told the Senator from Illinois this:

Here is what I said. I said in West Virginia this: I said I have in my hand 57 Communists, or individuals, who would appear to be—

Not who are, but who would appear to be—either card-carrying members or certainly loyal to the Communist Party, but who nevertheless are still helping to shape our foreign policy.

But he does not even say they know Acheson, and the reference to a spy ring was lost as they crossed Missouri. It was dumped there, and the freshet had been on at that time, and carried it down to the sea, and to complete oblivion.

But bear with me, bear with me. After he said, "I stated that I had the names of 57 card-carrying members of the Communist Party," he said:

I noticed today that the State Department has denied that. They say they do not know of a single one in the State Department. I want to tell the Secretary of State this: If he wants to call me tonight at the Utah Hotel, I'll be glad to give him the names of those 57 card-carrying Communists.

I might say this, however, Dan, the day that Alger Hiss was exposed the President signed an order to the effect that no one in the State Department could give any information as to the disloyalty or the communistic activities of any State Department employee. Then later they went a step further. They said, in addition to that, no one in the State Department could give any information as to the employment of any man in the State Department. Now, obviously, before we will give the information, give him names of Communists whom he—the names he certainly should have (if I have them, he should have them). I want this: An indication of his good faith. The best way to indicate that is to say that, at least as far as rules 57 are concerned, when you give me their names, then all information as to their communistic activities, as to their disloyalty, will be available to any proper congressional investigating committee. Have I made myself clear, Dan?

[Laughter.]

Those of my colleagues who hear the record will excuse me for a poor imitation, but it has some remote likeness.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I cannot. I continue:

DAN VALENTINE. In other words, Senator, if Secretary of State Dean Acheson would call you at the Hotel Utah tonight in Salt Lake City, you would tell him 57 names of actual card-carrying Communists in the State Department, actual card-carrying Communists?

Senator MCCARTHY. Not only can I, Dan, but I will, as I say, on condition——

DAN VALENTINE. I don't blame you for that——

Senator MCCARTHY. That they lift the veil of secrecy and allow the congressional committees to know about the communistic activities and disloyalty in that Department.

DAN VALENTINE. What do you think of that, Senator MALONE?

Senator MALONE. Well, Dan, I think JOE is doing a whale of a job.

[Laughter.]

In baseball that is what we call an assist. But Dan cannot get over it. I am going to pass over a good deal of this. Dan Valentine is a man who cannot be convinced, so he keeps coming back.

DAN VALENTINE. Well, I am just a common man out here in Salt Lake City, a man who's got a family and a son and a job. You mean to say that there are 57 Communists in our State Department that direct or control in our State Department?

Senator MCCARTHY. I don't want to indicate there's only 57. I say I have the names of 57.

Dan VALENTINE. There's at least 57?

Senator MCCARTHY. I don't claim to be any FBI or anything, so when I have the names of 57, you can be right well sure there's a lot more. Incidentally, the President's own loyalty board gave Mr. Acheson, the Secretary of State, the names of 283 out of one small batch that they screened.

They said these men are bad risks. You shouldn't have them in the State Department; and out of 283, 207 of those are still in the State Department. Now may I say this also, Dan. While I would like to take credit for digging up all this information, actually—the House Un-American Committee have done practically all of this work.

And bear this is mind—

That is how new it was.

I have many other sources of information also, some of them from right within the State Department, and I may say that there are some very fine men in the State Department.

I think there are three or four there. [Laughter.]

If there were not, I would not be able to have these names tonight.

DAN VALENTINE. They probably want them out more than anybody, don't they?

Senator MCCARTHY. They realize the danger of the situation perhaps more than anyone else—

And so on and so on.

That is what the Senator from Wisconsin said in Salt Lake City; not what he said to the Senate he said either in West Virginia or at Salt Lake City, but what his own voice shows he said. There cannot be any doubt about whose voice it is. He told us under oath that was not what he said, but the record stands there to challenge that statement.

When he comes across things like that what should a United States Senator tell the people of his country?

On this Odyssey, somewhat like the trip of Ulysses, after a while the Senator from Wisconsin went to the habitat of my good friend who sits next to me, the genial, able, conscientious anti-Communist, loyal American, hard-working legislator, deserving of his State's affection and pride, PAT MCCARRAN. He went to Reno. Now here is where the cat begins not only to get out of the bag but it takes pretty nearly all the bag with it on the way out. I exhibit the blown-up paragraph of the Nevada State Journal of Reno, Nev., February 12. Senators will note that the action is taking place on successive nights. Here it is, and over the headline appear the words, "Written by Edward Conners," a special writer. Here is the paragraph in question which the Senators can see blown-up on the board. This is what the newspaper says:

Senator MCCARTHY, who had first typed a total of 205 employees of the State Department who could be considered disloyal to the United States and pro-Communists, scratched out that number and mentioned only "57 card-carrying members", whom Acheson should know as well as Members of Congress.

Senators will note that the 205 which was in all the other statements was still in the speech he handed to Mr. Connors, but he crossed out 205 and put "57" over it.

Mr. President, there is too much evidence to doubt what was actually said, particularly when we have a voice here which can speak louder than the five silent exhibits I have already shown the Senate. That is why I said a hoax and a fraud was practiced on the people of the United States, and, by the eternal gods, that is true.

But let us go on. That is not the half of it. There was next detailed in this sordid episode the cases of 81 individuals. On the Senate floor a number was called, and then an account of the person represented by the number was, without mentioning the name of the person, read. Give me that red book—81 cases.

Oh, my, how the newspapers did lap up these things. Eighty-one spies in the State Department. Eighty-one Communists in the State Department, known to Acheson. "He will not do anything about it." "Day after day TYDINGS and his gang are whitewashing." Day after day my lips were sealed, while I had this little red book in my hand. And what does this little red book show?

Before the loyalty program was put into effect by Presidential order, which was about the fall of 1947, there was no screening process such as there is now. So with the conclusion of World War II, when many agencies were covered by Presidential order into the State Department, and when the Russian situation did not work out as many people had hoped it would, it became necessary to screen those people to see whether or not they were more Russian than American

So a loyalty program was set up—not by Congress, but by President Harry Truman—and boards were created to examine these cases, and General Marshall, just before that time, or while it was going into effect, was Secretary of State. He was called up by the House Committee on Executive Expenditures. Marshall said, "Go to the Department." It was Secretary Byrnes first, I believe. He said, "Look over the files. Give us your suggestion." It was Secretary Byrnes who said that. So the inspector of the House Committee on Executive Expenditures actually went to the State Department and brought the files back with him. He went through them from beginning to end, and made a summary of what was in each one of them; a little summary such as I exhibit here. And what do Senators think? That was the summary the Senator from Wisconsin read on the floor of the Senate, with a few adaptations to give it some semblance of newness.

I want to show this to the Senate. Remember that when each one of these files was looked over by the representatives of the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments there was on the outside a little summary of what the information in the files contained. That was in the Eightieth Congress, which was not controlled by this side of the aisle, incidentally.

I now want to show the Senate what the file itself says on the outside. This is what the file says. This is one of the matters:

A report of April 24, 1947.

That is what the file says. This is what the Senator from Wisconsin stated:

Another reference to April 24, 1947.

The file goes on:

The subject has been a contributor to the Hungarian Communist magazine NOK.

The Senator from Wisconsin:

The individual had been contributing to the Hungarian magazine NOK—

And so on down the line. That was the new information that was brought to the Senate, the warmed-over investigation, not by that committee alone, but by four separate committees of the Republican controlled Eightieth Congress, not one of which thought any of these cases of sufficient character to ask that a single one of them be discharged by name, or to bring a report to the floors of Congress.

I can take summary after summary and read the summary on the file and then read the summary the Senator from Wisconsin read, and draw the deadly parallel. So when some shout "whitewash" I am going to show the Senate that we Democrats are in some very "extinguished" company. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. In a moment.

Here are the four committees of the Eightieth Republican-controlled Congress that had most of these same files, and some that the Senator from Wisconsin did not have: The House Committee on Appropriations, which of course was Republican-controlled; the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which of course was Republican-controlled; the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, about which Senators will hear more later on; and the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which was Republican-controlled. General Marshall was called before the committee and was interrogated. As my friend, the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], will recall, for he was on that committee, General Marshall was called before it and was interrogated about these same cases.

Now I wish to read from a speech by Representative Jonkman. He also had contact with this matter. He was a Republican from Michigan, and was a member of the House Foreign Affairs Committee in the Eightieth Congress. After he looked into the matter, here is what he said in a speech on the floor of the House:

But before the Eightieth Congress adjourns, I want the Members to know there is one department in which the known or reasonably suspected subversives, Communists, fellow travelers, sympathizers, and persons whose services are not for the best interests of the United States have been swept out. That is the State Department. For this job the people of the United States can thank to a great extent, in the order in which the work was done, first, Congressman Bartel J. Jonkman—

Who was then speaking—of the fifth district of Michigan, who, on July 10, 1946, was appointed a committee of one from the Committee on Foreign Affairs to investigate Communists in the State Department; and, second, the people themselves, who on November 5, 1946, elected a Republican Congress; and, third, Mr. John E. Peurifoy, who after that election was appointed to the office of Assistant Secretary of State—

Et cetera, et cetera, et cetera. All of them examined the same cases. So there they are. Even the two Republican Members of the Senate who were members of the subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee, and who examined into the loyalty of the employees of the State Department, and had access to these same files, did not make a single recommendation that either or any or all of them was a Communist.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. TYDINGS. Only for a question.

Mr. LUCAS. Did Representative——

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Maryland would not yield to me.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, Senators can examine the minority views and the majority report, both of which were made after we had the 81 cases in our hands at the White House, after we had all the opportunity in the world to read everything in them, and Senators can hunt in the report and in the minority views wherever they will, but they will not find in them a single word that a single one of the 81 cases has been found to be a Communist or a spy or a disloyal person by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], or the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]

As a matter of fact, of course, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] said the files would show that he was correct in his charges. When I went to the White House and asked the President to let me have the files, so that I would not have to subpena them—and I did not make statements about that conversation and request for the newspapers to make the headlines, either, though I went to the White House three times—I said to the President, "I think in this case the people of the United States are entitled to know."

The President replied, "I want you to have the files. My only fear is that, if I give them to you, every other committee which comes along will say, 'You gave the files to that committee. Why don't you give them to us? Then there would be no privacy—nothing of that sort at all."

I replied, "Four committees of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress had the files. They did not do anything about them. I should like to go through them and see if I can do something about them. Certainly, if you have already let four committees of the Eightieth Congress have access to them, why can't we have them? The people want to have this matter settled, and not have it made a football to be kicked back and forth."

The President said, "You have a point there. I could let your subcommittee have the files, in view of the precedent that four other committees already have had them."

However, Mr. President, day after day, as proclaimed in the newspaper headlines, the Senator from Wisconsin said, "The President refuses to give the committee the files because he knows that the files will show that I told the truth."

Some of those statements and some of the statements made on the floor of the Senate were far from reflecting the degree of comity and respect which my friend the able Senator from Massachusetts says should characterize the relationship between Senators—and let me say that I aim to have such comity and respect maintained between all persons, whether in office or out—and the man who happens to be the President of the United States.

Mr. Truman turned the files over to me. He said—and I quote his words almost verbatim: "MILLARD, if there are any subversive people in this Government, any Communists, any bad characters, I want you to say so."

Mr. President, later I shall show the Senate more, in writing, to prove that in all this matter the President has been the one who has put the pressure on all the Departments to kick out such persons, although in the newspapers he has been paraded about the country as having taken just the opposite course.

Of course, Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin said that as soon as we got the files they would prove his case. Then he said that when we could not get them the reason we could not get them was that they would prove his case. Then, when we did get the files, the Senator from Wisconsin said they had been rifled and robbed and raped.

So it did not make any difference what we did; we could not prove anything, so said the Senator from Wisconsin.

At any rate, we went through the files. My colleague the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], read nine out of the great number on the table—nine, that is all. He thought so little of them that he read only nine of the files which the Senator from Wisconsin said would prove his case. There the files were; we had them for 6 weeks. The Senator from Iowa said, "I am not going to bother to read all this stuff."

However, the Senator from Wisconsin had said they would prove his case; and for days on end the newspapers carried statements to that effect, while we were being charged with being whitewashers, and while our lips had to be kept sealed and silent, lest some persons be tipped off that they were being investigated, and lest we should get into what they wanted us to get into, namely, nothing but a billingsgate argument.

My colleague the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], after he read 12 of the files, said, very honestly, "I am not going to read any more." He said, "I am not a lawyer. I think it is very difficult to appraise these files. I am simply going to say that I do not think I can do a job on them"—or words to that effect—"the sort of job which should be done by someone who is trained to do a job of this kind."

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] and I and, I think, our colleague the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], shared the work a little, and took each other's word, when we got to a file, for certain parts of it.

I personally undertook to read all the files on the table, although by doing so I missed a number of important votes in the Senate, and although at the same time I had to attend various important committees of which I am a member—including the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy, the Armed Services Committee, and the Foreign Relations Committee—and I also had to take on this work, which took 6 or 7 hours a day. The result was that I was rather tired and haggard every night; but at the same time I was being berated every day and night in the press and by the Axis-Communist press and by their one kept radio commentator.

While I am on this subject, let me say that in the middle of one of those very, very long days, when I was very tired, I addressed the chamber of commerce, and I talked frankly on communism and on the problems which confronted our committee. It was lucky that I was so well received, because the press had been tremendously adverse up to then; the newspapers had only one thing to say about our subcommittee, and that was charge after charge after charge, with never an answer. But I went at the thing. They were very courteous, and when I finished, I told them I would do exactly what I have done—examine all the evidence that was pertinent to this issue and let the chips fall where they might. And I said, "I shall have to leave before this session is over, but I am glad I had an opportunity to make this brief talk." They applauded. The next speaker spoke briefly. He was Mayor D'Alesandro, of Baltimore City. When I left the room, the audience stood up and applauded. It made my sorrowful heart feel good, in the face of the denunciation I had taken, that the people of my own State, trained as much as any people on earth in tolerance, were fair enough to withhold judgment until all the evidence was in. I felt very proud about it. But, that night, or the next morning, on the radio, the kept commentator of the isolationist press said, "Senator TYDINGS was roundly booed at the chamber of commerce meeting." I did not get any boos at all. The applause was a tremendous compliment. My colleague, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], who was there, called up the gentleman and said, "You are wrong about this," and he explained it to him; whereupon the gentleman repeated the charge the following night. [Laughter.] I have not finished on that score yet, either. I do not start fights quickly, but I do not run away from them when I am attacked. That goes for more places than one.

Then the Senator from Wisconsin said the files had been raped. So I said, "All right." I called up the Department of Justice and said, "I want you to get the FBI to go down there and check over those files. That is what the FBI is for, to see that fraud and thievery and dishonestry do not take place in the great departments of our Government, particularly in the State Department. If there is anything wrong with those files, I want you to tell me about it." So the Attorney General said to the FBI, "Give us all the material you have got, that you have turned over to the State Department, touching on the loyalty of these people." The FBI put it all together, and attorneys were sent from the Department of Justice to the State Department, where they compared paper by paper. They came back and reported to me in writing that the files were intact, and I so stated in the press. Then, just as I was about to make my report, the Senator from Wisconsin said that I had said that the FBI checked the files—of course, I did not know who actually checked the files—and that that was not the case. So I called up the Attorney General and said, "I want the FBI to check those files, and if they do not check them, I think we ought to have another investigation. That is what the FBI is for, to see whether there is any fraud in the keeping of the secret records of this Government. If there are any shenanigans there, I want to know it." And for the second time I received a report giving a clean bill of health, which I am going to read, now, for the first time. I did not put it in the newspapers right away, to make another headline, although I have had it for quite some while. It reads:

MY DEAR SENATOR: At my request the Federal Bureau of Investigation has conducted an examination of the State Department files which the members of your committee have been reviewing. Previously—

That is the first time I asked for it—

Deputy Attorney General Ford advised you, under date of June 16, 1950, that the Federal Bureau of Investigation had furnished him a copy of all loyalty material which had been furnished the State Department in these cases, that a check had been made under his direction, and that it was found that all of the FBI reports and memoranda which had been furnished the State Department were contained in the file.

I requested the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make a similar investigation of these files, in view of the further question raised several days ago by Senator MCCARTHY regarding their completeness. The examination, made on July 3 by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, discloses that the files contain all FBI reports and memorandums furnished to the Department in these cases prior to the time they were turned over to your committee, with the following exception, regarding which the Federal Bureau of Investigation reports as follows—

One file—

Case No. 51. "File complete except summary, dated May 13, 1947, not in file, although substance of summary set forth in State Department investigative report dated July 19, 1947."

Sincerely yours,

J. HOWARD MCGRATH.

So I have had it checked twice, now, by the FBI. Keep in mind that the loyalty program was set up in October 1947, and every case where there has been any real charge of disloyalty has had a full field investigation by the FBI, and all investigations touching on loyalty, in every manner, shape, or form, are in those files now; and that is what this letter says, and that is what was made available to the committee.

Then the Senator from Wisconsin said they had been rifled in 1946, and he had some affidavits, which were unsigned. It would not have made any difference if they had been signed. He himself said in the Senate that if we got the files, they would prove his case. He himself said here that the reason the President would not give us the files was that they had the material in them which would prove his case. Then, when I got the files, he said they had been rifled. Now, it is impossible to reconcile all those statements. Each of them cancels out the other. If any material was taken from the files in 1946, it was before the FBI was called into the picture, because the loyalty program did not go into effect until the fall of 1947, and that is when the materials started to accumulate.

I have dealt with that, but I love this little chart [indicating]. I call it Behind the 8 Ball, and I hold it up so that all may see. There are eight separate committees listed, including the House Committee on Appropriations of the Eightieth Congress, Republican-controlled—there was nothing there to become excited about—the House Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments; the House Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Eightieth Congress, Republican-controlled, with that eloquent disciple of purity Representative Jonkman, who so eloquently gave the tribute and encomium to the State Department which I read a moment ago; and the Senate Committee on Appropriations, which was Republican.

I should like this chart hung upon the wall. Some day I hope it will earn merit in the National Gallery of Art. [Laughter.] I have titled this futuristic design and painting "Whitewash." I have seen whitewash before, but it is the first time I have ever seen it applied with eight coats on any political fence in the history of America. So much for the spectacular side of the 81 cases.

Who has been on trial, here? Has it been the State Department? I do not think so. Has it been the Congress? I do not think so. It has been the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It is the agency created by this body to hunt spies, crooks, thieves, income-tax dodgers, saboteurs, file robbers, grafters, any any others who have unfair and illegal contact with the Government of the United States.

Mr. President, if there was a spy ring in the State Department, as was alleged in Wheeling, W. Va, speech, if there were 205 card-carrying Communists, that information should have been disclosed not in a hullabaloo on the floor of the Senate, or on the hustings, but to the FBI, to J. Edgar Hoover and his fine organization. Believe me, if there was anything of substance in the charges, the FBI would have acted, and in 2 minutes would have brought the culprits to justice.

We have been using the investigative system in trying the charges of the Senator from Wisconsin. Do Senators think that if these charges had substance there would not have been action before this time? I have given Mr. Hoover every day my own reports of the proceedings, open and secret, so that he knows as much about it as does anyone in America. So far as I know, no flying squads have arrested a lot of people, at least not up to now.

It is not the job of the Senate of the United States to run down spies and disloyal persons. Our job is that of investigation only, to see whether the agencies which we ourselves have established are competent, able, and equal to the task we have assigned them. I believe they are. The Senator from Wisconsin does not believe so, because his very indictment of these gentlemen indicates a belief that the cases which have been investigated in full field investigations, which are in the 81 files, and which the Senator says stamp these persons as Communists and members of a spy ring, do not evidence good investigative work, since he says they really are Communists and members of a spy ring.

Then we came to the case of Owen Lattimore. So far as I know I never saw Mr. Lattimore in my life until he came before the committee. I had heard of him. I knew he was an expert, so-called, on far eastern affairs, a professor at Johns Hopkins University, a man who was supposed to be, and I believe is, very scholarly; he has written a great many books and is very determined and independent in this thinking.

Finally, after we got the 81 cases, like the second act in Macbeth, all the scenery on the stage was changed. The 81 cases were in Act I. That had been performed; that no longer served the purpose. We could not make headlines over and over again with a murder, particularly when 8 police inspectors had already gone over it. So we got to the top Red spy in the State Department, the chief architect of our far eastern policy, and, as things were going badly, some people said, "Oh, my God, is he responsible for this?" It fitted in perfectly.

So we started the long voyage, all over again, to find out whether Mr. Lattimore was the top Russian agent, the top Red spy, the chief architect of our far eastern policy. I wrote to former Secretary Hull, former Secretary Byrnes, former Secretary Marshall, and Secretary Acheson. I could not write to Mr. Stettinius, unfortunately, because he had died. But all the other Secretaries of State from 1933 onward were written to. I asked them if the charges were true, insofar as they knew; was this man the maker of our far eastern policy; was he the chief architect of our far eastern policy? Each of them replied—and the letters are all in the report:

> I never saw him in my life to know him. I never had any dealings with him. He had no more to do with the far eastern policy than had anyone else. He was never an employee of the State Department. There is nothing to the charges at all.

Even Mr. Budenz, who appeared before the committee at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin, testified that he thought that charge was not technically accurate. But the Senator from Wisconsin said he would stand or fall on that case. And so I again started my legs down to the White House. I said, "Mr. President, you have got to let us see the record on Owen Lattimore."

He said, "Oh, I cannot do that. If I did that, there would be a hundred investigations launched tomorrow morning. This is an election year, and they will be started all over the place, and there will be 10 committees knocking on the door. If I let you have that, I can never live it down, and the whole thing will explode, because a great many of these charges are minor. Some of them may be bad. Some of them may be proved; a great many of them are disproved. We cannot be having people's reputations slandered."

I said, "I know, Mr. President, but you have got to let me have that file. The people of the country are entitled to know."

He said, "MILLARD, I am sorry; I should like to do it; I know you are in a hot spot up there."

I said, "I submit, Mr. President, you have got to let me have that file."

He said, "By God, you are going to get it."

Those were his exact words.

He said, "But I cannot let you have the files, because that would break the rules, but I will get a summary of that file made by Mr. Hoover. You can believe him; can you not?"

I said, "Yes."

So we had Mr. Hoover read this file, amounting to 14 pages.

I came away and did not call up anyone to have anyone arrested. I did not feel that the Government was going to pieces. I thought, if that is all there is about Mr. Lattimore, and the Senator from Wisconsin will stand or fall on this case, he is away down below the center of the earth by now. At any rate, my friends who came back in the cab with me did not seem to be worried that the Government was going to fly to pieces and that a spy ring was going to take over. My Republican colleague, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in his minority views—I do not quote him verbatim—says the charges against Lattimore have not been proved. So, if the Senator from Wisconsin is going to stand or fall on that case, certainly, since he is a man who, like every other Senator, keeps his word, it puts the committee pretty well in the clear. I know he said that on the floor of the Senate, and I know he would not go some other place and say something else.

Oh, what headlines the great spy case made. I can see the room now, packed with teeming people, with the kleig lights and the radio on, Owen Lattimore sitting there, a little bit of a figure who had come halfway around the world as fast as he could come to answer the charges. There he sat. The investigation was new then, and if one of us uttered a syllable to the effect that there might not be complete proof of the charges, we were Red sympathizers and fellow travelers. We were supposed to adopt the rule of guilt by accusation—accuse a man, take him out and shoot him. That is the old Russian system.

With reference to Lattimore, four members of the committee who saw fit to file reports—the majority reports and the one by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]—say the charges are not proved. The Senator from Wisconsin said his file would show that Lattimore was the top Red agent and a Communist. We heard it read. So far four members of the committee have said that that is not so. What difference does that make? The newspapers will not have time to print much of what I am saying here today in rebuttal to 5 months of false smears and headlines. They can say, "What do we care about this except to wind it up, and if there are bad men in our Government, get them out, and if the charges are not true, say so. Our hearts are in Korea. We are not going to waste time now printing very much about these charges. The poor devils whose names were paraded across the headlines will be lucky if they get a mention on page 73 in the last column under the weather reports."

I could refer to Jessup, to whom Gen. Dwight Eisenhower and General Marshall wrote glowing tributes, but I wish to talk a little about "Miss Amerasia," or what I call Whitewash No. 2.

In the spring of 1945, when the war was still going on, the similarity of a short news article in a magazine called Amerasia to a dispatch that had come from China attracted the attention of a very wide-eyed observer in the Agency known as OSA, who thought it was unusual that there should be published in this magazine, an account of some doings in Thailand, when the dispatch that had come to them had never been released. An investigation was made at night by a man named Frank Bielaski. In the office of Amerasia, which was a magazine of about 1,800 circulation, with a staff of five or six people, including the stenographer and office boy, he found a great many documents of all categories. There were memorandums, notes, private papers, and classified documents, some secret, some very secret, and I think one was top secret. He discovered a number of these documents, and it was an alarming situation. He reported it to Major Van Beuren, and they went over to the State Department and said, "Look, here is a whole lot of your documents."

The State Department said, "It looks bad. There has been a leak somewhere. Let's turn it over to the FBI." They did turn it over to the FBI. The FBI put more and more men on surveillance of this office, on all people going and coming from the office, and on all people who had dealings with people who worked in the State Department. At one time I think there were about 75 FBI agents working on the case. It went on for months and months. The FBI, in my judgment, is one of the greatest bulwarks of democracy in this Republic. They are on the job. They are doing everything they can to keep democracy ahead of any subversive influence. When they saw what the situation was, they immediately thought that prevention would be better than any other course that could be followed. The thing to do was to stop it. In order to stop it they went in the office af Amerasia. I think they went there four or five times at night and made a thorough survey of everything there. Then they went into the apartments and offices of the people who had been identified with this nefarious enterprise. I think it was on June 6 that orders were given to get the quarry.

So this great mass of agents closed in and arrested six people. They held Philip Jaffe, the editor of Amerasia; a woman by the name of Kate Mitchell, who was arrested with him in the office of the magazine; a writer named Mark Gayne, who did not work for the magazine but worked for a leading periodical; a State Department employee, Emmanual Larsen; a gentleman named John S. Service; and another individual, a naval lieutenant named Roth.

The case was taken before the grand jury in the District of Columbia in 1945.

The first grand jury was about to recess. There were only a few days more for the grand jury to sit. I shall not go into all the details. It was thought that if more time were given to develop the case it could be made stronger, as it had some very weak elements in it. In another 10 days a new grand jury would come in, so they started the case before the new grand jury. The new grand jury heard all the evidence of the FBI. Some 17 FBI agents testified. Three of the defendants waived immunity and went before the grand jury, where they were given the "third degree" by the Government attorneys. The documents in the case were examined. All the evidence was brought before the grand jury. When the grand jury finally voted, they indicted three of the defendants. They indicted Jaffe, the editor of Amerasia; Larsen, the State Department employee; and Roth, who was a lieutenant in the Navy. The other three were not indicted. Of the six persons arrested only two were connected with the State Department. They were Emmanuel Larsen and John Service. When the grand jury voted on Service they voted 20 to 0, or unanimously, not to indict. While the Government attorneys were preparing the case for trial the attorneys for the defendants came to the Government attorneys and said, "Why don't you settle this case?" The Government attorneys said, "No, we won't settle it."

In the meantime Emanuel Larsen, the State Department employee who was indicted, tricked the apartment-house manager into admitting that he had let the FBI into Larsen's at night, or at another time, surreptitiously, without Larsen's permission, without his knowledge, and without any search warrant or legal authority. Thereupon the attorneys for Larsen went to the District Court and filed what lawyers call a motion to quash and suppress the evidence on the ground that the evidence obtained was illegally obtained, and therefore violated the fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution. In the meantime the attorneys for Mr. Jaffe were in the Department of Justice. At that moment the clerk of the court in which the motion to quash had been filed called up the Department of Justice attorneys and told them what had happened. Fearing that Jaffe would learn the evidence had been obtained illegally, they followed suit immediately and entered into an arrangement with him whereby he would pay a fine, I think, of $5,000. Thereupon they went down to the court and in due time Jaffe pleaded guilty and the court fined him $2,500. After that Larsen came in and pleaded nolo contendere. He was fined $500.

All of us feel that the men who took part in taking documents, no matter what their character, whether they were secret, semisecret, top secret, or what not, ought to have suffered very severe punishment. I regret as much as anyone that the case did not bring more serious punishment to those who pleaded guilty or nolo contendere. But we have put in our report, for all to read, a long list of cases wherein the Supreme Court and the other Federal Courts held over and over again that evidence which is illegally obtained, that is, evidence which is obtained without legal authority, without a search warrant, cannot be used to convict a man, because the fifth amendment provides that no man can be compelled to bear witness against himself. If the authorities had made the arrests of these men and had come upon the evidence in the course of their arrests, the plea which was entered would not have been good, according to law. This will seem like poor law to nonlawyers, and some of us who are lawyers quite often wonder if it is as good as the founders thought it to be. But it has a long history, into which I shall not go today, but there are many decisions of the courts which support it.

The fourth amendment of the Constitution provides:

> The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized.

The fifth amendment reads:

> No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law—

And so forth. I do not know how many cases can be found, but probably 50 or 60, in which the courts, even the Supreme Court of the United States, have uniformly held that if evidence is illegally obtained, without a warrant, in the premises of the accused, without his consent and knowledge, it is equivalent to making him testify unwillingly against himself. Whether that ought or ought not to be I am not arguing. That is the law, and that is what the courts have held. We have put in the RECORD a number of cases so holding.

In order that I may give an illustration all will understand, it will be recalled that during prohibition days many people who had illegal possession of liquor got off because their premises were raided without search warrants. It was the universal defense. If the raiding officer broke into a place without a warrant and secured the evidence illegally by going into a man's home, the fourth and fifth amendments were used in order that the individual might be cleared.

That is the point, Mr. President. All of that does not amount to a row of pins so far as our duty is concerned. We were not charged with ascertaining whether the grand jury did right or wrong. We were not charged with finding out whether the Department of Justice settled a case rightly or wrongly, per se. We were charged to find out whether persons in the State Department were disloyal, and we would say yes, they were. Emanuel Larsen was disloyal. He was indicted, he was fined, he was fired.

The only other man the FBI said had any connection with the case was John S. Service. The grand jury voted 20 to 0 that he had not intentionally committed any wrong, and the Senator from Massachusetts and the majority of the committee both say that so far as we are concerned no evidence was adduced to show that Service was disloyal to his Government. All the committee members who have spoken on that phase of the case have reached a similar verdict.

Mr. President, I now wish to say something further to show what a fair deal we got in the press, and one of the newspapermen to whom I am referring is sitting in the gallery now. He wrote every day about the Amerasia case. Of course, our hearings were in executive session, and he could no more know what evidence we were adducing than the wall of the Senate Chamber could know it. One day I read this account:

Here is this committee going at this thing all wrong again. Why don't they call the lawyers that prosecuted the case?

Then there was a tirade about the way we were conducting the hearing. At that every moment the lawyer who was prosecuting the case was on the stand behind closed doors, while we were being berated for not calling him.

Another story to this effect went over the air:

If Senator TYDINGS wants to find out, ladies and gentlemen, what is wrong with the Amerasia case, why doesn't he call General Donovan and General Pat Hurley?

I called them. General Hurley said:

It all happened while I was out of the country. I don't know anything about the Amerasia case.

That did not square me with the people who heard the broadcast. Then we sent up to see what General Donovan had to say, and he stated:

I cannot tell you anything about it other than what Mr. Van Beuren told you.

Mr. Van Beuren did not tell us anything that would help us in any way at all, in my opinion.

Mr. President, that is a sample of the stuff. There was the grand jury in New York, and the headlines were commenting on the hearing. Nobody knew what our committee was doing, because the hearings were behind closed doors. Yet some were saying, "Why are you waiting and not doing this and not doing that?" And they did not know what they were talking about.

Finally, the case was whipped up to such a point that it went to the grand jury in New York. I turned on the radio one night and listened to a commentator. He is one I like to hear. He said:

Ladies and gentlemen, this is a great country. You cannot stop America. Whenever there is something wrong, sooner or later it will come out. My, it must make your hearts feel good tonight to hear that after this Amerasia case has blackened the pages of our country, the guilty in that sorry and sordid story are to be brought to justice. In New York, the run-away grand jury—

Listen to that language "run-away"— has at last taken hold of this enterprise, which now you will find out about.

Night after night the run-away grand jury was being headlined over the front pages of the papers, great headlines, and editorials.

You can't trust Congress. They are a sorry lot of politicians.

Even some of the politicians agreed with that, showing their estimate of themselves, rather than of their fellows.

For days and days and days old Amerasia was riding on a run-away grand jury train. Finally, what happened? The great run-away grand jury brought in a unanimous verdict that there had been nothing remiss in the handling of the Amerasia case, so far as they were able to learn in the time in which they had to consider it.

Did that satisfy the critics? Immediately a resolution was offered by the Senator from Indiana. He rose on the floor one day and spoke about "Whitewash, Inc." He had a field day in the Senate. I was in a hearing at that time. Someone said, "You had better get to the Senate floor. Senator JENNER is tearing you to pieces. Go down." I said, "I don't care." I did not go. About a half hour later I came into the Chamber and heard the tail-end of the Senator's speech. He was so sorry about the Senator from Maryland, poor fellow that I was. Talk about reflecting on a Senator. I was going to whitewash. I was going to keep the spies in the State Department. I was going to keep the wicked Communists here and sell my country short.

I want to say to the Senator from Indiana that I have been in some pretty hot places since my boyhood. I have been in some pretty hot places on battlefields, where real men have been killed. I do not want to be personal, but I can think of one or two times when I do not believe there are many men in the world who had a closer shave than I had. If Senators read my biography—I say this though I do not want to be without any modesty—they will find a faint hint there that General Pershing gave me the highest awards this Government has to give, which I can wear on my breast. I do not believe the Senator from Indiana can beat that.

But the Senator from Indiana was worried about the company I was in. Well, I found that the junior Senator from Indiana is in company that I never associate with. I find that Joe Stalin and the Daily Worker and the Senator all vote the same way. I am really going to read the record, because I do not want this little side issue to go unnoticed, particularly when the Senator was so kind, while I was working carrying on two jobs at once, to take care of me during my absence.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order, to call the Senator to order under rule XIX for imputing improper motives to a Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland will take his seat.

(Mr. TYDINGS took his seat.)

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Maryland be allowed to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senator from Maryland will proceed in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have in my hand an editorial or statment by Mr. William Z. Foster, noted Communist, writing in Political Affairs. He advocates as the major point, it seem to me, reduction of the Marshall-plan aid, and the cutting of the arms budget for the Atlantic Pact countries, and so forth. These are issues around which the masses can be rallied. I find that when it comes to cutting the arms aid, and cutting the Marshall-plan aid, the Senator from Indiana has a wonderful record. He has voted against the Marshall-plan aid. He has voted against the North Atlantic Security Pact. He has voted against the arms implementation of it, the arms aid to the North Atlantic Pact countries, until the other day when Korea was invaded. Then he thought it was a good idea to get a few guns over there.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. JENNER. Is not the Senator from Maryland the same Senator who with a bleeding heart has made impassioned statements in the past 2 months on what we must do to disarm? And is it not true, in view of what has happened in Korea, that the Senator, who is at the head of the Armed Services Committee, has almost had his way? It looks like the Senator is having his way.

Mr. TYDINGS. I thought the Senator from Indiana would get around to that. I never advocated, as the Senator knows, that America disarm. I have been a proponent of universal proportionate disarmament, with proper inspection, before, during, and after World War II. If we had had that, no nation now would be in a position to fight us. I coupled with that, that the United Nations should have a police force.

But I am not going to be diverted by questions as to my record. I did not interrupt the Senator when he spoke. I sat and enjoyed his tirade, because I knew that, faced with disaster abroad, the Senator had voted against every program that had been put forward to build up democracy and hold back communism. While Joe Stalin was hollering "this is warmongering" and so on, and the Daily Worker was holding forth, I looked up the Senator's votes, and here they are, one after the other, always, always, always, following the same thing that Stalin is saying, that the Daily Worker is saying, and the junior Senator from Indiana is saying.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is no reflection on the Senator from Indiana. It is merely the truth.

Mr. CAPEHART. I move that the Senator from Maryland be required to take his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland will take his seat.

(Mr. TYDINGS took his seat.)

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Maryland be allowed to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina that the Senator from Maryland may proceed in order. [Putting the question.] The ayes have it, and the Senator may proceed in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. TYDINGS. I am not going to read them all. Amendments to cut, amendments to eliminate, amendments to restrict everything we have had up, until the other day, and then at long last, when Old Joe, with his supertanks, was coming down over the thirty-eighth parallel in Korea and our few American boys were falling back with almost nothing, the Senator and some of his colleagues who vote as he does, who had been hollering against Harry Truman and the Democratic administration, began to be for the Marshall plan, for the North Atlantic Pact, and for arms aid, whereas they had consistently been voting against all that.

Mr. President, I do not think anyone on this floor is going to deny that all this time the Senator from Maryland has been here day after day, week after week, month after month, battling for wind tunnels, battling for the Central Intelligence Agency, battling for Army housing, battling for an Army pay bill, battling for various Army bills, battling for experimental submarines in an effort to get our country into such shape that it would be prepared for any emergency, and that he has also traveled all over the world trying to secure first-hand information.

When the Senator from Indiana tries to put me in a class—well, I guess I had better not say that. I will leave it hanging in the air and let everybody draw his own conclusion.

Now, Mr. President, and Members of the Senate, that is not all the story. I have more records than this one. Do not think this is the only one I have. I have more of them. Now where is the whitewash?

The House Judiciary Committee went through the whole grand-jury proceedings in the Amerasia case, and we had all their reports before our committee No Member of the House of Representatives said they had whitewashed. We had all the proceedings of the grand jury itself which investigated the case. We had all the evidence of the FBI. We had Forrestal's diary. We had a statement from Mr. Justice Clark. We had a statement from Judge Proctor. We have all the testimony of the FBI. I asked the FBI witnesses:

Do you know in any manner, shape, or form, by anbody, anywhere, any time, anyhow, of any undue influence that was brought to bear on any Government agencies, officers, attorneys, or what-not having to do with this case to stop it or fix it?

Answer. No, sir.

Did you get every man in the State Department that you think had anything to do with letting these documents out? Not who you know, but who you think?

Answer. Yes, sir; we got everyone of them.

Did you put men in the State Department to look around under cover and try to find out how these documents were getting out?

Yes, sir.

Did you get anybody at all?

No, sir.

Did you see any documents passing from a State Department man to anybody on the outside?

No, sir.

Did you see any documents going to the representative of any foreign government?

No. sir.

Are you certain that you turned over to that grand jury all the evidence that you had?

Yes, sir.

Where is that evidence?

I put them over the jumps every way I knew how to ask the questions. And if anybody thinks that was a whitewash, those who were asked the questions do not think so. They said when they got out of there that there was very little that anybody could ask that I had not asked them.

And all the time the whitewash cry was going on by Mr. Woltman, he neglected to tell his readers that he is being sued for libel in the Amerasia case, and was using us as a means of trying to secure evidence for his own personal benefit.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAPEHART. Was the Senator from Maryland or the subcommittee able to find out who did steal the 1,700 documents?

Mr. TYDINGS. I do not understand the Senator. Larsen undoubtedly had been one of the men—he admitted it—who had taken them. Who else took them the FBI did not know.

Mr. CAPEHART. In other words, it was proved that Larsen took the 1,700 documents, was it?

Mr. TYDINGS. And he was indicted; he was fined; he was kicked out.

The FBI had nothing on Service. The grand jury voted 20 to 0 not to indict him. He has been cleared by four loyalty boards; he had been cleared by the grand jury; he has been cleared by a House Judiciary Committee; he was cleared by the New York grand jury; and now he is cleared by the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Rhode Island, the Senator from Connecticut, and the Senator from Maryland. That is fairly good clearance. If there is any whitewash here, as has been alleged, again I say this committee is in rather good, high-toned company. First of all, there is the House Judiciary Committee; then there is the Federal grand jury; then there is the Eightieth Congress, during the term of which the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle had two long years in which to go into this case, shortly after it happened; but they did not do anything about it then, although they raised it again, with us, 5 years after it happened. There is also the recent New York grand jury; and then there is the FBI testimony.

By the way, Mr. President, I wish to have this testimony printed; I am more anxious to have it printed than I am to have the committee report printed, because the testimony shows the full extent to which the committee went to dig up every bit of the evidence. When my good friend, the able Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], says that the report has been superficial, I should like to call to his attention the fact that he was not at the subcommittee meetings all the time when we were getting the testimony on the Amerasia case. I do not mean that the Senator from Massachusetts was deliberately away, but a part of the time he was in Europe on a mission. So he was not in the subcommittee when we adduced a great deal of the testimony.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. LODGE. I wish to ask the Senator whether he will permit me to say that tomorrow I shall seek recognition in order to rectify a number of inaccurate statements which have been made about my position on various matters; but I shall not attempt to interrupt the Senator in order to comment upon them today.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is the Larsen to whom the Senator referred a minute ago the Larsen who is referred to in the report?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes.

Mr. CAPEHART. I should like to ask another question: Was the committee able to find any Communists in the State Department or in any other Department of the Government?

Mr. TYDINGS. First of all, as I shall review again, the business of hunting spies and the business of hunting Communists is primarily the business of the FBI, one of the finest investigative organizations in the world. If the Senator from Wisconsin had anything, that was the place to go; that was the organization to which to turn it over. The fact that the FBI has had all the information and all the material about which the Senator from Wisconsin has talked, plus everything we could adduce, and that, nevertheless, the FBI's investigation shows that there is a complete lack of proof of the alleged big spy ring and of the alleged 205 card-carrying Communists, as the Senator from Wisconsin alleged in his speech at Wheeling, W. Va., is fairly good proof in my book that the Senator from Wisconsin was entirely in error, to say the least.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAPEHART. Was the Senator or was his subcommittee able to find any Communists who had been in the State Department?

Mr. TYDINGS. We investigated every case which came before us; and neither the three Senators who have signed the majority report nor the Senator from Massachusetts nor, so far as I know, the Senator from Iowa have said that any of the charges have been proved.

Mr. CAPEHART. Then is it the Senator's answer that he and his subcommittee were not able to find any Communists who had formerly been employed in the State Department?

Mr. TYDINGS. We found the same thing that the four separate committees of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress found.

Mr. CAPEHART. The Senator from Maryland and his subcommittee did find the Hiss case; did they not?

Mr. TYDINGS. No; the Hiss case was before the loyalty program was put into effect.

Mr. President, of course, a rather good technique has been followed, namely, always to work in the name of Hiss. That is always done; his name is always brought in, in some way or other.

Mr. President, there is no one who looks upon a traitor with more disgust than do the members of this subcommittee, whether on the Republican side of the aisle or on the Democratic side of the aisle. However, the Hiss case was not our job. Hiss already is out; he has already been convicted, and his case is in court.

Mr. CAPEHART. The resolution under which the subcommittee was operating calls for an investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal are employed by the United States or have been employed by the United States; does it not?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. We thought of going back and getting Thomas Jefferson on the stand, but I did not know whether my memory would be clear about my boyhood that far back. [Laughter.]

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. BREWSTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Maryland yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if the following is a correct statement: The Democratic Policy Committee drafted the resolution for this investigation upon the theory that the Senator from Wisconsin had direct information from informants in the State Department—as was said over and over again in the speech the Senator from Wisconsin made on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes. Of course, I have read in parallel columns how the 81 cases which formerly had been examined were reread with slight alterations by the Senator from Wisconsin as if they were new matter. That is what precipitated this investigation, and that is what we thought we were going to investigate when the subcommittee was formed.

Then I found that four separate committees of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress—and I say that without any reflection on them, but simply in order to show that those committees were not of the same political complexion as is the present majority of the subcommittee—had examined every one of those cases, and had not found any Communists or subversives in any of them. All that is shown by the exhibit now hanging on the wall, the chart to which I have referred to as "behind-the-eight-ball chart," the chart which shows the names of the four committees in the Eightieth Congress, one Republican Member of the House, two Republican Senators, and the Eightieth Congress itself, all of whom found no Communists or subversives in any of these cases, although those committees and Members of Congress and the Eightieth Congress itself now are charged with having made a whitewash.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, the Senator from Maryland knows, does he not, that the 81 cases he had to consider were the same as those which had been examined by the four committees in the Eightieth Congress to which he has referred?

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct. Of course, some may not have realized that they were the same.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I will not yield now, for I wish to summarize my statement. I did not interrupt other Senators; I did not interrupt the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], although I do not entirely agree with everything he said. However, I think he made a rather fair presentation of the matter, as he has had the facts. I am sure there are many facts in this connection with which he is not familiar, including the testimony which has been taken. Incidentally, Mr. President, let me say that I wish to have the testimony printed. I think it is most important that it be printed, so that it may be considered in connection with the committee's report. In the testimony there are 3,000,000 words—think of that, Mr. President—3,000,000 words, on 4,000 pages.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator——

Mr. TYDINGS. Just a moment, Mr. President; I have not yielded, and I shall not yield until I take my seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland declines to yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. I now wish to summarize, Mr. President:

Where are we? What a farce this has been, what a hoax, what a fraud, what deceit—for the Senator from Wisconsin to go to West Virginia and state that there are 205 card-carrying Communists in the State Department and that there is a spy ring in the State Department—a charge coming from the lips of a United States Senator—and then overnight to reduce the number thus charged, and to say that the correct number is 57; and then to return to the floor of the Senate and make the same speech, paragraph by paragraph, with that one paragraph changed, although even with that change the facts are not at all in line with the charges made—and uttered with his voice—by the man who is making these wild charges to the people of the United States.

Mr. President, one simply cannot beat a man's voice. We can have all the denials we want, we can have all the explanations we want; but there is the voice, nevertheless. It cannot be brushed down, and it is not the voice of truth. All one has to do is to read the statement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and listen to this recording in order to know that there is not truth in both those statements. We have the affidavits of the radio people, we have the newspaper clipping, we have the letter of the newspaper publisher; we have the record in Salt Like City, we have the record in the Reno State Journal, and we have the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin on the Senator floor. We have the 81 cases in this folder—and here they are, in parallel columns. This is what the folder says; this is what Senator MCCARTHY said. They are the same cases that have been reviewed by four separate committees of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress. I defy anyone to say that that remark cannot be proved. Who says it? Then what is there other than a fraud and a hoax and a deceit about this whole matter? It ought to make the blood of Americans boil, that they have been told these foul and vile charges—and here is a recording to prove it. And if that is broken, I have duplicates. [Laughter.]

I am not going to talk about Amerasia anymore. The only other man in the State Department who the FBI says was involved in this, that they know about, was John S. Service. He came out of the grand jury room with a vote of 20 to 0 against an indictment. He had been cleared by four separate boards. He has been cleared by the House Judiciary Committee, which investigated the case 2 years ago. He has been cleared by the New York grand jury of 1950. He has been cleared by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the three Members on this side of this subcommittee. He is the only other man mentioned in this entire case.

Now, what are Senators going to do about it? Do they want to take the word of the FBI? Any Senator may come to my office. I have had all the copies cataloged so that it is possible to turn to any of them. I hope it will be made a public document. I will give to any Senator all the grand jury proceedings. I have those. More than that, I will give him the proceedings of the four Republican committees which examined the 81 cases. I have got most of those.

Now, has a fraud, has a hoax, has deceit been practiced on the American people? In Korea, as the Senator from Wisconsin says, brave American boys stand between freedom and slavery, between a Godless nation and Christianity, between democracy and dictatorship. There they stand, outnumbered, quickly thrown in to meet a superior foe, but fighting with that good old American courage which in the face of odds carries on to victory. And while that is going on, the people at home—their mothers, their wives, their fathers, their brothers, their sisters, their children—are told that there are 205 card-carrying Communists in the State Department and a spy ring known to the Secretary of State, and that we will not do anything about it. Wonderful!

The news comes, "Sorry to inform you that your husband was killed in action on such and such a date in Korea." Headlines appear in the press, "Lattimore is the chief architect of our far eastern policy, the top Red spy in our Government." Even the Senator from Massachusetts, whose fairness in this matter has been outstanding, on the whole, as perhaps none of us could be 100 percent fair, said, "That is not true"; and if he, from the opposite side of the aisle, says it is not true, where does that leave the Senator from Wisconsin and the boys in Korea, about whom he shed so many tears in his news release?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; I yield for a question.

Mr. LODGE. I do not wish to ask a question. I wish to make a statement.

Mr. TYDINGS. No, I do not yield for a statement. I did not interrupt the Senator.

Ah, me. Yes, the position of a United States Senator is a great position. There is not a man here that I know of who has wings. There is no one here who is perfect. I suppose none of us can look back on a life without some regret at some incident or happening that we wish had been otherwise. Certainly I should be the last to demand a heart so clean that the mortal would be likened more to an angel than to a Senator. I know we are human. I know we have faults. I know we have weaknesses. But, Mr. President, faults and weaknesses and failings are one thing: a deliberate campaign founded on such loose threads and sketchy and hashed-over and worn-out evidence and facts such as these, at a time of great international peril, is another thing. If this body has any real idea of maintaining its integrity before the people of America and the Armed Forces of the United States, we might well ponder this report and might well ponder those facts. If Senators are still in doubt, let them read the RECORD of last February, then come over and listen to me play my little Victrola. They will learn who has been whitewashing—whitewashing with mud, whitewashing with slime, whitewashing with filth, whitewashing with the dregs of publicity, at the expense of the love of the people for their own country.

I do not want to become sentimental. I remember that a long time ago, when I first went to France, I was a machine gunner, and I had no machine gun. We had hewn logs of wood. I was a captain in those days. We would go into the field every day with our logs. We drilled, and we went back. And how we used to ask what the Congress of the United States was doing at home. We finally got some machine guns. Many men who died would have lived had we gotten them sooner, for we would have learned how to handle them and how to take care of ourselves. I know a little something about what the soldier feels. One or two of them have written me. They cannot believe, they have been good enough to say, that I would intentionally keep a spy in the State Department, that I would keep a Communist there, when our own men are dying. I have tried to tell them that we are not doing that. But they say, "It is pretty tough out here to carry on, under the odds we are fighting against, when we know that our families think and hear and often believe that our Government does not care anything about us, and it is all a mess of spies and traitors." Yes, I know it. I am going to ask the Senate what is it going to do about it, if it finds that these charges have been sent out to the men and to the families of the men who are fighting and dying, and that there is not an ounce of truth in the charges so far as any evidence that comes from the accuser is concerned.

I have been asked whether I intended to bring in a resolution on this or that. I have said, "No, I am going to bring the truth to the Senate and to the American people. Let someone else find the remedy." I might act as a prosecutor, unintentionally, in order to get the truth to this body and to the American people.

I have made no attack on the Senator from Wisconsin. I have simply dealt with the facts as they exist in this case and have taken the very file which he said would prove his case and which the Senator from Massachusetts, at least by his silence, agrees does not prove the case, a file which was examined by Republican Members in control of the Eightieth Congress, and they did not say the case was proved.

As for Owen Lattimore, the Senator from Massachusetts, and the whole committee, so far as it has spoken, say that the charges are not supported by the facts. We had access to the files of the FBI on this matter.

Mr. President, there are the facts for the Senators to ponder. I have no remedy to suggest. I return the matter to the hands and the consciences of the Members of the Senate as we think of men and events in one of the most critical hours in the history of this Republic and of the freedom of mankind on this planet.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION—PRINTING OF SENATE REPORT NO. 2108

Mr. TYDINGS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 314), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to have printed for its use 4,000 copies of Senate Report No. 2108, a report pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, Eighty-first Congress, second session, a resolution to investigate whether there are employees in the State Department disloyal to the United States, and that an equal number of the supplemental views submitted by Mr. LODGE be also printed.

INTERIM OPERATION OF TIDELANDS OIL LEASES

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, this afternoon I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 195 dealing with the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf, commonly called the tidelands. I prepared a statement which I released to the press in explanation of that resolution. I now ask unanimous consent that the full text of the statement and the full text of the joint resolution be printed in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution and the statement were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate Joint Resolution 195

Joint resolution to provide for the continuation of operations under certain mineral leases issued by the respective States covering submerged lands of the Continental Shelf, to encourage the continued development of such leases, to provide for the protection of the interests of the United States in the oil and gas deposits of said lands, and for other purposes

Whereas certain mineral leases on submerged lands on the Continental Shelf were issued by Coastal States under claim of ownership by such issuing States, and lessees have expended large sums of money in conducting operations under such leases; and

Whereas the Supreme Court of the United States on June 23, 1947, rendered an opinion in the case of United States v. California and on June 5, 1950, rendered opinions in the cases of United States v. Louisiana and United States v. Texas, holding that the United States has paramount rights in, and full dominion and power over, the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf adjacent to the shores of California, Louisiana, and Texas, and that the respective States do not own the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf within their boundaries; and

Whereas it is in the national interest and important to national defense in the present emergency that the orderly development of the oil and gas deposits in the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf should continue without interruption, and it is not feasible at the present session of Congress to enact permanent legislation covering the exploration, development, production, and conservation of the oil and gas deposits in the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf, thus making it essential that this resolution be enacted in order to protect the interests of the United States and permit continued development under existing leases pending the enactment of permanent legislation by the Congress respecting the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, (a) That any person holding a mineral lease covering submerged lands of the continental shelf issued by any State or political subdivision or grantee thereof prior to December 21, 1948, or so issued subsequent thereto with the approval of the Secretary, which is, on the effective date of this resolution, in force and effect in accordance with the terms and provisions of such lease and the law of the State issuing it, may, subject to the provisions of this resolution, continue to operate in accordance with the terms and provisions of such lease.

(b) All rents, royalties, and other sums payable under such a mineral lease after the effective date of this resolution, or, as to a lease issued by the State of Louisiana or the State of Texas, payable after the entry of a decree by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Louisiana (Original No. 12, October term, 1949) or United States v. Texas (Original No. 13, October term, 1949) if the decree is adverse to the defendant's claim of proprietary rights in submerged lands of the continental shelf, shall be paid to the Secretary, who shall deposit them in a special fund in the Treasury pending the enactment of legislation by the Congress concerning their disposition.

(c) With respect to any mineral lease that is within the scope of subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary may, after the effective date of this resolution, or, as to a mineral lease issued by the State of Louisiana or the State of Texas, after the entry of a decree by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Louisiana (Original No. 12, October term, 1949) or in the case of United States v. Texas (Original No. 13, October term, 1949) if the decree is adverse to the defendant's claim of proprietary rights in submerged lands of the continental shelf, exercise such powers of supervision and control as may be vested in the lessor by the terms and provisions of the lease.

SEC. 2. The Secretary is authorized, upon the application of any person holding a mineral lease issued by or under the authority of a State on tidelands or submerged lands beneath navigable inland waters within the boundaries of such State, to certify that the United States does not claim any proprietary interest in such lands or in the mineral deposits within them.

SEC. 3. In the event of a controversy between the United States and a State as to whether submerged lands held under mineral leases issued by or under the authority of the State are submerged lands of the Continental Shelf or submerged lands beneath navigable inland waters, the Secretary is authorized, with the concurrence of the Attorney General of the United States if the controversy is being litigated, to negotiate with the State an agreement respecting the continuation of operations under such leases pending the settlement or adjudication of the controversy.

SEC. 4. (a) In order to meet the urgent need during the present emergency for further exploration and development of the oil and gas deposits in the submerged lands of the Continental Shelf, the Secretary is authorized for a period of 3 years from the effective date of this resolution, or, as to submerged lands of the Continental Shelf within the boundaries of Louisiana or Texas, for a period of 3 years after the entry of a decree by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of United States v. Louisiana (Original No. 12, October Term, 1949) or in the case of United States v. Texas (Original No. 13, October Term, 1949) if the decree is adverse to the defendant's claim of proprietary rights in submerged lands of the Continental Shelf, to grant to the qualified persons offering the highest bonuses on a basis of competitive bidding oil and gas leases on submerged lands of the Continental Shelf which are not covered by leases within the scope of subsection (a) of section 1 of this resolution.

(b) A lease issued by the Secretary pursuant to this section shall cover such area as the Secretary may determine, shall be for a period of 5 years and as long thereafter as oil or gas may be produced from the area in paying quantities, shall require the payment of royalty at the rate of 12½ percent, and shall contain such rental provisions and such other terms and provisions as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe in advance of offering the area for lease.

(c) All moneys paid to the Secretary for or under leases granted pursuant to this section shall be deposited in a special fund in the Treasury pending the enactment of legislation by the Congress respecting their disposition.

SEC. 5. The Secretary is authorized to issue such regulations as he may deem to be necessary or advisable in performing his functions under this resolution.

SEC. 6. When used in this resolution, (a) the term, "submerged lands of the continental shelf," means the lands (including the oil, gas, and other minerals therein) underlying the sea and situated outside the ordinary low-water mark on the coasts of the United States and outside the inland waters and extending seaward to the outer edge of the continental shelf; (b) the term "mineral lease" means any form of authorization for the exploration, development, or production of oil, gas, or other minerals; (c) the term "tidelands" means lands regularly covered and uncovered by the flow and the ebb of the tides; and (d) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR O'MAHONEY

INTERIM OPERATION OF TIDELANDS OIL LEASES

Believing that it is essential in the national interest that there should be no interruption of the development and operation of oil deposits in the submerged lands of the continental shelf, I have today introduced a joint resolution providing for the interim development and operation of these lands.

Petroleum is the essential fuel for all military operations—on land and sea and in the air. In the situation which now confronts our country in international relations nothing should be left undone to promote the development of petroleum resources in this country.

The Supreme Court in the Louisiana and Texas cases handed down opinions on June 5 this year confirming the position which was taken in the decision of June 23, 1947, in the California case, reasserting the paramount authority of the United States over submerged lands. Formal decrees have not yet been handed down in the Louisiana and Texas cases and the Congress has not yet enacted any of the bills now before it affecting these lands. It seems to be quite impossible that any of these measures could be enacted at this session.

If there is no legislation, the delay occasioned by the slow process of the issuance of court decrees and the determination of the applications of the States of Louisiana and Texas for rehearing would raise such obstacles to operation and development that the United States would probably be deprived of oil production from these lands at a time when it will be needed in the national interest. At the same time, both the States and the industry, as well as the people of the United States, would suffer.

My resolution in effect makes the Secretary of the Interior a receiver to administer all of the submerged lands except those under inland navigable waters. He will be authorized to receive all rents and royalties under existing leases and to deposit these sums in a special fund in the Treasury pending final solution of the controversy by court action and congressional legislation.

The resolution does not attempt to settle any controversial issue but it does give the Secretary of the Interior authority for a period of 3 years after the entry of a decree in the Louisiana and Texas cases, to grant leases on submerged lands of the Continental Shelf which are not covered by existing State leases.

Failure to enact interim legislation of some kind would precipitate very serious confusion at a time when the country can ill afford it.

Section 1 of the bill provides that any lease of submerged lands issued under the authority of any State prior to December 21, 1948, and which is in force and effect on the date of the resolution may continue to be operated in accordance with the provisions of the State lease. All rents, royalties, and other sums payable under such a California lease or such a lease issued by Louisiana or Texas, if the decree sustains the position of the United States, are to be paid to the Secretary of the Interior pending the enactment of legislation by Congress providing for their disposition. This section also gives the Secretary all the powers of supervision and control which are vested in the State under the terms of such leases.

Section 2 authorizes the Secretary to certify that the United States does not claim any proprietary interest in lands or mineral deposits in lands 'beneath navigible inland waters within the boundaries of any State.'

Section 3 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate an agreement with any State with respect to the operation of leases which may be subject to a controversy as to whether they cover submerged lands of the Continental Shelf or submerged lands beneath navigable inland waters. If the United States is engaged in any litigation involving such lands, the Secretary of the Interior is required to obtain the concurrence of the Attorney General of the United States.

Section 4 authorizes the Secretary to issue leases at competitive bidding but on a flat royalty rate of 12½ percent for 5 years and as long as oil and gas may be produced on submerged lands which are not covered by State leases within the provisions of section 1(a). Receipts under such leases are also to be deposited in a special fund pending future legislation.

Section 5 authorizes the Secretary to issue regulations and section 6 contains the necessary definitions.

I am distributing copies of the resolution to all persons who have indicated an interest in the matter and at an early date I shall call a session of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs at which the problem may be discussed.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM FOR MEETING THE KOREAN CRISIS

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, at the outset I desire it understood that I am not speaking on the question which has been under discussion this afternoon. I intend to speak on it, probably, tomorrow.

Mr. President, when the Russian equipped and trained Communists from North Korea made their open attack on the Republic of Korea on Sunday, June 25, they opened a new phase in world history. We had known that Soviet communism had its plans for world conquest. But we had hoped that it would limit itself to methods short of open armed aggression. We had hoped that it would respect the principle, established by the United Nations Charter, that there should be no threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state. The unprovoked attack on the new Republic of Korea shows that these hopes were vain; it shows that the free world must now gird itself to meet the menace of armed attack at any time, at any place.

The present struggle is not just a struggle between the United Nations and the Communist forces of North Korea. Neither is it yet a struggle between two great powers. It is everlastingly important to keep these things clearly in mind.

We are engaged in the age-old struggle of despotism against freedom. This is a struggle which concerns all of the free world and calls for moral and, to the extent practicable, economic and military support from all who are engaged on the side of freedom. The United Nations has acted promptly, and decisively, to make this clear. Fifty-two nations have concurred in the Security Council finding of aggression and in its appeal to bring that aggression to an end.

While all must help, the heaviest burden and the responsibility of leadership fall upon the United States, not because this is peculiarly our war, but because we have the unique capacity to contribute to a common cause. We have industrial productivity roughly five times that of the Soviet Union. We are the only one of the free nations which possesses great industrial power and which also is free from grave economic dislocations of the Second World War.

Long before the attack on Korea, many of us have felt that world conditions would not permit indefinitely a situation where Russia, in its comparative economic poverty, would continue to manufacture planes and tanks on a scale which far outstripped that of the free world. The unbalance of power, created by this situation, was bound to tempt despots to action, as in Korea.

I believe that the administration can be fairly criticized for not having responded more quickly to these obvious world conditions and for not having provided prevention in time.

This, however, is not the moment for recrimination and for placing blame for past mistakes and present perils.

Yesterday, in his message to the Congress and in his radio address to the American people, the President presented a program of action which, in its broad outlines, is a forceful response to the challenge of Soviet communism and to the aggressive war now being conducted against the United Nations in Korea. It is a program which in principle justifies the general approval of the American people. It points the way by which we can and must present a united front at home to those who have already struck at indivisible freedom and who are poised to strike again and again unless our action gives them pause.

In many respects the President's program is vague and needs important clarifications before legislative enactment. It is essential to our economic health that the additional expenditures proposed should not precipitate ruinous inflation which in turn, by requiring broad price controls and rigid rationing would necessitate expensive and throttling bureaucratic regimentation of our whole economy. With wisdom, courage, and efficiency on the part of the administration, these additional expenditures can be made without crippling our economy.

There must be frugality in the departments of the Government not directly engaged in the present conflict. Expenditures for our nondefense activities must be cut to the bone. At the same time we must insist on prudent spending by the armed services, which in the past have been too often guilty of waste and extravagance. The critical need for efficiency in every part of our Federal Government is greater today than ever before.

The implementation of the President's program will be thoroughly discussed and debated later when concrete legislation is before us for consideration. At the moment we can rejoice that the administration has awakened at last to the peril which has long stared us in the face. We can rejoice that the administration is demanding action which can provide the basis for national unity. Such unity in itself can be a moral factor of mighty force in the struggle to preserve freedom and to extinguish the present warfare in Korea before it spreads into the awful disaster of a third world war.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION—PRINTING OF REPORT NO. 2108

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably, without amendment, Senate resolution 314 submitted previously today by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be authorized to have printed for its use 4,000 copies of Senate Report No. 2108, a report pursuant to Senate Resolution 231, Eighty-first Congress, second session, a resolution to investigate whether there are employees in the State Department disloyal to the United States, and that an equal number of the supplemental views submitted by Mr. LODGE be also printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I am not going to object, I think I understand this perfectly. As I understand, it is satisfactory to both the Members of the majority and also to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. The effect is that we can get about 4,000 copies in this way and save $600 or $700, because the reports would be printed anyway. It would be necessary to go to press again to get the additional 4,000 copies of the report. Within the $1,200 limit it is necessary to take this action.

Mr. WHERRY. This is a simple resolution, which provides for the maximum number of copies to be printed. After these copies are printed, a concurrent resolution would have to be agreed to in order to get additional copies printed?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Will envelopes be printed for each report?

Mr. HAYDEN. Envelopes are not printed for committee reports. The individual views of the Senators from Massachusetts will be printed separately.

Mr. WHERRY. Each Senator may obtain copies of the report and use his own franking privilege?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I should like to submit a unanimous-consent request with reference to the appropriation bill. There are pending to the pending appropriation bill two very important amendments. One involves an appropriation of $25,000,000 to begin ship-repair work on certain ships designated by the Joint Chiefs of Staff as a necessary part of any preparedness or war effort.

The other amendment deals with cancer, heart disease, and mental diseases, in the field of health and research grants.

I have conferred with the Senator from New Mexico, and in view of the fact that these two amendments may cause a great deal of discussion, I ask unanimous consent that they be brought up after consideration of the appropriation bill is concluded. I ask that they be considered as the last amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator restate his request? My attention was diverted.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I ask unanimous consent that what probably will be the two major amendments on the appropriation bill, one involving $25,000,000 for ship-repair work, to which 38 Senators are opposed, and the other one, dealing with cancer research, and so on, to which another group of Senators is opposed, be considered last.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, to begin with, the health research item is in chapter V, Labor-Federal Security.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes; I have conferred with the chairman.

Mr. WHERRY. The ranking minority member is in California and he will not return until Monday or Tuesday of next week. It was my understanding that it was desired to take it up on Monday, and it certainly should be delayed until Monday or Tuesday.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I hope the Senator will not ask for unanimous consent until I can take the matter up with the Senator from California.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I withdraw the request.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to be heard upon one of the amendments. If I understood the Senator correctly the other amendment which he is offering, and for which he makes the unanimous-consent request, has to do with chapter VIII of the general appropriation bill, which covers certain independent offices and executive agencies.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have not had an opportunity to examine the Senator's amendment. I am chairman of the subcommittee in charge of that chapter. Apparently it will not come up at least until after the Interior Department chapter has been disposed of. If the Senator from California should return before the Interior Department chapter is finished, then the Labor and Federal Security chapter would have the right-of-way. I therefore ask the Senator to withhold his request until tomorrow, to give me an opportunity to study it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I merely wished the statement to be on record that these amendments will cause a great deal of discussion. I think 30 Senators have signified their opposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withdraw his request?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I withdraw my request.

ECONOMIC PREPAREDNESS

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on July 18 I sent a memorandum to the members of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report. With the memorandum there was a statement which had been prepared by the staff of the joint committee at my request. Because the economic aspect of our international operations is of very great importance I ask unanimous consent that this memorandum, together with a statement of the necessity for preparedness taxation may be printed at length in the body of the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement and memorandum were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ECONOMIC PREPAREDNESS IS ESSENTIAL

Mr. President, we know now that modern war is total war and that the nation that succeeds in modern warfare is the nation with the strongest economy, as well as the greatest military skill.

Success for the United States in the present international dilemma depends upon (1) the awareness of our people of the fact that Soviet Russia is the head and center of a world revolutionary movement which plans by force and deceit to destroy all rival governments; (2) the willingness of the American people to contribute their substance to pay the economic costs as well as the military costs of total warfare.

It has been the policy of the United States, and still is, to establish world peace. To this end it has contributed through the Marshall plan to the economic rehabilitation of Europe, and through the Truman policy to the containment of communism. By supporting Greece and Turkey and by promoting the union of democratic nations through the North Atlantic Pact and the Western Hemisphere Pact, it has made the free nations of the world more able to resist aggression.

It is evident now that the Soviet Government, through the use of the veto in the United Nations, through the confusion it has sought to create by the activities of Communist Party members everywhere, and through localized acts of aggression, such as those at Trieste and Berlin, now ripening into actual aggressive warfare in Korea with Soviet-trained soldiers and Soviet-built machinery, is determined not to permit the world to return to the ways of peace. The United States must continue, through the United Nations, to mobilize the moral forces of the world against these aggressive tactics of Russia, but at the same time must launch an intensified program of military and economic preparedness.

The question which must be answered by all our people is: How much we are willing to contribute of our personal economic resources to the winning of this struggle? We cannot hope to make the military effort successful without an all-out economic effort. We know now that the lessons of World War I were not used in preparation for World War II. We cannot afford to make the same mistake again of a soft approach to the hardest problem this Nation has ever faced.

When World War II began, the United States had a national debt of less than $49,000,000,000; the national debt today is $257,000,000,000. The debt has reached this proportion because we did not have a pay-as-you-go policy for the war. Only 45 percent of the money costs of that conflict was raised by taxes. The rest of it—55 percent—was postponed to the future through the issuance of bonds. Whatever new expenditures are undertaken now will have to be paid for either through taxes or through another increase in the national debt with consequent inflation. The Kremlin expects this country to take the easy way out, that is, to hold taxes down and to trust that somehow, some time in the future the debt will be paid. Russia is counting on us to bring about our own fiscal collapse by our failure to support necessary military outlays by increased taxes.

Congress is ready now to approve increased military expenditures. Such appropriations should be accompanied by a tax bill which will finance the expense without increasing the debt.

Fortunately, it will be much easier to do this than would at first appear. Military expenditure will increase production; production will increase the income of the people and a portion of this increased income turned into defense channels by a preparedness tax law would make it possible to avoid another increase of the national debt.

Higher taxes would have another beneficial effect. They would constitute an effective substitute for rigid economic controls. In World War II we kept the tax rates lower than they might have been. Rigid controls were therefore necessary, though we were unwilling, in the use of controls, to freeze prices, wages, and profits across the board. Higher taxes now to meet the increased expenditures which everyone believes inevitable will reduce the money available for civilian purchases and will thus operate to divert industrial production from civilian commodities to military commodities. A preparedness tax bill would enable all the people to contribute the buying power necessary to finance the concentrated military production required for the preservation of the free world. For some time to come we as a people will have to be willing to buy fewer automobiles and more tanks.

At my request the staff has made a review of the present economic situation involving recommendations as follows:

1. Balance the cash budget. Federal expenditures should be held to the minimum, particularly those not directly connected with military requirements and vital economic expansion. Once the expenditure program for the next fiscal year has been enacted, the Congress, after conservatively estimating the increased yield in taxes likely to result from increased levels of business activity, should increase governmental revenues by enough to balance the cash budget.
2. Restore consumer credit control.
3. Authorize allocation machinery for critically scarce materials.
4. Implement through the United Nations the point 4 program and other measures providing not only for expanded technical, education, and economic assistance, but for freer flow of goods, services, and capital, to every member of the family of nations seeking peace and freedom.

Furthermore, immediate administrative action should be taken (1) to contract credit for all activities that unduly compete with expanded armament effort; (2) to impound, insofar as possible, funds appropriated for nonvital postponable objectives; (3) to develop a program for private expansion of productive capacity of critical items, such as steel; (4) to encourage increased private savings, via sale of savings bonds.

I. REVIEW OF CURRENT ECONOMIC PRESSURES AND THE OUTLOOK

The current economic situation differs considerably from that which prevailed when war broke out in Europe in September 1939. Then the economy had a great deal of slack. Now employment, personal income and consumption are at record levels.

In 1939 out of a total labor force of 55,600,000, about 9,000,000 were unemployed. Now the total labor force is about 66,000,000 and less than 3,500,000 are unemployed. Technological developments may be counted upon to increase production equivalent to adding a million persons to the labor force during the next 12 months. Another million, mostly young persons, will be available, many of whom are daily volunteering for the armed services. Hours of work can be increased. But the total amount of slack in the labor force is obviously less than half that of 10 years ago.

In 1939 the Federal Reserve Board index of industrial production averaged 109 for the year and doubled within the next 5 years. In June of 1950 the index of industrial production stood at about 197. It reached 243 during the war. It could readily be increased from 5 percent to 7 percent, i. e., the index could reach a level of 210 without involving higher costs, uneconomic and submarginal plants, or additional costs necessary to overcome bottlenecks in production capacity. The one outstanding exception is steel, with copper, paper, and power possibly also bumping ceilings at an early date.

In 1939 disposable personal income amounted to about $70,000,000,000. Now it is more than $200,000,000,000, and may approach the $210,000,000,000 level before the end of 1950. After adjustment is made for increases in population and prices, real per capita disposable personal income is up over 40 percent. Furthermore, consumers are buying more in relation to their incomes than they were in the prewar period. Additional employment and wages combined with military operations abroad might well cause consumers to bid up prices sharply.

In 1939 prices were comparatively low; agricultral prices in particular were substantially below a balanced relationship with other parts of the price structure. Price increases then raised both production and capacity. At boom levels such as now exist, price increases are simply inflationary and obstruct rather than increase balanced production.

In 1939 corporate profits after taxes were about $5,000,000,000. They are now running at a rate of about $21,000,000,000, after taxes. Profits are therefore well over four times the prewar level after allowing for the increase in tax burden.

Inventories of goods are in general about in balance. But widespread piling up of inventories by business, coupled with consumer hoarding, might well tighten the situation to such an extent as to give manufacturers, wholesalers, and retailers strong incentive to aggravate inflationary pressures.

It is assumed in this statement that current police action in Korea represents not an emergency action, but rather the first in a continued series of localized encounters with Communist aggression. Relatively heavy military expenditures may for years to come be a steady proportion of governmental outlay and approximate eighteen to twenty billion dollars, as compared with thirteen at the present time. Can five to seven billion dollars be added to current defense expenditures without inflation? As indicated above, the economy could quickly expand another 5 percent with existing labor force and capacity. Gross national product could rise from levels of $260,000,000,000 to two hundred and eighty or two hundred and eighty-five billion without serious inflation of costs, provided there be no panic buying by consumers, business, or the Government. A further general rise in prices is not only unwarranted but aids directly the strategy of the Kremlin. Lenin laid down as the first tactic in Communist overthrow of capitalism that of inciting inflation. Rumormongers and speculators who boost prices are accomplices of Stalin. No more effective economic weapon can be found than the demonstration by this Nation of self-discipline and sacrifice in domestic commodity markets equal to that being shown on Korean battlefields.

II. FEDERAL FISCAL POLICY

Fiscal policy, under the circumstances, should be directed toward balancing the cash budget as nearly as practicable or feasible, thus contributing to economic stability and strength.

On the basis of present tax laws, on the basis of the expenditures implied in the pending appropriation bill as amended by the Senate Appropriations Committee, and on the basis of modestly expanding levels of national income, the cash budget of this Government may nearly be in balance. The cash budget as distinct from the traditional budget includes total receipts from all sources including trust accounts on the one hand and all expenditures, including those from trust accounts, on the other hand. The Federal deficit on the traditional basis, excluding trust-account operations, might be $2,000,000,000. Existing programs approximate the conditions set forth by the Monetary, Credit, and Fiscal Policy Subcommittee in its report last January as requiring a cash surplus.

The Nation faces this question: Is the expected increase in defense expenditures of an emergency nature—one lasting only for a few months, or until the present Korean situation is terminated? Or, is an increased tempo of military activity more or less permanent—one likely to last for the foreseeable future as additional Communist aggressions develop in other parts of the world? If the former is the accepted assumption then the Government might well accept the resulting Government deficit as a temporary expedient. If, however, the latter is deemed more likely, then sound fiscal policy demands balancing the budget either through reducing expenditures in other areas or by increasing taxes, or a combination of the two.

One of the strongest instruments for stabilizing the economy at high production levels and preventing creeping inflation is the Government's fiscal program. Nothing can be gained through permitting price increases and inflation. Today there is little slack in our human and material resources. Further inflation will not produce extra output.

With fiscal policy one of the most expedient methods of preventing inflation, the Congress should make every use of it. This involves adhering to the criterion that the cash budget should, at the minimum, be balanced when economic activity is at its present tempo. Most careful scrutiny of Federal expenditure programs should again be made to find possible reductions that might offset to the largest possible extent the necessary increases in the military area. Once the expenditure program has been determined—after the pending appropriation bill becomes law and after the new requests for additional military authorizations are known—the Congress should increase taxes to the extent necessary to assure a balanced cash budget in the next fiscal year.

The tax structure should also be designed to make whatever contribution is possible toward the control of strategic materials and scarce manpower. There is now in effect a schedule of wartime excise taxes originally designed with this purpose in mind. To the extent that present necessities are similar to those prevailing at the time these taxes were designed, they are well and good. No need for change in them exists. It may be, on the other hand, that changed circumstances would dictate some change today in the list of particular articles subjected to punitive excises at an earlier date. The list of items included might, therefore, be subject to review but the principle of curtailing all uses of limited resources where they do not contribute to defense needs should be continued. This would suggest that the pending tax bill not be pressed until the expenditure program becomes known and that an automatic criterion of a balanced cash budget be the guiding principle in any tax legislation this session.

III. MONETARY POLICY

Tax measures designed to improve the balance of the budget must be accompanied by monetary action wherever possible.

Under the present circumstances of threatened inflation, the direction of the required monetary action is clear. The problem is (1) the willingness to use and (2) the effectiveness, if used, of the credit restrictive devices which might be brought into play. Ordinarily restrictive credit devices operate through interest rate channels and thereby influence business decisions. However, if the psychological pressures making for inflation are strong enough they may well outweigh the importance which businessmen and consumers attach to increased interest costs. To the extent that they do discourage borrowing, increased interest costs offer a useful device. To the extent that costs are disregarded in the rush of individuals and businessmen to make their own preparations for war, the restrictive effects of higher interest rates are nonexistent; only the cost effects to government and defense construction are real.

The Federal Reserve System has several devices available to it for restricting credit. One of these is through its open market operations.

Another restrictive device now available to the Federal Reserve System is the possibility of increasing requirements for member bank reserves. These requirements are now four percentage points or some 15 percent to 20 percent lower than their recent maxima.

The most effective control for the specific needs of diverting purchasing power from so-called hard goods is no longer available without congressional action. The reenactment of authority for Regulation W is a first and necessary step if consumer purchases of automobiles, houseshold durables, are to be curtailed.

In recent months it has been an accepted Government policy to encourage housing expansion. If defense needs require, the Government should reverse this policy, discouraging housing loans. This may be done by forcing larger down-payments for approved mortgages, by increasing maximum rates on insured mortgages and by qualitative action through tighter appraisals standards.

IV. MANDATORY ALLOCATION OF MATERIALS

The economy is operating so near capacity in certain areas such as steel, electric power, and paper that any increase in demand in the military establishments must, of necessity, create a demand for vital materials in excess of the immediate supply. In addition to efforts to expand our capacity in these key items, efforts should be directed toward developing allocation programs for fair apportionment of these scarce materials among civilian uses. So far as military needs are concerned, the Draft Act provides the President with power to direct production priorities for the defense establishments. However, Congress will need to enact authority for the administration to cooperate with industry in establishing equitable allocations to prevent disruption of the civilian economy and rising prices.

PREPAREDNESS TAXATION NEED

A meeting of the Joint Committee on the Economic Report has been called for Friday morning, July 21, at 10 a. m. The President's message asking for increased military expenditures because of Korean developments has made it clear that prompt action must be taken to prevent inflation and to mobilize the home-front economy to see the Nation through the world crisis.

Members of the committee have responded to the memorandum of the chairman circulated earlier in the week, and the meeting Friday will be an executive session for the discussion of all phases of economic mobilization.

The President correctly pointed out in his message that "the dollar spent now for military purposes will have a magnified effect upon the economy as a whole" generating increased pressures which "if neglected could drive us into a general inflationary situation."

I shall lay before the committee official evidence of the sharp increase in prices which has already taken place, running as high as from 20 to 50 percent in some commodities since March 14; in rubber there has been an increase of 90 percent.

Food prices for the housewife, as well as raw-material prices for the industrial manager, had both risen 15 percent by July 11, and the increase is becoming more rapid. Prices of materials which will go into the military preparedness program are rising more rapidly; steel scrap on July 11 had risen 44 percent, zinc 47 percent, copper 22 percent. Failure to act promptly to control this rising trend will only serve to make the national program of preparedness more difficult and more expensive.

The President in his message has recommended taxation "to finance the greatest possible amount of needed expenditures." This is a mild statement if indeed it is not too soft. Corporate profits after taxes which before World War II were running at approximately $5,000,000,000 annually are now running at a rate four times that, or $21,000,000,000 annually. The combination of rapidly rising prices and this all-time peak of corporate profits after taxes seems to indicate the necessity for immediate action to impose at least an excess-profits tax.

The Nation is once again face to face with the problem of freezing prices. If we temporize, inflation will make the job increasingly difficult. There is no Member of Congress who does not remember how impossible it is to roll back prices after they have risen. It will be much easier and much better for all concerned to prevent them from rising.

On numerous occasions in the last 10 years I have called attention to the essential wisdom of the following sentence from the inaugural address of President Warren G. Harding on March 4, 1921:

"There is something inherently wrong, something out of accord with the ideals of representative democracy, when one portion of our citizenship turns its activities to private gain amid defensive war while another is fighting, sacrificing, or dying for national preservation."

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN in the chair) laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Robert J. Smith, of Texas, to be Vice Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order. If there be no reports, the clerk will state the nominations on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, last evening I served notice that we would take up for consideration the nomination of Maj. Gen. Philip B. Fleming, United States Army, retired. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] desires that it go over another day, and I shall accommodate him, but I advise him that tomorrow we must consider that nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The nomination will go over.

RECESS

Mr. LUCAS. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Friday, July 21, 1950, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate July 20, 1950:

NATIONAL SECURITY RESOURCES BOARD

Robert J. Smith, of Texas, to be Vice Chairman of the National Security Resources Board.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JULY 20, 1950

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. George E. Schnabel, pastor of Albright Memorial Evangelical Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Father of life, light, and mercy, we rejoice in this day. In humility of spirit we yield ourselves to this hour that brings us together to deliberate the problems confronting this Nation and all the peoples of the world. We give Thee hearty thanks that we are not alone but that Thou art with us.

Now again as we face a crisis which is not of our own making, to all who carry upon their hearts the problems of state give the wisdom and the common sense that together make for clear thinking and right decision.

Grant, we pray Thee, to the President the presence of Thy divine spirit, that he might feel Thy hand upon him during these days that try his soul and that bear down upon him the heavy burdens of this crisis.

And now in this hour grant Thy blessing not only upon those whose immediate concern is to legislate for the common good, but also grant Thy blessing, our Father, upon all those who serve the Members of Congress: those who disseminate the news—may they have, O God, a sense of stewardship for the enlightenment of the people.

And as we pray today, first praying for ourselves, grant that before our prayers end we might find ourselves at home and at work among the unfinished tasks of Thy world.

This is our prayer today, Eternal Father, in the name of Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 489) to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the Midcentury International Exposition, Inc., New Orleans, La., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

S. C., 1940 ed., title 19, sec. 1524).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, the Midcentury International Exposition, Inc., will be held in New Orleans from September 15 to October 1 of this year. The purpose of House Joint Resolution 489 is simply to encourage and assist this exposition by permitting that the articles brought to this country for display during the exposition may be entered free of import duties and charges. This is in accord with established congressional policy. As in the case of other legislation enacted by the Congress to facilitate such expositions, House Joint Resolution 489 contains the necessary safeguarding provisions so that if the articles admitted under this legislation are sold, proper import duties will be collected.

I therefore urge the immediate passage of this legislation.

The joint resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DUTY-FREE IMPORTATION OF EXHIBITS FOR INTERNATIONAL FOOD EXPOSITION, INC., CHICAGO, ILL.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 496) to permit articles imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the International Food Exposition, Inc., Chicago, Ill., to be admitted without payment of tariff, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That all articles which shall be imported from foreign countries for the purpose of exhibition at the International Food Exposition to be held at Chicago, Ill., from June 9 to June 15, 1951, inclusive, by the International Food Exposition, Inc., a corporation, or for use in constructing, installing, or maintaining foreign exhibits at the said exposition, upon which articles there shall be a tariff or customs duty, shall be admitted without payment of such tariff, customs duty, fees, or charges under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the said trade fair to sell within the area of the exposition any articles provided for herein, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: Provided, That all such articles, when withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, shall be subject to the duties, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of their withdrawal; and on such articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling or exposure, the duties, if payable, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal from entry hereunder for consumption or entry under the general tariff law: Provided further, That imported articles provided for herein shall not be subject to any marking requirements of the general tariff laws, except when such articles are withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States, in which case they shall not be released from customs custody until properly marked, but no additional duty shall be assessed because such articles were not sufficiently marked when imported into the United States: Provided further, That at any time during or within 3 months after the close of the exposition, any article entered hereunder may be abandoned to the Government or destroyed under customs supervision, whereupon any duties on such article shall be remitted: Provided further, That articles which have been admitted without payment of duty for exhibition under any tariff law and which have remained in continuous customs custody or under a customs exhibition bond and imported articles in bonded warehouses under the general tariff law may be accorded the privilege of transfer to and entry for exhibition at the said exposition under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe: And provided further, That the International Food Exposition, Inc., a corporation, shall be deemed, for customs purposes only, to be the sole consignee of all merchandise imported under the provisions of this act, and that the actual and necessary customs charges for labor, services, and other expenses in connection with the entry, examination, appraisement, release, or custody, together with the necessary charges for salaries of customs officers and employees in connection with the supervision, custody of, and accounting for, articles imported under the provisions of this act, shall be reimbursed by the International Food Exposition, Inc., a corporation, to the Government of the United States under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and that receipts from such reimbursements shall be deposited as refunds to the appropriation from which paid, in the manner provided for in section 524, Tariff Act of 1930, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 19, sec. 1524).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. DOUGHTON] in urging passage of House Joint Resolution 496. This resolution is designed to facilitate and encourage participation in the International Food Exposition to be held next year in Chicago from June 9 to June 15 by providing that the imported articles for this exposition shall not be subject to market requirements under the tariff laws unless the articles are withdrawn for consumption in this country. The articles admitted for this exposition may be sold within 3 months after the close of the exposition but only under such safeguarding regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall subscribe in order to protect our revenue and collect the proper import duties.

This legislation follows the established policy of the Congress in encouraging international exhibitions and expositions held in this country and its passage will afford the people of our country opportunity to see the progress made in other countries of the world in developing new food products.

The joint resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENT OF INTERNAL REVENUE CODE RE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 9120) to amend section 322 (b) (3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) section 322 (b) (3) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this paragraph, the period within which a claim for credit or refund may be filed, or credit or refund allowed or made if no claim is filed, shall not expire prior to 2 years after the time the tax was paid, but if a claim is filed, or credit or refund allowed or made if no claim is filed, more than 6 months after the expiration of the period within which the Commissioner may make an assessment pursuant to such agreement or any extension thereof, the amount of the credit or refund shall not exceed the portion of the tax paid during the 2 years immediately preceding the filing of the claim, or, if no claim is filed, immediately preceding the allowance of the credit or refund."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1941, and, subject to the provisions of the second sentence of section 169 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1942 (added by sec. 509 (a) of the Revenue Act of 1943 and amended by section 2 of this act), the amendment shall also be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1923, and before January 1, 1942.

SEC. 2. The second sentence of section 169 (c) of the Revenue Act of 1942 is hereby amended to read as follows: "A provision having the effect of section 322 (b) (3), as amended, of the Internal Revenue Code and a provision having the effect of the amendment made by subsection (b) of this section, shall be deemed to be included in the revenue laws respectively applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1923, but such provisions shall be effective with respect to taxable years beginning prior to January 1, 1942, only if at some time after February 24, 1944, the Commissioner may assess the tax for such taxable year solely by reason of having made (either before, on or after February 24, 1944) an agreement with the taxpayer pursuant to section 276 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code or the corresponding provision of the applicable prior revenue law to extend beyond the time prescribed in section 275 of such code or the corresponding provision of such prior revenue law the date within which the Commissioner may assess the tax."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, prior to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1942, section 322 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code limited credits and refunds of income taxes to those in respect of which claims were filed by the taxpayer within 3 years from the time the return was filed by the taxpayer or within 2 years from the time the tax was paid. If no return was filed by the taxpayer, then claim for credit or refund had to be made within 2 years after the time the tax was paid.

Section 169 of the Revenue Act of 1942 made important changes in section 322 of the code. Section 169 (a) of that act added paragraph (3) to section 322 (b) of the code to provide certain exceptions to the usual statute of limitations in cases in which both the Commissioner and the taxpayer have, within the period prescribed for the filing of a claim for credit or refund, agreed in writing to extend the time within which the Commissioner may make an assessment.

The stated purpose of section 322 (b) (3) was to extend the period within which claims for refund might be filed in cases where a waiver of the statute of limitations is given, by permitting such claims be filed at any time within 6 months after the expiration of the waiver. However, according to the interpretation placed upon these amendments by the Treasury Department, they have the effect of cutting down the usual 2-year period after payment within which claims may be filed, in any case where the waiver expires more than 6 months before the expiration of such 2-year period.

H. R. 9120 provides that the period within which a claim for credit or refund may be filed, or credit or refund allowed or made if no claim is filed, shall not expire prior to 2 years after the time the tax was paid. The bill also provides that, if a claim is filed more than 6 months after the expiration of the waiver period, the amount of the credit or refund shall not exceed the amount of tax paid during the 2 years immediately preceding the filing of the claim.

The amendment would be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1941, and in certain limited cases with respect to prior taxable years if at some time after February 24, 1944, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, by reason of a waiver agreement with the taxpayer, was not precluded from the assessment of the deficiency in tax for such taxable years.

THE KOREAN SITUATION

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, the President in his speech last night discussed the Korean situation and presented the case and events that led up to the final Korean invasion.

However, he failed to tell the American people that last year we had 8,000 troops in Korea which were withdrawn, and which evidently meant that we had written off Korea.

Now it would appear that our policies have been changed, and we have decided that Korea is not expendable and fine American youths are sacrificing their lives to regain that which we held a year ago.

Somehow or other it does not make sense to me and there should be an explanation made to the American people as to why the withdrawal of our troops, and then fight to again regain that which we held.

He does not explain to the American people who is responsible for making these decisions, which I think everyone is entitled to know.

Certainly there has been some shameful blundering along the line somewhere.

Also, he did not tell the American people that the Armed Services Committee, of which I am a member, have been pressing for an all-out defense program. And he did not explain why he insisted on cutting back the proposed 70 air groups to 48 air groups at a time when defense was greatly needed. He does not explain Secretary Johnson's economy program that brought about the cancellation of the carrier; the cut-back in our ground forces; the cut-back in our Marine Corps and our naval air; and many other cut-backs.

In Chairman VINSON's speech of April 4, he said that Mr. Johnson had taken off not alone the fat, but part of the muscle also. It would appear now that he severed a main artery while performing this economy move on the defense program.

So we now find ourselves in a very desperate position, and if the action that has now been taken, had been taken a year ago, the Korean incident, in my opinion, would not have happened. It has taken the administration a long time to find out you cannot do business with the Russians.

THE REPUBLIC OF NICARAGUA

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago, in my nightly broadcasts over radio station WCFL, in Chicago, I stated that the Americas stood between the death throes of Europe and the birth pains of the Orient and that the security and the economic welfare of the United States during perhaps a period of 500 years depended upon how well we advanced the solidarity of the nations in this hemisphere and aided in the development of their resources, their commerce, and their power to meet the inevitable conflict of interest with the eastern world. Events since then, and the critical world situation of the moment, certainly emphasize the great importance of broadening our thinking from a national to a hemispheric basis. Therefore, I call to the attention of the House, as a most heartening sign of American solidarity, a news article in this morning's newspapers that the free Republic of Nicaragua has announced that 5,000 well-trained Nicaraguan troops are ready for immediate service wherever the United Nations considers they are needed. I am moved by this news to say again, as once I chorused over half a century ago with my Nicaraguan playmates in a Nicaraguan public school, "viva la Republica de Nicaragua, viva los Estados Unidos de America."

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

[Mr. HOLIFIELD addressed the House. His remarks appear in the Appendix.]

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE OF SUGAR SHORTAGE

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Delaware?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOGGS of Delaware. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, I urgently call upon the Agriculture Committee of this House to make an immediate investigation of the sugar shortage with a view to seeing that sugar is available to every American family.

Apparently, sugar is not available to the average American family through the normal retail stores. Complaints are beginning to come in. I have done some checking on this myself, and I find that these complaints are well founded.

It seems that this sudden shortage of sugar at the retail level is due to several factors—which include the failure of the Secretary of Agriculture to authorize the proper sugar import quota in anticipation of our country's needs. There are, of course, many other circumstances which have aggravated this situation. The fact remains that the average American family does not hoard sugar but merely buys from day to day that which is needed for family food purposes.

It is the Congress' job to ascertain promptly why adequate supplies of sugar are not available for needed purchases by housewives.

DISPOSITION OF COMMUNISTS IN THE UNITED STATES

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, the House yesterday by practically a unanimous vote passed a bill to defend Korea against communism.

While it is an admirable thought to fight communism in all parts of the world, I want to say to the President of the United States and to those in authority at the present time that it is necessary and most essential that we stop communism in the United States.

For instance, there is the case of Harry Bridges, who perjured himself in his application to become an American citizen. This is the same man who 6 years ago obtained his freedom through the efforts of the then First Lady of the land.

There are other men in this country of the same ilk who would betray America, and their names are well known to the FBI and to those high in the present administration.

These men should be rounded up in this critical time and lodged in jail or any other place which would prevent their subversive activities against the Government of the United States. We should not permit them to roam all over these United States at this time when our American boys are giving their lives in the defense of Korea.

Mr. Speaker, it is time to stop, to look, and to heed.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to address the House today for 5 minutes, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

DUMPING AND WASTING OF FOOD MUST BE STOPPED NOW

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. REES. Mr. Speaker, waste of food must be stopped. The United States Government, according to news reports, is dumping the new potato crop. These reports state that the Department of Agriculture has purchased $400,000 worth of new potatoes and has destroyed more than $300,000 worth of this valuable food. All this is going on while the Army and Navy are buying potatoes at market prices.

The same is true with regard to veterans' hospitals that also use Federal funds. In other words, Federal funds are being used to pay for new potatoes that are being destroyed, while other Federal funds are being used to buy potatoes at regular prices. Not only that, but other tax-supported institutions, including hospitals and welfare agencies and organizations of similar nature, pay regular prices for these products. All this while the administration is calling attention to the soaring retail prices of food of various kinds.

The right hand of Government does not seem to know, and in this case apparently cares little, what the left hand is doing, all at the taxpayers' expense.

I realize administration officials dealing with this problem have considerable to do, but it would not be expecting too much if they would devise a plan for using the potatoes that are being wasted so that there might be an ample supply to take care of an increased demand ahead of us. It will make our citizens sick to realize that potatoes are being dumped while prices of essential food are increasing every day. The destruction and waste of food should be stopped now.

While I am on this subject matter, Mr. Speaker, I think our administrative officials should give consideration to the moving of surplus eggs and dried milk to take care of ECA demands abroad, and thereby offset a part of the tremendous demand that is being made against the Federal Treasury at the present time.

TOTAL MOBILIZATION

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with many others in commending the President of the United States on his message to the Congress yesterday and on his speech to the people of America last night. They were logical and straightforward. My only regret is that the President did not call for complete and total mobilization.

We are in a struggle for survival. Every citizen should be placed equally in that struggle with no immunity, no special privileges, and no special profits for anyone or any group during this effort.

Total mobilization would not necessarily signify the beginning of world war III. On the contrary, it is the best remaining hope we have of averting total war. At this moment it may be that the Communist leadership has not finally and irretrievably decided to start world war III. If we can now, by our acts, convince the minds of the men in Moscow that the people of America are not only willing to fight to resist Communist aggression but by their acts are in a position to fight, and to win, then we still have hope of averting world war III. The men of the Kremlin are realists. If they can once appreciate our fervor and devotion to protect democracy and freedom and our resolve to sacrifice and fight to protect it, then there is some chance that those men in the Kremlin may not bring on total war.

The people of America, I am sure, would gladly make this sacrifice for peace. The people of America would have to make this sacrifice in war.

Total mobilization at this time could well mean peace. If it fails to convince the leaders of communism of our intentions then total mobilization would have readied us for battles to come. It would well save us from some future historian writing: Too little and too late.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago I introduced the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that, in any future war in which the United States may be engaged, military or essential civilian service should be performed by all citizens of the United States and there should be a total mobilization of all material resources, of industrial and other organizations, and of the services of all citizens of the United States. The President is hereby authorized and requested to determine, select, and designate those material resources, industrial and other organizations, and services, which he considers indispensable to the successful prosecution of any future war in which the United States may be engaged, and to submit to the Congress his request for the enactment of such legislation as may be necessary to secure to the executive branch of the Government the powers and controls essential to the successful prosecution and conclusion of any such future war.

Mr. Speaker, it is high time that we mobilized not only our military forces but the economic resources of this country to defend this great Nation of ours.

INVESTIGATION OF HIGH COST OF LIVING AND FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CONSUMER SERVICES

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, a bipartisan group of six Members of the House—Representatives JACOB K. JAVITS, Republican-Liberal, of New York; JAMES G. FULTON, Republican, of Pennsylvania; THOR C. TOLLEFSON, Republican, of Washington; ANTHONY F. TAURIELLO, Democrat, of New York; ABRAHAM A. RIBICOFF, Democrat, of Connecticut; and SIDNEY R. YATES, Democrat, of Illinois—are today introducing a resolution to establish a select committee to guard against uneconomic price rises and shortages of foods and other cost-of-living items while the Congress is in recess this fall. The resolution also provides for investigation of the effect on the cost of living of moderate- and middle-income families in the United States, particularly in the cities, of the Federal Government's farm price support and control programs and of the processing and distribution costs of foods and fibers. The select committee is also asked to determine whether consumers are getting enough information to enable them to buy most economically and intelligently and whether the consumer services available throughout the Federal Government are being adequately coordinated.

In view of the national decision not to consider the present situation in Korea sufficiently grave to invoke full war emergency powers, self-discipline and watchfulness on the part of our people are clearly needed to keep prices for foods and other cost-of-living items from running away and to prevent the creation of artificial shortages. Drastic increases in the last 2 weeks since the Korean aggression in the cost of flour, coffee, sugar, meat, and similar items to the American family of moderate and middle incomes, as well as of basic raw materials like cotton, rubber, and copper, are only the first signs of what is coming. Unscrupulous elements, though a small minority of our people, are always ready to take advantage of a national emergency for selfish purposes. The light and the heat of congressional investigation will serve a salutary purpose in disclosing facts and in holding the line against a runaway inflation in the cost of living. A fundamental assumption by the Soviet Union in its effort to dominate the world is that we in the United States will suffer a cataclysmic economic collapse. Nothing would be more conducive to a serious depression here than a run-away cost of living. It is essential in the interests of total diplomacy and the victory against communism that the price line on cost-of-living items be held domestically. We consider our resolution to be directed toward that end.

Consumer services in the Government are widely dispersed through many agencies and coordination is urgently required. Among the agencies rendering consumer services are the Department of Agriculture, Treasury Department, Federal Trade Commission, Federal Security Agency, Department of Commerce, Federal Communications Commission, Federal Power Commission, Department of the Interior, Interstate Commerce Commission, Office of the Housing Expediter, and the Tennessee Valley Authority. The Nation is beginning to understand the importance of protecting the consumer and giving the consumer advice in his purchasing as a critical element in the stabilization of our economy and in our prosperity, yet the services which the Federal Government renders are widely diffused, confusing, and often contradictory. A rationalization of these services in the interest of the consumers, their simplification, and consolidation is urgently needed.

The text of the resolution follows:

Resolution to create a select committee to investigate and study the high cost of living

Whereas the challenge to free institutions and world peace by Communist aggression in Korea is being utilized by unscrupulous elements as the basis for drastic price rises in food, clothing, household goods, and other cost-of-living items, otherwise economically unwarranted; and

Whereas food costs are estimated to constitute about one-third of the budget of the moderate- and middle-income families and there have been heavy increases in the costs of food and fibers having a serious effect on their standard of living especially of those residing in the cities; and

Whereas the adequacy and availability at reasonable prices of our food-and-fiber supply is vitally important to the Nation; and

Whereas it is essential that while the House of Representatives is in recess or adjourned a committee of the House shall have under constant surveillance and inquiry the price levels and supply availability of cost-of-living items: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That there is hereby created a select committee to be composed of 15 Members of the House of Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker with adequate representation from among members representing consumers in industrial and city districts, one of whom shall be designated as chairman. The committee is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete investigation and study of the effect on the cost of living of the moderate and middle-income families in the United States of (1) factors related to United States military preparation or operations; (2) the farm price support and control programs of the Federal Government; (3) processing and distribution costs and practices with relation to food and fibers; (4) the adequacy of consumer services and consumer information, and the establishment of a means for coordinating the many Government services and agencies, and private sources of information to guide consumers in the most effective utilization of their purchasing power; (5) the need for laws and regulations or the amendment or repeal of existing laws and regulations in relation to the foregoing.

The select committee shall report to the House of Representatives—or to the Clerk of the House if the House is not in session—from time to time as it shall deem appropriate, but finally not later than March 1, 1951. Any vacancy occurring in the membership of the committee shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment was made.

For the purpose of carrying out this resolution, the committee is authorized to sit and act during the present Congress at such times and places within the continental United States, whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned, to hold such hearings, and to require, by subpena or otherwise, the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, correspondence, memoranda, papers, and documents, as it deems necessary. Subpenas may be issued under the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him, and may be served by any person designated by such chairman or member.

WOMEN IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am having a great many requests from women saying they would like to join the Marines or WAVES or WAC's. They are anxious to do all they can for their country in this time of emergency and stress. Some have even stated they would like to have a draft of women if they have a draft of men. That is a very far reaching thing. I believe the registration of women may well come. I was reliably told that the limitation on the quota in the different services will be lifted very shortly and enlistments will be accepted. The rules and regulations are not yet ready to announce. You must remember that 165,000 women served in a service capacity during World War II, and they made a very great contribution.

NECESSITY FOR A BALANCED MILITARY FORCE

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Speaker, in the present emergency conditions, there have been various calls from groups in the country for the resignation of certain policy making people in the Government. This is no time to rock the boat. We should be united behind our boys in Korea and get them the reinforcements, men, material, and weapons and should forget any bickering among ourselves at this time.

The team is in there. We are all working together on this, and regardless of past mistakes or future mistakes that might be made we have to work on this Korean trouble on a nonpartisan basis.

A group of the Progressive Republican Congressmen of the House endorsed a statement of affirmative principles as goals for the Republican Party, which were largely based on the 1948 platform. A group called the Republican Advance, who have called for the resignation of Secretary of Defense Johnson, also endorsed these principles, which is their right. As I am not a member of this group, nor was I consulted on that statement calling for his resignation, I wish to express my confidence in Secretary Johnson and his Assistant Secretary of Defense, our good Paul Griffith of Pennsylvania. These are difficult times, and no man can guarantee against an attack any place in the world, but we can all step in and cooperate when it does take place.

The problem of defense is not whether we could adequately protect any country in the world from attack but whether the United States could have a balanced force that gives this country reasonable security and with which we can guarantee reasonable security to the people to whom we have obligations under the United Nations. We must back the United States team that is now implementing the policies regardless of politics, as we cannot waste the time for new personnel to learn vital key jobs. Any change now or lack of confidence at home can only show dissension behind the lines and react unfavorably abroad.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on Calendar Wednesday of next week be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264).

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2822, with Mr. FORAND in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the Committee rose on yesterday it was agreed that the bill was to be considered as read and open to amendment at any point. All committee amendments to the bill were agreed to, except two amendments against which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] reserved points of order.

The Clerk will report the first amendment on which a point of order was reserved.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, immediately following line 14, insert the following new subsection:

"(b) The eleventh paragraph of section 709, title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new sentence at the end thereof: 'The use of the contraction "Federal Savings Insurance Corporation" or the initials "F. S. I. C." shall not be construed as a violation of this section.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on his point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. Chairman: I do not insist on the point of order to this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the second amendment against which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] reserved a point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 61, immediately following line 13, add the following new section:

"SEC. 5. Subsection (b) of section 405 of title IV of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'(b) In the event of a default by any insured institution, payment of each insured account in such insured institution which is surrendered and transferred to the Corporation shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible either (1) by cash or (2) by making available to each insured member a transferred account in a new insured institution in the same community or in another insured institution in an amount equal to the insured account of such insured member: Provided, That the Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed before paying the insured accounts, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the validity of a claim for an insured account, it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim.'"

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on his point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. No, Mr. Chairman; I do not insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SPENCE: Add a new subsection at the end of section 3, reading as follows:

"(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall become effective on January 1, 1951."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further committee amendments?

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, this is not a committee amendment in the sense that the committee has agreed to it. I think, however, it will have the support of the entire committee.

Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MULTER: Page 62, after line 4, add the following new section:

"SEC. 6. The name of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation created by section 402 (a) of the National Housing Act is hereby changed to 'Federal Savings Insurance Corporation,' and the words 'Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation' wherever else appearing in law shall be deemed to mean 'Federal Savings Insurance Corporation.'"

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very desirable amendment. I believe it meets with the approval of the Corporation, and I am sure it meets with the approval of the majority of the committee.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, the Advisory Council which is provided for by the law creating the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation has unanimously recommended that this change in the title be made, in order that there be no question that this Corporation does not insure any loans, but insures only deposits in savings and loan associations. We make that clear by changing the name of the Corporation to read "Federal Savings Insurance Corporation," omitting the words "and loan."

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Michigan insist on his point of order?

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to insist on the point of order, but I would like to be heard on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, the Federal Savings and Loan Association, and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation are set up under a separate act. I do not think there is any question at all that a point of order would lie against this amendment. We have not had any hearings on this. The statement has been made on behalf of someone or other that it is desirable to do this. I recall in 1939 when an attempt was made to force all savings banks into the Federal Home Loan Bank system or they would go out of business. That was a follow-up of the Banking Act of 1935 when an attempt was made to force all banks into the Federal Reserve System. The Federal Reserve System under the original bill which was introduced was to be politicalized; the President was to be given power to remove any member of the Federal Reserve Board at will.

The method used at that time to force all banks into the Federal Reserve System was that if they did not come into the Federal Reserve System they could not have their deposits insured under the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. The danger of that was seen in 1935. We modified the act so that we did not create under that act a gigantic banking octopus under the political domination and control of the President of the United States. It was charged at that time that to control the credit of the Nation in this manner was to control the lifeblood of the American economy. We successfully fought those attempts to socialize banking at that time.

In 1939 another bill was considered by the committee and by this House, H. R. 6940, which sought in like manner to force all savings banks into the home-loan bank system or go out of business. We have had some trouble with some of the Federal savings and loan associations and the State-chartered building and loan associations holding out to the public that they were savings banks. They are not savings banks; they are lending institutions; they are thrift institutions which are doing a splendid job here in the United States today in home financing. They are restricted in the main to home financing; they are primarily lending institutions. A customer is not called a depositor in the building and loan and the savings and loan associations for the reason that we do not want to give the impression that they ars savings banks. They purchase certificates; and when they purchase certificates sufficiently, if their credit is otherwise good, they may make a loan for the purpose of building a home.

I think we should keep the Federal savings and loan association in that field. I think we should keep the State-chartered building and loan associations in that field; and at least I think we should have some hearings upon the desirability of changing the name of the Federal Savings and Loan Association and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation before it is done. To strike out the word "loan" might give the idea to some that it is a savings institution. For that reason, notwithstanding the fact that after hearings we might decide the change was desirable, I must insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, may I yield to our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky on the point of order.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of changing the name of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation is because it is a long name and is not really in conformity with what is actually done. The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation does not insure loans. If they insured loans, they would insure the collection of the borrower's debt by the institution. What they really do is insure the savings, and this designation is in accordance with their functions and their duties.

It is desirable because it shortens the name, which diminishes the expense in advertising. The longer name is unwieldy in printing on their books and stationery and the shorter name actually designates its functions. It is the savings deposited in the institutions that are insured.

The gentleman from Michigan has spoken on the general conditions that prevail in reference to the lending institutions, but he has not addressed himself to the parliamentary question involved. We have already legislated in this bill on the name of the Federal Savings and Loans Insurance Corporation, providing that if they use the phrase "Federal Savings Insurance Corporation" in their advertisements it will not be a violation of the law preventing the associations from stating they are federally insured.

I submit the matter to the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FORAND). The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Committee has under consideration a bill to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act. The gentleman from New York has offered an amendment to change the name of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation, which was created under another act.

They are two very separate and distinct acts; therefore the Chair is constrained to rule that the amendment is not germane and sustains the point of order.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which was considered in the committee, yet it is not a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MULTER: Page 29, line 12, strike out "any officer or employee of the insured bank" and insert in lieu thereof "witnesses"; and on line 13, strike out "his" and insert "their"; and on lines 14 and 15 strike out "of the insured bank."

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, this will merely broaden the powers of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in carrying on its investigations. Presently it may subpena an officer or employee of an insured bank, but its hands are tied in calling in any outside person who may have knowledge of the transaction under investigation. If a person does not voluntarily appear, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation has no means to compel him to testify in order to be enlightened as to what the true situation may be. My amendment will give that organization the right to subpena one who is not connected with the bank in connection with transactions properly within the scope of the FDIC in carrying on its examinations, hearings, and investigations.

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. Chairman, this matter was considered in committee and the amendment was not adopted by the committee.

Let us understand what we are doing by the amendment if it is adopted. The language of subsection (c) of section 10, starting in line 8, page 29, is as follows:

For the purpose of any hearing—

I stress the word "hearing" because it does not say "examination"—

under this act, the Board of Directors, any member thereof, or any person designated by the Board of Directors to conduct any such hearing, is empowered to administer oaths and affirmations, subpena any officer or employee of the insured bank, compel his attendance, take evidence, take depositions, and require the production of any books, records—

And so forth. As I understand the amendment of the gentleman from New York it authorizes the Board of Directors of the Corporation to designate any examining officer to subpena any of the records of one who has done or is doing business with the bank. This is an authority which the Federal Reserve does not have in connection with its examination of banks, it is an authority which the Comptroller of the Currency does not have in connection with the examination of national banks, it is an authority which I doubt any of the States have given to their banking commissioners. This means that in the examination of a bank, unless an amendment is offered at the same time to define a hearing as something different than an examination, it would authorize the subpenaing of everyone who has done any business with that bank. It would authorize subpenaing of a borrower, it would authorize the subpenaing of a depositor.

Now, if we are going to authorize the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to do that, to perhaps harass business, industry, agriculture, and labor with the threat of subpena, it carries with it, of course, an unlimited amount of power to investigate on the part of an examiner without any review anywhere.

This is cumbersome, this is unusual authority over which the FDIC has had no jurisdiction heretofore and concerning which the committee has had no hearings. This came to us as a suggested amendment from the FDIC. The committee deliberated upon the matter but did not adopt the amendment for the reason that it would give the FDIC unusual power to subpena anyone it saw fit to subpena, an authority that is not given to any other examining officer. I believe that the amendment should be defeated, at least until such time as we have a chance to determine whether it is necessary or not.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLCOTT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MULTER. We passed this over in committee. We did not call it up for a vote. In the last minute of voting on the bill we overlooked calling it up for a vote.

Mr. WOLCOTT. No; we did not overlook calling it up. I have a very distinct recollection and a notation here that we passed it because of the controversial aspects of it, and then I have a note that it was not adopted, and after it was considered we considered six other amendments, all of which are included in the same document.

Mr. MULTER. The gentleman is quite right. I was wrong when I said that this gives specific power in connection with examinations and inspections. It is only in connection with hearings that they are authorized to conduct.

Mr. WOLCOTT. What is a hearing? There is nothing to describe what a hearing is, and unless there is something to describe that a hearing is distinguished from an examination, a hearing may be built out of any examination which the FDIC examiners make of the bank.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mrs. WOODHOUSE: Page 15, beginning on line 4, strike out all of section (d).

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which would strike out all of section (d) on page 15, beginning on line 4. This would delete from the bill before us the proposal for return to the banks of 60 percent of the net assessment income of FDIC and retain the present method of handling assessment income.

FDIC has an enviable record. I join in all the praise which we heaped upon it yesterday. This is no time to risk spoiling that record.

The fundamental purpose of FDIC is to protect the millions of small depositors and build public confidence in the banking system. Depositors have been protected. The public has confidence in the banking system; that confidence must be maintained.

FDIC now has a reserve of $1,200,000,000 plus $3,000,000,000 borrowing power from the United States Treasury. This reserve has been built up over the 16 years of the life of FDIC. During more than one-half of those 16 years the country has enjoyed unusual economic prosperity with a substantial degree of inflation.

The experience of the FDIC over these 16 years does not offer a dependable criterion as to the expectancy of loss either in normal times or in times of depression.

FDIC reserves have increased, but not at the same rate at which bank deposits have increased. In 1934 the ratio was .73 percent. On December 31, 1948, it was .69 percent and today is about .70 percent. Mr. Harl has stated that they would like to build up a reserve of 1 percent of over-all deposits—Senate hearings, page 39.

The real question is: Is the reserve of $1,200,000,000 adequate to cover losses should we face difficult economic conditions?

During the 1929–33 failures depositors lost 3.3 percent of total deposits before the situation cleared up. But such figures mean little. Since then the ratio of capital accounts of all commercial banks to total assets show a decline from an average of 10 percent to 1 percent. On June 30, 1949, there were 312 banks with a ratio of capital to assets of less than 4 percent—a very thin protection. True the character of bank assets and of bank loans has changed. Banking legislation has tightened up certain former practices. But no figures seem to throw much light on this question of reserve.

No witness claimed to know what the reserve should be. All of them relied very definitely on the $3,000,000,000 credit with the United States Treasury. In brief, the witnesses seemed to rely on the Government to get the banks out of trouble, if trouble should arise.

Increasing coverage to $10,000 will increase FDIC liabilities 15 percent from $74,533,093,000 to $86,287,984,000 covered deposits, meaning 98.6 percent of all bank accounts and 56.5 percent of all bank deposits.

At the same time it is proposed to reduce assessments by a possible 55 percent. In good years banks would get up to a 60-percent refund. In poor years, when they might be in need of help, they may get no refund. This is a topsy-turvy formula.

Moreover, under current conditions the 1950 refund would be some $68,000,000 turned back to the banks at a time when we are fighting potential inflation and taking measures to tighten up loans.

Today banks are doing well. Their profits are good. The FDIC premiums do not fall on the banks, but on the depositors. When FDIC was instituted the banks were permitted to discontinue payment of interest on demand deposits and to make a service charge. These two items have more than met the $120,000,000 a year paid in FDIC assessments.

Because there is no one who claims to know what the reserve should be, because it is essential to take not even the slightest step which might be inflationary or which might lessen public confidence in the banking system; because the experience of the past 16 years is no criterion for the future, and because we are expanding the liabilities of FDIC it would seem wise to leave the situation as it is for the next few years and not to provide for assessment refunds at this time.

In support of this stand I quote from the testimony of Mr. H. Earl Cook, Director, FDIC, and of Mr. Maple T. Harl, Chairman, FDIC, both of whom are held in high esteem by Members of Congress.

Mr. Cook states—pages 25 and 26, House hearings:

The adequacy of the insurance fund is the central question which is raised by the two principal features of S. 2822; namely, the increase in the insurance protection from $5,000 to $10,000, and the reduction of assessment income received from the insured banks which will approximate 55 percent. The adequacy of the fund is not a matter to be decided by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Only the members of this committee and the Congress can decide that question. However, we would like to offer a few comments which may be helpful to your committee in arriving at this decision.

In the first place, our studies do not demonstrate that the fund is adequate. May I say here that this Corporation is only 15 or 16 years old and some matters which we will discuss in executive session with you may throw further light on that particular phase. Nor are we aware of studies completed by others which prove with any degree of certainty that the present deposit insurance fund will be able to withstand all future periods of adversity. The insurance fund now amounts to more than $1,200,000,000. It represents an insurance reserve accumulated by the Corporation after making full provision for losses in connections with banking troubles. Furthermore, the Corporation has repaid the $289,000,000 advanced by the Treasury and the Federal Reserve. That payment was authorized by Public Law 363 with which you gentlemen are so familiar. However, when the insurance fund is compared with the $157,000,000,000 of deposits in insured banks, the margin of protection for the 104,000,000 depositors appears to be very modest.

To be considered also is the fact that, since the Corporation was established, our economy has been in an expanding phase. This has helped to solve many of the problems which otherwise would have entailed costly expenditures.

There are many other facets of the problem of sufficiency of the FDIC funds * * * The problem cannot be dealt with appropriately in generalities. It is absolutely necessary to develop detailed information of a highly confidential nature. * * * If you will defer any questions regarding the adequacy of the fund until the executive session, it will be possible to furnish the members of this committee with a much clearer picture of our problem.

Mr. Harl states:

Our studies do not demonstrate that the fund is adequate. Nor has anyone else, to our knowledge, been able to establish that the deposit insurance fund is sufficient to meet all contingencies. The present insurance fund amounts to about $1,200,000,000. To be sure, that sum looks like and is a lot of money. However, when compared with the $150,000,000,000 of deposits, it would seem that the margin of protection is indeed modest. (Senate hearings, p. 22.)

* * * the experience of the Corporation has been limited almost exclusively to a period of favorable economic conditions—a period of heavy losses could drastically curtail the fund. Prudence counsels the avoidance of any measures that would drastically reduce the amount of deposit insurance assessments or limit the necessary growth of the fund. (Senate hearings, p. 24.)

* * * The relatively small demands made upon the resources of the Corporation during its 15 years of operation cannot be regarded as indicative of future requirements. (Senate hearings, p. 96.)

To eliminate or drastically reduce the contribution of banks to the insurance funds would be a departure from the concept of self-help which is a fundamental feature of the Federal Deposit Insurance System. Increased reliance on Government help is inevitable if the bankers' contribution is reduced beyond reasonable levels. This will invite Government domination of the banking business. It boils down to this—if free enterprise in banking is to continue, deposit insurance must remain predominantly an instrument of self-aid and the banks must be willing to foot the bill. The cost of maintaining a strong mutual insurance fund is indeed a small price to pay for bank solvency, stability, depositors' safety, as well as the historical privilege of freedom in banking enterprise. (Senate hearings, p. 23.)

In light of their testimony I ask support of the amendment to retain assessments as at present.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. LANE. I want to compliment the gentlewoman from Connecticut on the very excellent statement she has made in behalf of this amendment. I join with her in support of the amendment. I feel it is worthy of consideration and hope it is successful.

Mrs. WOODHOUSE. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the last speaker is a very able member of our committee. She is conscientious, and very helpful as a member of our committee. I am sorry I have to differ with her on this matter, although I know she knows much more than I do about banking.

As was explained yesterday, after you pay the operating expenses and all losses for the year, 60 percent of the amount that remains is given as a credit in the following year and 40 percent is carried to the reserve fund. The 40 percent and the $25,000,000 they receive each year as interest on Government securities amount to around $70,000,000 that will be added to the reserve fund. We have in the reserve fund now $1,200,000,000. The FDIC started without anything and had to borrow for capital $289,000,000. That has all been repaid.

Consider the country banks now. I know a bank with $50,000 of capital stock that has deposits of $3,000,000. The assessments costs this little bank $2,500 a year, which is a good deal of money for a small bank.

The Members of this House may be certain that we have taken nothing away from the FDIC. Instead, we have strengthened it.

How have we strengthened it? By giving the FDIC broader authority to examine and ascertain its risks. This fund or reserve we speak of now amounts to about $1,200,000,000. Its safety or guardianship is a sacred trust. We must always be aware of any attempt to raid this fund either directly or indirectly, such as attempting to alter in any way the independent status of the FDIC.

I speak of this great great feeling and considerable pride as I have devoted a great deal of my time to the study of deposit insurance.

The Chairman of the FDIC, Mr. Harl, stated before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee that the formula herein prescribed would be workable, that the coverage could be increased from $5,000 to $10,000, provided you protected the fund by giving the FDIC the right to look at its risks. The original bill before the Senate at that time eliminated the written consent of the Federal Reserve when the FDIC wanted to examine a State member bank. It was not thought necessary to eliminate the written consent of the Comptroller of the Currency before the FDIC could examine a national bank since the Comptroller was a member of the Board of the FDIC. This was supported by the Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, the American Bankers Association—in fact everyone who appeared before the Senate subcommittee endorsed this provision.

We decided that the FDIC should have the right to examine any insured bank, State or National, without asking anyone's permission, since it alone of the three Federal banking agencies must pay the losses. I might point out that this is in accord with the recommendations of the Comptroller General.

As I said before, this formula is sound. The fund will continue to grow, because if the losses exceed the amount of the assessments due there is no credit to the bank until the amount of the loss is restored to the fund. Therefore, the fund will always grow.

Everyone who testified and spoke on this bill has paid the FDIC a compliment. Let us call the roll of the people who favor this formula. They are as follows: The Secretary of the Treasury; the Comptroller of the Currency; the Bureau of the Budget; Hon. Lee Wiggins, former Under Secretary of the Treasury; Hon. Walter J. Cummings, first head of the FDIC; next is the second head of the FDIC, Hon. Leo T. Crowley; next is Hon. Maple T. Harl, present chairman of the FDIC; next is a member of the Board of the FDIC, Mr. Cook; then the American Bankers' Association; the Mutual Savings Bankers' Association; the Consumers Bankers' Association; and many of the State bank associations.

Small banks and large banks all over the country are in favor of this. What most bankers wanted was a credit of 80 percent, but they sat down in the Office of the Secretary of the Treasury with the Board of Directors of FDIC including the Comptroller of the Currency and finally agreed on 60 percent. That is subscribed to by practically every bank in the United States. Furthermore, we had 18 witnesses who appeared before our committee and all except one stated that this formula was sound. They represented little banks and the banking associations in many of the States.

Throughout the past 16 years we have not lost more than $26,000,000, and within the last 6 years we have not had an insured bank failure, because the FDIC has been on the job. Under the Banking Act of 1935 when a bank fails the FDIC is appointed the receiver because it pays the losses. They go in there and give the community and the people sufficient time to sell the assets so that the losses will not be so great. They give them time and do not dump all the assets and securities on the market at one time. Therefore, with the careful examination and supervision by the FDIC we will not have so many losses from now on. I hope you vote against the amendment.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to take a position opposite to that of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia. He has been very kind and most helpful to me. I know that his remarks were offered in good faith and that they represent his opinion on the subject.

Nevertheless yesterday I took the time to warn the Congress that any reduction of assessment or premiums paid by the banks at this time will place the responsibility on this Congress and on this Congress alone, if anything goes wrong with this insurance fund.

I pointed out yesterday that every State insurance system, and there were nine of them in years gone by, failed because after 10 to 15 years of good times they cut the assessments and the premiums and cut the reserve funds so that when panic times came and bad times struck those States, the fund was insufficient in every instance to make good the losses. You will follow that same pattern now, unless you do adopt the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE], and take out of this bill the provision for the reduction of these assessments.

Let me call your attention to a statement offered to the other body when the matter was before its committee considering this very bill. The very distinguished gentleman, Mr. VANDENBERG, pointed out in this language exactly what I am trying to make clear to you. He said:

> To decrease assets and increase liabilities at one and the same time seems to me, I say it most respectfully, as somewhat lacking in the prudence which should govern every FDIC procedure. In the language of the street, it "plays both ends against the middle." It moves too rapidly in reorganizing the FDIC concept. It increases FDIC liabilities by a minimum of $12,000,000,000 without compensatory offsets while reducing annual FDIC income by a probable average of 55 percent net. Although fully acknowledging the good faith of this proposal and the persuasive arguments that can be made in its behalf, I honestly warn against any such wholesale changes in the FDIC balance sheet.

There were other warnings of the same kind given to us and to the committee on the other side.

The FDIC Board of Directors takes the position that they will not state that this fund is adequate; they put the responsibility on you; they say it is for you to decide what is an adequate fund; and I tell you today that $1,200,000,000 in the fund with $156,000,000,000 of deposits in insured banks is not an adequate surplus. Any Member who votes against this amendment now offered and for the bill with reduction of assessments in it as now offered must let his conscience be his guide and be ready to assume the responsibility if anything goes wrong in the days ahead.

On June 27 the New York Herald Tribune carried an item quoting the Second District Federal Reserve Bank as voicing a good deal of concern about the future based on its examination of 600 banks in the last 3 months.

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Congress, I plead with you, I beg of you to pass this amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE] and save the banking system of this country, save this insurance fund so that if the days ahead do blacken and darken—we hope they will not, but if they do—let us be prepared for any emergency; let us build this fund to at least the same amount that the bankers may borrow from the Government under the law; let us have at least $3,000,000,000 in the fund. The law now provides that they may call on the Government for $3,000,000,000. Let the banks at least build up an equivalent amount before we reduce their assessments.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, we are here discussing a formula. As I said yesterday, this formula does not guarantee to the banks that they will receive one penny reduction in the assessment now being made. I ask you to read the formula set forth in paragraph D on page 15. The formula closes by stating: "The insurance losses sustained in said calendar year plus losses from any preceding years in excess of such reserves. If the above reductions exceed in amount the total assessments which become due during the calendar year, the amount of such excess shall be restored by deduction from total assessments becoming due in subsequent years."

This formula is so sound that it even reaches out into future years. You can go back and work on this.

A $1,500,000,000 reserve is not in itself going to save the banks if a very bad situation arises—now, do not get the idea in your mind that there is enough reserve in the FDIC to save the banks if you get into a great economic wash-out; it is not designed for that purpose. If you want to do that, then build up a reserve of around $125,000,000,000. It becomes fantastic, of course.

Take the insurance companies. Did the Home Insurance Co. have sufficient reserve to meet the San Francisco earthquake? Go back and study your history of fire insurance. Suppose you have a catastrophe that wipes out 15,000,000 people; will your life-insurace companies be able to meet it? They do not carry large enough reserves to meet a great wash-out like that; and, of course, you have not got it in FDIC; you will not have it in 50 years assessing one-twelfth of 1 percent as is done at the present time. You simply do not run insurance companies that way; you cannot build a capital structure big enough; the social cost becomes too great.

Here is a formula that protects the FDIC; it protects its operations; it also prevents a fantastic fund being built up that somebody some day can reach in on and grab. I can imagine our getting into a situation where we would reach in and grab the Social Security reserves, the civil-service retirement reserves. What are they? They are just something the people think they have. What are my personal goods and money? Just something that is under my name for the time being. If the Government wants those things, it can take them in the easiest manner possible. They could make capital levies and take these things from us. If we build up great reserves, you will have somebody some day trying to reach in and grab them.

Mr. FULTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield.

Mr. FULTON. May I point out to the gentleman that 100 percent of the FDIC reserve is now in Government bonds, obligations of the Government; so there will be nothing for the Government to reach in and grab; it is their own obligations.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes, but they have a mighty power to tax us. The FDIC is a great psychological force to induce people to keep their money in the banks so that the banks can use that money to buy Government bonds to help finance deficits, if you please. That is why we have FDIC insurance, to induce you to keep your money in the banks instead of in an old sock somewhere. Keep it out where it can be used, where your credit can be used for constructive purposes, instead of hidden out under the trees, in tin cans and old mattresses, in stoves and down in the furnace in the summer time. Our people have to have leadership from a psychological standpoint. Why should the depositors be burdened with assessments far beyond anyone's ability to prove that they will be needed? It cannot be proven that this fund is inadequate at the present time.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAWFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Have we not had enough proof through the years that the FDIC formula as it stands now has provided more money than is necessary, therefore the provision in this bill to return it is not needed?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is correct.

What has kept the banks from failing in the last 12 to 15 years? Not the FDIC. The FDIC comes in as a cushion in some individual cases. As I pointed out yesterday, it is the inflationary forces that have been running. Who is it that could not have made money in the last 15 years in the banking business? The record of earnings is the proof.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the pending amendment be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE].

The question was taken; and the Chair being in doubt, the Committee divided and there were—ayes 30, noes 75.

Mr. CROOK. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MULTER: At page 15, line 25, add the following sentence: "No credit under the provisions of this subdivision of this section shall be allowed or applied at any time that the capital account of the corporation aggregates less than $2,000,000,000."

Mr. MULTER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is being offered because the Woodhouse amendment did not prevail.

The amendment is very simple. It does not affect the formula that is written into the bill to give credits and reductions in the assessments or premiums paid by the banks. It provides that those credits or reductions shall not become effective, they shall not be allowed or applied to the banks until the reserve fund reaches $2,000,000,000. At the present time it is $1,200,000,000.

The United States Treasury can be called upon to give or lend $3,000,000,000. Mr. Gormley—representing the Georgia Banking Association—testified before our committee, that in his opinion the reserve fund should be at least $2,500,000,000. My amendment only calls for $2,000,000,000.

The Secretary of the Treasury, testifying before the Senate committee on this bill, stated that in his opinion this fund is sufficient except in panic times like we had in the thirties.

In view of the fact that the FDIC board will not take a positive position that the fund is sufficient and adequate now, in view of the fact that the only positive testimony before our committee is that it is insufficient at this time, I say you should not reduce these assessments, you should not allow any reduction by credit or otherwise until this reserve fund reaches at least $2,000,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of my amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, the argument I made a few minutes ago against the amendment offered by the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE] applies to this amendment.

Now, if $1,200,000,000 is not sufficient to pay for the losses of the banks of this country, I do not think that $2,000,000,000 would do much more.

I want to repeat: The Secretary of the Treasury, the Comptroller of the Currency, the FDIC, the representatives of the Bureau of the Budget, and practically everyone who testified were in favor of this bill. Now, it is true that one witness, Mr. Gormley, from Georgia, an able and distinguished gentleman, testified it might be preferable to have $2,500,000,000. The FDIC officials, bankers, and others have definitely agreed on 60 percent. Eighteen witnesses testified for this bill and only one witness qualified his statement.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Would not the gentleman agree with me that one of the greatest possible assets in the FDIC concept is the preventive medicine which good management of the FDIC uses, wherein they step in before the disaster occurs and take over and consolidate the banks and prevent the great blow-up occurring in individual banks?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I agree with the gentleman 100 percent, and I say that that is exactly what the FDIC is doing now, and that is one reason why we have not had a failure in 6 years.

Another reason is that the FDIC checks these banks very carefully before admitting them into the fund. I know from personal experience that when a new bank applies for insurance the FDIC investigates the management, the needs of the community, the amount of capital, its earning prospects, and so forth. These things are done quietly and efficiently, and many banks today have benefited from the prudent administration of the FDIC. Proper credit must also be given to the bankers themselves for continually working to improve their operations.

Let me read what Mr. Gormley said:

I personally think that the compromise plan arrived at in this bill would be constructive. I am not prepared to say that the present surplus developed by the Corporation and accumulated by the Corporation is a sufficient one, and neither do I think anyone else can say that the $1,200,000,000 of surplus now accumulated in the Corporation is sufficient.

But of all the 18 witnesses who testified, only Mr. Gormley said personally that it might be better to have a larger surplus. Then we have the Director of the Budget, who is the representative of the President of the Unittd States, the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Comptroller of the Currency all in agreement. Practically all of the little banks were represented by witnesses, and all agreed on this formula written by the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, the Honorable Lee Wiggins, who also represented three small banks, and who at one time was head of the American Bankers' Association. He has the confidence of everyone.

I do not know much about finance, and I do not believe that the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] knows much more than I do, and certainly I would not put my judgment up against that of these distinguished witnesses who appeared before our committee.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER] is an excellent lawyer and fine gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be voted down.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman yields further, reference has been made to the three billion line of credit in section 14 of the bill. Would not a Congress in session, whatever Congress it is, if a disaster occurs, immediately recognize that that $3,000,000,000 is just a drop in the bucket as against $175,000,000,000 of deposits?

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. If a crisis arises, the Congress will act just like they do when they prepare to meet an emergency in war.

Mr. CRAWFORD. And not depend on the reserve fund?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MULTER) there were—ayes 20, noes 81.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALTER: On page 49, line 9, after "obligor", strike out "simultaneously" and insert "contemporaneously."

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, under section 13 (e) of this measure as amended certain conditions for the first time are imposed upon a bank in the event agreements are entered into between customers of the bank and the bank. Prior hereto and up to the time of an unfortunate interpretation of the law it was believed that all legal agreements entered into by the bank and obligor were binding on the Corporation. Under the language of the bill, this agreement must be entered into simultaneously with the recording and other conditions. It is quite obvious that that is impossible. Bank directors usually meet once a week. In the smaller banks there are no loan committees. This language contemplates that when these agreements are entered into they may be approved contemporaneously, which, of course, means at a time approximating when they were entered into.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. I have no authority to accept the amendment for the committee, but I see no objection to it.

Mr. RAINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALTER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. RAINS. May I inquire of the gentleman if there is anything in his amendment that would make retroactive the right to sue or file claims against the Corporation?

Mr. WALTER. Of course not, because this whole section 13e as amended applies only to future agreements. It in no wise affects agreements already entered into. It was never the intention of Congress to give to the Corporation a stronger position than that of the bank and the adoption of the amendment, my amendment is offered to prove that heretofore it was the intent of Congress that any agreement in the absence of fraud, was binding on the Corporation.

Mr. SPENCE. The gentleman's amendment only changes the word "simultaneously" to "contemporaneously"?

Mr. WALTER. Yes.

Mr. SPENCE. I see no objection to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call the attention of the House to the fact that we have as our guests in Washington today one of the finest precision drill teams in the United States. They have taken 101 first prizes in 3 years of competition all over the country. Tonight at 8:15, before the baseball game, they will perform at Griffith Stadium, and tomorrow night at 7:45 in the Capitol Plaza before the band concert. I know my colleagues join me in welcoming them to Washington.

Mr. TALLE. Will the gentleman tell the House what State this drill team is from?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. From California.

Mr. O'HARA of Minnesota. Where is this drill team from?

Mr. ANDERSON of California. This drill team is from Half Moon Bay, Calif.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I take this time to call attention to the committee amendment on page 26. This amendment I discussed yesterday provides for the authorization of the expenditure of $15,000,000 for a new building for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. It was my understanding during that discussion that any controversial amendments would be considered today. At that time I called attention to my interest in this provision in the bill and my objections to it.

Mr. Chairman, I now ask unanimous consent to return to the committee amendment beginning on page 26, line 11, and running over to page 27, line 17, so that we may give this matter further consideration. I feel that the committee did not have a chance to look this amendment over and realize what it was doing when it approved the amendment last night. There was no debate on it after it was offered. All I am asking is that we have a chance to reconsider the amendment. I think as a matter of fairness we should do that. It was not debated at all, just put in the bill by the House committee. Let us have a chance to reconsider it. It will take only a few minutes. Then we can find out whether this Committee of the Whole supports this amendment. I trust there will be no objection to my request. It is my intention to offer a motion to strike this provision from the bill, and ask for a vote on the motion.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, who has always been more than fair with respect to permitting others to express their views. I know he favors this bill. I also favor the bill if this provision is eliminated. If he will let us vote on the amendment, as I think we should, this Committee of the Whole will express its approval or disapproval.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I appreciate the fine compliment paid me and I would like to accommodate the gentleman, but I am going to do something I have never done before in my experience here, I am going to make an objection. The Chairman said definitely we would take up the committee amendments yesterday, which we did. The gentleman's objection comes too late now, and he will have to get unanimous consent to return to that amendment.

Mr. REES. That is what I am trying to do—to get unanimous consent to return to the consideration of the amendment. I certainly do not see a bit of harm in doing that. All I am asking is a chance to reconsider the amendment and get a vote on it.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman is very persuasive.

Mr. REES. All I am doing is asking unanimous consent to reconsider this amendment. It seems to me that one individual should not object to such a reconsideration. We have done it many times on other occasions.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. The gentleman's views, of course, will be recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I must object to his request.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, I want to call your attention to what you do if you adopt this amendment. By this amendment you draw off $15,000,000 for an FDIC building to be constructed in Washington. It is an authorization, you say. Yes; but, of course, an authorization means an appropriation. Authorization is necessary before an appropriation may be considered. I inquired yesterday how many people there are in Washington in this agency. Members of the committee did not seem to have the information. Finally, one member estimated there were 600. I called the Civil Service Commission a while ago and find that there are 326 employed in the agency. That means officers, clerks, stenographers, messengers, and all.

It looks like a lot of money to house a little over 300 employees in a nonwar agency, especially during this crisis.

So, if you do not eliminate this provision, you are authorizing a building to house 326 employees at a cost of approximately $50,000 for each employee right at this moment when you are talking about holding back materials for essential buildings and other necessary construction. It will be said this is only an authorization and the building may not be built until 10 years from now. Be that as it may it is not a good policy. It is not a good thing to do. If Government buildings are to be erected, there are others more necessary than this one.

Furthermore, if you do not expect to construct this building in the near future, why authorize it now?

If you read the hearings you will note where a member of the Board says that the appearance of a fine building such as proposed "would call attention to the great responsibilities imposed upon the Corporation and dignify its functions in the public eye." In other words, it would make a great impression on those who had the privilege of seeing this great edifice. I think the public would be more impressed right now if the $15,000,000 is retained in the insurance fund.

This section in the bill was not considered in the other body at all. It was put in the bill at the last minute when the House committee was considering this legislation. I did serve notice yesterday that I was going to offer an amendment to strike it out. But objection has now been raised by the distinguished gentleman from Georgia. He says it was agreed to and considered as a committee amendment. I concede the gentleman from Georgia is within his rights. Unless he is willing to agree to my unanimous-consent request a vote on the amendment will not be permitted at this time. It will remain in the bill for the present. We will be given opportunity for a separate vote on this amendment when debate is over and the bill is submitted for final vote in the House.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. I would like to correct the gentleman on one thing. Of course the committee amendment was voted on and adopted in the committee.

Mr. REES. It was not unanimously agreed to. I am simply asking that the vote be reconsidered so the question may be properly debated.

Mr. BROWN of Georgia. They are now paying $200,000 rent. I am astonished that the gentleman should take the position he does.

Mr. REES. I am likewise astonished that this agency would pay $200,000 annual rent to provide office quarters for 326 people, including officers, employees, stenographers and clerks and all the rest of them. Your committee might do well to look into that matter. It seems to me I think you will agree, that such rents are excessive.

With the exception of this provision, I am in favor of, and am supporting the legislation. I think the increase in the amount insured from $5,000 to $10,000 is a good move. I want to commend the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation for the splendid service it is rendering to the banks and to the depositors of this country.

The amendment providing for a $15,000,000 building does not belong in this legislation. Not at all.

Opportunity will be given to vote on this amendment after debate is concluded and the bill is reported to the House for final vote. I trust the Members will vote to strike the $15,000,000 from the measure.

Mr. Chairman, let me repeat this is not the time for our Government to set an example of constructing a building costing millions of dollars that has nothing to do with the defense effort. The steel, the copper, and other materials, and the labor, that you would put in this edifice, had better be saved for more essential use right now. Our Government should be first to set the example in this respect. It is difficult to understand how one can support this particular proposal and then insist on the curtailment of steel and other necessary building material.

Mr. HARVEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am for this bill and expect to vote for it. But I have a question I would like to direct to the committee. It has come to my attention, not just recently but over a period of years, that the FDIC insists upon making examinations of both national and State banks. Many of these bankers have complained to me that they are already subjected to examination by either the national bank examiners or the State bank examiners and that this makes an unnecessary duplication and imposes a burden upon them. The question I have to direct to the committee is whether this legislation will make mandatory this continued double inspection.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. It is my understanding, and I think it is the understanding of most of the members of the committee, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT] stated yesterday, that the authority requested is not a duplication of the examinations now provided for by law, but that the examinations provided for in this bill will be merely used in cases of emergency and not as a usual and regular periodic examination of, let us say, every 6 months or every year. This shall be done only in case of conditions where the FDIC feels an individual bank under individual circumstances requires an individual examination.

Mr. HARVEY. If I may further pursue the question. Has it not been the policy, however, in the past for the FDIC, even in the case of strong national banks, to go in and make a duplicate inspection in addition to the inspection made by the national bank examiners, or the State bank examiners?

Mr. COLE of Kansas. They do not have the authority now to make the examination without consent, and so far as I know that is not the situation.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARVEY. I yield.

Mr. DONDERO. It is true, however, that the FDIC does make inspections of banks now under the authority of the Comptroller of the Currency.

Mr. HARVEY. That is correct.

Mr. COLE of Kansas. And with the consent of the Comptroller. This is to authorize the inspection without such consent.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I think I can answer the gentleman's inquiry.

Mr. HARVEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. Where they have a national bank examination it is not customary for them to have an FDIC examination. But where they have a State bank examination, it is customary.

Mr. HARVEY. I see. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. O'HARA of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as the only member on the Banking and Currency Committee from the city of Chicago, I have felt it my duty and responsibility whenever measures are before the committee having to do with the operation of banks to write a letter to all of the bankers in Chicago requesting an expression of their views. Following that practice in the Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Saturday, July 1, 1950, I inserted letters received by me on the pending bill from the bankers of Chicago, including one from Walter J. Cummings, the first Chairman of the FDIC.

It is the general consensus of the Chicago bankers that the measure we are considering is meritorious. Some of the bankers, including those comprising the membership of the Illinois Bankers Association, are opposed to the provision authorizing the FDIC to examine banks without prior consent of the Federal Reserve. The Honorable Benjamin O. Cooper, auditor of public accounts of the State of Illinois, takes a similar position, and I am reading Mr. Cooper's letter of July 14, 1950, at the conclusion of my remarks.

My own judgment is that, in the interest of the depositors, it is important that the FDIC have the right, at any time in its judgment necessary, to go into a bank without notice and without prior consent from the Federal Reserve. This, to me, is just good common sense, but this does not mean that the banks should be put to the inconvenience and the expense of frequent and periodical examinations by the FDIC supplemental to the examinations which are now made. The committee was given to understand definitely by Chairman Harl and other members of the FDIC that it was not the intention of the corporation to conduct examinations except in such cases of emergency and immediate urgency as the welfare of depositors demand. If this were an authorization which would set up another regular routine of bank examinations, thus subjecting banks to unnecessary expense and inconvenience through a multiplicity of examinations, I should not support it. But, as I have said, it is not so intended, and I feel safe in assuring the bankers of America that it will never be carried to that extent. I feel confident that it will operate in furthering the security of depositors and to the advantage of the bankers as well as of the public.

There was some difference of opinion in the committee on the Woodhouse amendment, which I thought was a matter of such importance as properly should come for determination in the Committee of the Whole after calm consideration and exhaustive discussion open to all the Members of the House. My own decision on how I should vote on the amendment I reserved until such time as the matter was before the Committee of the Whole. I have given the matter much study and much thought, and my mind was open until the development of recent days, placing us on a wartime basis. Under the conditions of the war emergency—and for the very simple reason that in a time of abnormality and uncertainty as to the future there should be the minimum of changes and revisions in existing structures—I was inclined to give weight to what the gentlewoman from Connecticut had to say about the possible element of inflation.

But the defeat of the Woodhouse amendment did not as greatly affect the FIDC reserve fund as might have appeared on the surface from the able and forceful arguments made in its behalf. In the period of the next 10 years the reserve fund under the provisions of the present bill will be increased from approximately one and a quarter billions of dollars to about one and three-quarter billions, whereas under the provisions of the Woodhouse amendment the increase would not greatly have exceeded the figure of $2,000,000,000. No one knows how large the reserve should be to meet unexpected and drastic situations of financial chaos, but it is doubtful if the difference of a half billion dollars accumulated during a period of 10 years would be the difference between security and insecurity. It is at least reassuring to us that the reserve has been growing steadily during the past 16 years, that no inroads have been made upon it, and that it will continue to grow at the rate of between forty and fifty million dollars a year.

I think that the banks of the United States, by and large, have earned the respect and the confidence of the American people. I say this as one who was most critical of bank practices and policies in the period antedating the depression of 1929. The pressure exerted by certain banks in the control of credits to industry was responsible for the lowering of wages that proved a large factor in bringing on the depression starting in 1929. The manner of floating uncertain loans to foreign countries and then disposing of such questionable securities at large commissions through agent banks throughout the Nation was an abuse of the prestige of the banker that received deserved rebuke in the public mind. Likewise the profitable traffic in so-called gold real estate bonds that some banks carried on in a wild and reckless era of financing did not add to the good repute of the banking fraternity, even though in that period there were many banks that did not follow the practice and remained fixed in their adherence to the ways of sound banking.

Thus there have been banking abuses in the past, and doubtless there are banking abuses continuing in some spots as there are abuses elsewhere, but for my part I have the same confidence in the integrity and the patriotism and the good and honest intentions of the average banker as I have in any other American.

It is a matter of common knowledge that the foundation of banking recovery and the restoration of public confidence in the banks was furnished by the sound banking laws enacted by democratic Congresses under the gifted leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt. The Federal Deposit Insurance Act, which now has a matchless record of 16 years successful operation with absolute security to the covered depositors, is a cornerstone in that structure. Today Republicans and Democrats alike, with few dissenters, are giving recognition to the wisdom of that legislation by supporting this bill which increases the insurance coverage of deposits from $5,000 to $10,000.

The bankers of America also have recognized the soundness of the banking laws enacted by Democratic Congresses and in the main have accorded to them the support of their full cooperation. It is only fair to say that to them is due their share of the credit for the change of the banking picture of 1929 to that of today.

When I speak of bankers I am not referring alone to a dozen or more of the big banks in the large centers of population. I am thinking as well of the thousands of little banks throughout this Nation, and most of the banks in our country do belong in the small-business category. They need our friendly understanding of their problems just as much as those in any other small-business group.

Their contention is that if the premiums paid by them for bank deposit insurance is greater than the amount required to cover the risk, based upon the experiences of 16 years, and plus the cost of maintenance, the excess should be divided into 2 pools, one pool of 40 percent to go into the present reserve of approximately a billion and a quarter dollars, and the other pool of 60 percent upon which the contributing bankers could draw in the payment of their insurance premiums in later and possibly tougher years. There is no proposal to distribute any money among the banks as cash refunds. On the other hand a considerable part of the 60 percent division reverting to the credit of the contributing banks would go back in cash to the Government in the payment of Federal taxes.

Now, certainly I think this should be considered as all other proposals, regardless of their source, which come to us in our deliberations on legislative measures. What we are all interested in, and what is essential to our economic functioning, is sound banking with the resultant security of deposits. The main question raised by the Woodhouse amendment was how fast we should go in building up the reserve of the FDIC to meet demands in the years ahead which may not be as favorable as those of the present period. Under the bill as it stands unamended, the reserve would be increased forty to fifty million dollars a year. If the Woodhouse amendment had been adopted, and the bill were enacted into law, the increase in the reserve would be a little more than twice that amount. In either case it probably would be infinitesimal in the event of a long and deep and devastating depression such as came to us with the crash of 1929.

I am inclined to believe that the present reserve, plus additions thereto of some $40,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year, is adequate protection in any situation except that which might develop in a time of complete and devastating economic wreckage. And I do not believe that the American people should be led to believe that, in the event of such a depression as we experienced in 1929, there is any assured stability attaching to any reserve. Our approach to that problem is to protect by good laws and wise regulations our financial and economic structure from ever again being upset by such a depression as that of 1929. To take the position that all we have to do to avoid the griefs of a depression is to build up reserves is the very height of folly. Reserves themselves are usually composed of the very holdings that are affected and destroyed in value by the depression itself.

While I am inclined to the opinion that there was much force in the position of the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. WOODHOUSE] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. MULTER], especially in view of the war-emergency conditions preventing, I do not feel that the contrary decision of the majority in the Committee of the Whole has removed the beneficial character of the pending bill which entitles it to our support in the public interest. We cannot lose sight of the fact that the FDIC is not an instrumentality or servitor of the bankers but is the agent and the protector of the plain people who deposit their money in banks, that it has afforded to these plain people full and complete protection of their savings for an extended period of 16 years, and that it has given to the bill before us its endorsement and recommendation that it do pass.

In conclusion I wish to read, as I stated at the commencement of my remarks I would do, the letter from my good and distinguished friend, the great auditor of public accounts of the State of Illinois, the Honorable Benjamin O. Cooper. Because of his high position in my State, and the affection and deep respect in which he is held by all the people of Illinois, I wish to accord to his letter, in which he states his viewpoint on certain provisions of this measure, the courtesy of presentment to my colleagues. Mr. Cooper writes me:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: I am informed that the House Banking and Currency Committee has voted recently to delete from S. 2822 the Senate amendment to section 10 (b). This amendment was placed in the bill in the Senate to protect our State banking institutions, and I hope that the amendment will be retained in the bill if it is passed by the House.

This information comes from D. Emmert Brumbaugh, secretary of banking of the State of Pennsylvania, who testified recently on S. 2822 before your House committee as chairman of the legislative committee of the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks. Mr. Brumbaugh probably has discussed the matter with you, and you probably have heard, also, from the President of our Association, Maurice C. Sparling, who is superintendent of banks of the State of California.

You will remember that on February 7, 1950, I wrote you, enclosing a copy of my letter addressed to Mr. H. Earl Cook, Director of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, regarding this proposed legislation, and you very kindly replied in a letter to me dated February 14. As I understand it, section 10 (b) of S. 2822 as originally introduced in the Senate would have authorized the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to examine State Federal Reserve member banks without prior approval of the Federal Reserve Board, which approval is required by the existing law. This provision of S. 2822 was opposed by our national association and by many others. As a result, S. 2822 as passed by the Senate in March 1950 contained an amendment permitting the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation to examine State Federal Reserve member banks only with the written consent of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Mr. Brumbaugh's testimony on behalf of our national association urged that the amendment to section 10 (b) of S. 2822, as contained in the bill approved by the Senate, be retained. I believe that a final vote is to be taken on S. 2822 within the next week, and I will appreciate anything which you may be able to do in having the Senate amendment remain in the bill if it is passed by the House.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, along the lines of the speech of my good friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] talking about economies when we have to have an all-out war effort, I was very much surprised when I learned that the bill H. R. 8975, providing for experimentation in the field of synthetic fuels, had been called up by the Public Lands Committee yesterday and passed the House by unanimous consent. This bill requires the expenditure of some $87,600,000. My office was advised that it would not be brought up until a rule had been obtained, as the bill was for more than a million dollars, and that a rule had been requested, and therefore I was of the opinion no further action would be taken until the Rules Committee had acted. I feel rather concerned to think that they would bring the bill up late last night under a consent request without giving those interested an opportunity to be present to debate the bill. With American boys losing their lives every day in this war effort it seems strange that we should pass an $87,600,000 bill with 5 minutes of debate. They jumped the bill from $60,000,000 to $80,000,000, and they tossed in $2,600,000 for a laboratory without objection from anybody. I was interested in that proposal. I see my good friend the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON] is here. I should like to ask him why Members interested in the legislation were not notified that the committee was going to call up the legislation.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GAVIN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. PETERSON. I may say that this morning was the first time I knew of the gentleman's interest in this bill. Had I known of it previously, I would have notified him when the matter came up. I cleared the matter with the ranking member of the Public Lands Committee. I discussed it with the majority leader and with the minority leader and then we brought it up. Normally we would not have brought up a matter of this magnitude by consent except that when the bill passed before it passed by a unanimous vote. We felt that the bill was needed. All of the testimony was for the bill.

Since the gentleman spoke to me this morning I have talked with the clerks of the committee. They did not understand that the gentleman wanted to be notified.

Mr. GAVIN. I may say to the gentleman from Florida that I have no objection whatsoever to the $80,000,000 authorized for experimental work in synthetic fuels, but when you come along and toss in $2,600,000 for a laboratory without giving the membership an opportunity to vote on it I think you are taking rather quick action. I think that you all recognized that if that were to be accepted it had to be done very quickly when there were but few Members on the floor of the House, because certainly I would have objected particularly at this time when we are in an all-out war effort, objections should have been registered to the $2,600,000 set up for a laboratory. I would like to have such a laboratory in my back yard; my good and able friend the gentleman from Ohio, WALTER BREHM, was also interested; he would like to have a laboratory in his district. But here we come along and without any debate whatsoever we grant $2,600,000 for a laboratory. If we have got to conserve our resources and our money for this all-out war effort, then we ought not to provide for this costly laboratory with no more than 5 minutes' debate.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman yielded to me to answer him. I was going to say that had I known that the gentleman was interested I certainly would have notified him. The bill was reported out unanimously by the committee. I discussed it with the majority leader, with the distinguished gentleman from Michigan, and he himself when the matter came up under reservation pointed out how industry and Government alike wanted this particular laboratory. With reference to the particular laboratory, the committee in its wisdom put these two matters together because there is an overcrowding at the university and there was a need for this building.

Mr. GAVIN. I have appeared before the gentleman's committee with the same sort of a proposal, but I was not given the opportunity to appear before the gentleman's committee to present my case. I have been before the committee on the same matter. The bill came out originally without the laboratory. The laboratory has only been put in within the last 2 weeks. The original bill did not contain the laboratory. It has just been put in lately.

Mr. PETERSON. The bill was amended in committee and reported out with the laboratory. If the gentleman is interested in his section I assure him he will be heard.

Mr. GAVIN. In view of the fact I indicated my interest to the gentleman's committee and to the clerk of his committee, certainly when you were going to bring the bill up under unanimous consent, the gentleman should have given me an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. PETERSON. I had no knowledge of that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Kansas referred to a committee amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole appearing on page 26 in reference to a building and a site. I read that section:

> When approved by the President, the Corporation is hereby authorized to purchase a building or to acquire a site at the seat of the Federal Government and to construct thereon a building suitable for the use of the Corporation, at a total cost of not to exceed $15,000,000.

The question has been raised that in view of the Korean situation should the FDIC be granted authority now to construct a building?

The authority in this bill is conditioned upon the approval of the President. The President will not approve construction of FDIC's building if the war situation makes it desirable not to do so. This bill will not permit the immediate construction of a building for FDIC. It is merely stand-by authority requiring the President's approval. This authority should be in this bill. It should not be delayed. The FDIC needs permanent quarters for the most efficient operation.

It will not cost the taxpayer 1 cent. The entire cost will be paid out of assessments received from banks.

The present annual rental paid is about $200,000 in the District of Columbia for quarters in three separate locations. So it is only good business sense and good judgment that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation use its own funds and be permitted to construct a building and acquire a site of its own in order to administer the agency in one headquarters.

I believe that the gentleman is under a misapprehension that an additional appropriation is necessary. These funds have been gathered through the collection of premiums, of course vested in the Corporation, and will be used for this purpose.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. The gentleman from Kansas is not under any misapprehension with respect to the use of this fund. The Corporation we are talking about is not an organization that is organized for the purpose of building buildings or anything of that kind. It has in its charge $1,200,000,000 of funds in order to protect the depositors of this country. That is what it was created for.

As I understand this provision of the bill, you are going to divert a part of that money, or the additional fund, whatever you may call it, for the purpose of erecting a building. What I am saying is that in my judgment it is not necessary to erect a building in the city of Washington costing $15,000,000, just to house a few hundred individuals. I realize that something was said in the hearings, although there is only about a paragraph here devoted to this building proposition.

While the gentleman from Kansas has not been in the active banking business, he has been interested in banks and is a member of the board of directors of a bank. I do not believe, as a member of the board of directors of a bank, that he would do the thing that has been suggested; that is, use the other fellow's money to build a bank building. The bank with its own funds could build a building, of course, which would be all right. We too, pay taxes. This outfit is not paying any taxes at all.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Since no Government money is invested in FDIC, or in the proposed FDIC building, the FDIC office space requirements and the servicing of its building should be kept separate from Government leasing and servicing. Otherwise FDIC funds for rentals, management, and servicing its building and office space will become intermingled with Government funds.

Mr. REES. That is too much to pay for buildings to house some 300 people. They do not need that kind of property.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. If the FDIC kept this $15,000,000 invested in Government bonds at 2 percent, it would receive $300,000 a year in interest, which would mean a net saving to that organization of $100,000 a year as contrasted with paying $200,000 a year for rental for the present buildings, is that not correct?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Yes, but this would be contrary to the whole plan of deposit insurance which is a mutual insurance trust fund paid in by the banks to be used exclusively for deposit insurance purposes. It would be a serious mistake to have this fund and the FDIC authority over the same become involved with Government funds and other Government operations. To operate most effectively the FDIC must remain independent in all its aspects.

Limitation of $15,000,000 on cost of building and site: This amount was arrived at by General Services Administration after a thorough survey of the requirements of the FDIC. It was also approved by the Senate Public Works Committee and the Budget Bureau.

Language of bill: This was worked out and approved by General Services Administration, FDIC, Budget Bureau, and the Senate Public Works Committee.

Well, the gentleman certainly would not do that as a bank director in the city of Harrisburg, I am sure.

Mr. KUNKEL. It would save $100,000 a year.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I think we are overlooking the language in the amendment. It does not say you have got to spend $15,000,000. It says "not to exceed $15,000,000."

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is exactly right.

Mr. DONDERO. We have at present a large social security fund, and the Social Security Administration is going to build a building out of its own fund. I know the sincerity of the gentleman from Kansas in relation to Government savings.

Mr. REES. Has the gentleman ever known of an authorization to go through this House, and where there was a subsequent appropriation, where all of the money was not used?

Mr. BUCHANAN. I certainly subscribe to the argument of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Now as to whether they must pay taxes, let me refer to page 51 of the bill, section 15 wherein it says that—

> The Corporation * * * except that any real property of the Corporation shall be subject to State, Territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

So it is clear that if this building were to be constructed local real estate taxes would be paid.

I am for this committee amendment and hope that it is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Chairman, this may be the voice of experience, I do not know. I came into the room as the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. REES] was discussing the inclusion of an amendment in the bill which I think very few Members of the House knew was there. I was here on the floor during the discussion on the bill, especially the latter part of yesterday afternoon. So I thought I might comment from the experience of the subcommittee on which I serve.

We have constant requests of this kind, and we have presently before us a request from the Veterans' Administration, which certainly would receive all possible consideration by us and by the Members of the House, to build an office building in the city of Chicago out of money which had been appropriated for the building of a hospital.

Now, I am not trying to compare the two cases, but I am saying that even in a case as justifiable, you might say, as the Veterans' Administration, which is certainly not a temporary agency nor a small agency, we are very hesitant. It is very doubtful, indeed, if the subcommittee will report favorably on the use of that money. We would be very vulnerable, I think, if we did.

These are the differences. I certainly hope that this amendment since it cannot be reconsidered, will come up for a separate vote in the Congress, and I hope that it will be voted down. These are the reasons:

First, we are entering a war, and there will be immediate need for every bit of structural steel, that is, steel for structural use in buildings, and every one of our expenditures should be explored carefully, and limited to the most absolute necessities.

Second, whenever we build a building for a Government agency, no matter how plausible the need of that agency is, we have a condition in which the private builders and private owners, the people upon whom we depend for the taxes to run this Government, are deprived of just that much more income out of which to pay taxes.

Further, it is very rare, if you will check the cost of space under private ownership against the cost of space operated by the Government, do you find that the Government could not have rented office space somewhere in the vicinity for the same price or for less than the other.

The third condition is, and this is very important, Mr. Chairman, that when an agency of Government builds a building, it has never been known to build one too small, and having built a building and expanded to fill the confines of that building, it is increasingly difficult to return that agency of Government to a normal size. We simply invite top-heavy bureaucracy by building buildings on requests of this kind.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, the point just brought out by the gentleman from Kansas, there is no comparison between the situation as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUCHANAN] and the present situation. A private bank makes its money out of its earnings, out of its profits. It has to be economical. A private bank pays taxes; a private bank supports the community in which it is located. A public agency of Government takes land from the tax rolls in almost all instances, although I understand that this bill includes a provision in lieu of taxes; a public agency of Government does not have to live upon its profits; it spends without limitation.

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. KUNKEL. As a matter of fact, in connection with the point the gentleman raised, that the Government could always rent more cheaply from private agencies, the evidence so far presented here in this committee shows that the FDIC is paying $200,000, and that they would have to take out of their investment account a sum on which they are realizing $300,000 to do that, so they would lose $100,000 on the evidence already before the committee.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. The gentleman is absolutely right. What the committee should suggest is an investigation of why this agency is spending $200,000 for rent, and not a proposal to build them a building.

I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FORAND, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264), pursuant to House Resolution 697, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. KUNKEL. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the committee amendment relating to the $15,000,000 building.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 26, line 11, insert the following:
> "Eleventh. When approved by the President, the Corporation is hereby authorized to purchase a building or to acquire a site at the seat of the Federal Government and to construct thereon a building suitable for the use of the Corporation, at a total cost of not to exceed $15,000,000 for building and site, to be paid for by the Corporation and any payment or payments of such cost shall be considered as operating costs and expenses of the Corporation in determining net assessment income under section 7 (d) of this act: Provided, That the selection of such site shall be subject to the approval of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission, and that the design for such building shall be subject to the approval of the Commisison of Fine Arts: Provided further, That the facilities of the Administrator of General Services shall be utilized, in the manner approved by the Corporation, in the acquisition of such site, the preparation of all necessary plans, drawings, and specifications, the making of all necessary contracts, and the supervision of the construction of such building and said Administrator shall provide any other available facilities, including steam, upon request of the Corporation. Upon request of the Corporation the Administrator of General Services is authorized to spend funds for advance planning to prepare drawings and specifications prior to the approval of the title to any such acquisition. The Corporation shall reimburse the Administrator of General Services for any costs and expenses in furnishing such services and facilities in such amount as may be agreed to by the Corporation and the Administrator of General Services. The Board of Directors shall have exclusive authority to manage and service said building and to determine and provide for all of the Corporation's office space requirements."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. SPENCE) there were—ayes 59, noes 85.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 91, nays 226, not voting 113, as follows:

ABACÁ PRODUCTION ACT OF 1950

Mr. McSWEENEY, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 717, Rept. No. 2657), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (S. 3520) to strengthen the common defense by providing for continuation and expansion of Western Hemisphere production of abacá by the United States. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Armed Services, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

REFUND OF CERTAIN ESTATE TAXES

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H. R. 7840) to provide for the refund of certain estate taxes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 7 (c) of Public Law 378, Eighty-first Congress, first session, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(c) If refund or credit of any overpayment resulting from the application of subsections (a) and (b) is prevented on the date of the enactment of this act, or within 1 year from such date, by the operation of any law or rule of law (other than section 3760 of the Internal Revenue Code, relating to closing agreements, and other than section 3761 of such code, relating to compromises), refund or credit of such overpayment may, nevertheless, be made or allowed if claim therefor is filed within 1 year from the date of the enactment of this act. This subsection shall not apply with respect to a transfer of property in case (1) the decedent retained for his life or for any period not ascertainable without reference to his death or for any period which did not in fact end before his death (A) the possession or enjoyment of, or the right to the income from, the property, or (B) the right, either alone or in conjunction with any person, to designate the persons who should possess or enjoy the property or the income therefrom, and (2) refund or credit of any overpayment resulting from the application of subsections (a) and (b) was prevented on or before January 16, 1949, by the operation of any law or rule of law."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, H. R. 7840 amends section 7 (c) of Public Law 378 of the first session of this Congress to permit refund or credit of overpayment of estate tax resulting from application of section 7 of such law to cases where the decedent retained a life estate or other income interest in property transferred during life, unless such refund or credit was prevented on or before January 16, 1949, by the operation of any law or rule of law.

Section 7 of Public Law 378 provided in certain cases that an inter vivos transfer of property by a decedent prior to March 4, 1931 (or, in some cases, prior to June 7, 1932), with certain interests in the income or use of the property retained during his life would not result in inclusion of the property in the decedent's gross estate if he died before January 1, 1950. Section 7 of Public Law 378 also provided that retention by a decedent of certain minor reversionary interests in a transfer of property prior to October 8, 1949, would not result in inclusion of the property in the decedent's gross estate. Section 7 (c) of Public Law 378 provided for the reopening of closed cases so as to permit refund or credit of overpayment of estate tax in cases where property was included in the gross estate by reason of the retention by the decedent of a minor reversionary interest. However, refund or credit was not permitted in closed cases if the decedent in transferring the property in question, retained the income from the property for life or some other interest in the income or use of the property.

In general, this was a desirable limitation on the reopening of closed cases where estate tax had been paid as the result of retention by the decedent of a reversionary interest, since payment of the estate tax was not necessarily inequitable where the decedent retained not only a reversionary interest but also an interest in the income from the transferred property. The limitation on refunds in closed cases in section 7 (c) of Public Law 378 is inequitable, however, in its application to cases where estate tax has been paid and refund has been prevented by the running of the time for filing claim for refund or by a final court decision after January 16, 1949. There were no final court decisions on or before this date in which property was included in a decedent's gross estate by reason of the fact that an interest in the income from the property was retained by the decedent in a transfer of such property prior to March 4, 1931. On January 17, 1949, the Supreme Court held, in the case of Commissioner v. Church (335 U. S. 632), that property transferred before March 4, 1931, was includible in the decedent's gross estate by reason of his retention of a life estate in the property, whether or not he retained a reversionary interest in the property.

Consequently, after January 16, 1949, it was possible for an estate-tax case to become closed, so that refund would not be allowed, even though the only basis for inclusion of certain property in the decedent's gross estate was the retention by him of a life estate in the property in a transfer made before March 4, 1931. Your committee believes that this result is contrary to the general policy of Public Law 378, which is that property transferred prior to March 4, 1931, shall not be included in a decedent's gross estate solely by reason of the retention by him of a life estate if the decedent died before January 1, 1950. H. R. 7840 corrects this result by permitting refund or credit of overpayment resulting from the application of Public Law 378, regardless of the retention of a life estate in the transferred property, unless such refund or credit was prevented on or before January 16, 1949, by the operation of any law or rule of law.

The amendment to Public Law 378 made by this bill permits refund in a case where refund is prevented under the present law by a final court decision rendered after January 16, 1949, and in a case where refund is prevented by the fact that the case was closed on stipulation of counsel after January 16, 1949, while on appeal from a lower court decision adverse to the taxpayer.

Section 7 (c) of Public Law 378 provides that the refund or credit permitted therein shall be made or allowed if claim is filed within 1 year from the date of enactment of such act. Claims for refund or credit permitted by reason of the amendment to Public Law 378 by this bill must also be filed within 1 year from such date; that is, within 1 year from October 25, 1949.

PROVIDING ADDITIONAL FEDERAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 706 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5137) to provide for the appointment of an additional Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] and now yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. LYLE], who was requested by the committee to call up the rule, this rule makes in order a bill providing an extra judge for the State of Texas. We all probably realize there has been a great increase in the volume of work devolving on our Federal judges. In order to lessen that volume of work it will probably take action on the part of the Congress to change the type of cases that come before the Federal judges. But until that is done, it does seem necessary that these judges being asked for at this time be granted in order to carry on the judicial business of the respective Federal districts.

We therefore ask that this receive the consideration of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I have heard of no objection to the rule on this side with reference to this judgeship. I take it for granted that the members of the Committee on the Judiciary will explain the bill and show a justification for this judgeship as well as the others which it is intended to take up.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. McSWEENEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time. I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROVIDING ADDITIONAL FEDERAL DISTRICT JUDGE FOR EASTERN DISTRICT OF TEXAS

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 5137) to provide for the appointment of an additional Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 5137, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS]. It provides as follows:

That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas. The first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the eastern district of Texas shall not be filled.

This is a temporary appointment. There is one judge in this district now. This bill would call for the appointment of a temporary extra judge.

The judgeship proposed by this bill has been recommended by the Judicial Conference of the United States at its regular meeting in 1949.

Since the enactment of the Judicial Code of 1911, the eastern district of Texas has had one district judge. Under section 124 of title 28, United States Code, this judge holds court at six places; namely, Beaumont, Jefferson, Paris, Sherman, Texarkana, and Tyler. These places of holding court are widely separated as indicated by the following road distances: Sherman to Paris, 75 miles; Paris to Texarkana, 95 miles; Texarkana to Jefferson, 58 miles; Jefferson to Tyler, 78 miles; Tyler to Beaumont, 194 miles; Sherman to Tyler, 145 miles; and Sherman to Beaumont, 339 miles.

The headquarters of this judge for this district is located at Sherman. The entire district comprises six divisions covering 41 counties.

The problem of adequately serving this district which arises from its geographic expansiveness is further intensified by the recent development of oil and gas fields in the northern part of the district. In the southern area great industrial development has taken place around Beaumont and Port Arthur.

The need for this additional judgeship for the proper dispatch of the legal business in this district is clearly set forth in a memorandum furnished by the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, which I shall go into at a later time.

Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILSON] such time as he may require. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. COMBS], who introduced this particular bill, happens to be back in Texas attending, I imagine, to some of his primary problems.

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the situation with regard to this temporary court which the Committee on the Judiciary has recommended be created in the East Texas district, where I have tried a good many lawsuits, is such that the court sits in six different places. From the northern end of the district to the southern end it is nearly 400 miles. The present judge, who is more or less physically disabled, lives in the extreme northern part of the district. The lawyers at Beaumont, which is a town of around 175,000 to 200,000, and at Port Arthur, a town of some 75,000 to 80,000 people, and Orange, a town of some 40,000 or 50,000 people, have to travel 400 miles to see a district court about any legal business. The litigants have to do likewise.

Let me read some statistics to you by way of comparison. I have been informed by lawyers of the East Texas district that there are some 1,400 cases now pending on the docket in that court. In 1947 the average case load, that is of cases pending, in each one of those places was 484, as compared to the average in the other 84 districts in this country of 271 cases. In other words there were some 150 cases more on the average in 1947. In 1948 there was an average of 324 cases, as compared to 205 in the other 84 districts. In 1949 there was an average of 433 cases as compared to the average of 217 in the other 84 Federal districts of the country.

This would indicate, Mr. Chairman, that certainly we need to create a temporary judgeship in that district in order to clean up the the docket so that the litigants can get their cases tried. Bear in mind that Beaumont, Orange, and Port Arthur in the southern part of Texas is an oil district, as is all of East Texas. I have tried cases in Tyler and in other places in East Texas in the oil field. One of the largest if not the largest oil field in the world is located in that district.

Much oil litigation is constantly being carried on there about titles to oil lands, as well as other difficulties between various litigants both out of the State and in the State. That accounts largely for the crowded condition of the docket.

I think this is a very meritorious bill and should be approved by the House so that this judge can go there to help clean up the docket and so that lawyers and litigants will not have to travel as they do now 385 or 400 miles to see a judge and to transact legal business. I think this bill is necessary and should be passed.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, this is a rather unenviable position in which I find myself. There are eight bills to create new judges coming up in the Congress at this time and the majority leadership has elected to bring up as the first bill the creation of an extra judgeship in the eastern district of the sovereign State of Texas. I am told that our distinguished and beloved Speaker is in favor of this bill. It is regrettable that I find myself in disagreement with the Speaker, but I feel sure he would expect me to do my duty as I see it. Equally sorry am I that I find myself in disagreement with my friend from Texas [Mr. WILSON] a valued member of our Committee on the Judiciary.

What I have to say here in large part will apply to all of these bills to create new judgeships, but I am told that after the Rayburn-Wilson-Combs bill is disposed of the Sabath-Yates bill for Illinois will be called up, and that the rest of them will probably go over until Monday.

Yesterday the President delivered his message to us and we were all impressed. We are all of us exercised and concerned over the state of world affairs. Certainly, it must have occurred to us as we heard that message that now is the time to put first things first. As a part of putting first things first we must curtail insofar as possible expenditures for normal Government activities; in other words we should not go into things that are not absolutely essential on the home front.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEATING. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. I have in front of me the report on the bill, and in it is a letter signed by Henry P. Chandler, the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, dated April 10, 1950.

Mr. KEATING. If the gentleman will permit an interruption, I may say that I intend to go into that report following some general remarks on all the judgeship bills. If the gentleman would be willing to defer his question I should be glad to go into the details of this specific bill a little later, after some general observations.

Mr. TABER. Very well.

Mr. KEATING. It seems to me at least that this bill or the other bills that are before us should not be allowed to just slip through without a fair hearing on both sides of the question. I do not entertain too much hope about the defeat of the particular measure before us because of the very strong backing it has from the Democratic side. The Republicans simply do not have the votes to defeat this bill without substantial help from the other side of the aisle.

You will remember that already in this Eighty-first Congress, about a year ago, we created 24 new judgeships and made three more temporary judgeships permanent; that is a total of 27. The Continental Congress, the first Congress of the United States, called to set up the entire judicial system throughout the country, created 24 judgeships for all of the United States. Never since that time have we reached as many as 27, which we have already created, and we are now being asked to add 8 to that number, or a total of 35.

When we created these other judgeships, it was done by the device of an omnibus bill. These particular eight are not brought before us under an omnibus bill but in separate bills, so it is impossible to offer an amendment to provide that not more than two-thirds shall be members of the same political party, as was done, albeit unsuccessfully, when the previous judgeship bill was before us.

I know all of us agree that the nonpartisan character of the judiciary should be maintained, despite the unfavorable vote which was taken in June of last year, because all of those who opposed the amendment we offered at that time gave voice to the sentiment that our judiciary should be maintained on a bipartisan basis. They protested that it was not necessary to include mandatory provisions in the measure to accomplish that result. In fact, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] who took the laboring oar in opposing the amendment that was before us a year ago to keep the judiciary bipartisan, said, after paying respects to my sincerity in offering the amendment, for which I was very grateful:

> The gentleman's contention should be respected in principle and in practice.

You will find those words in the June 16 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Further he said:

> I maintain that this amendment, though offered in good faith, we hope it will be respected in spirit in the appointments made in every administration, no matter which party shall be in power.

And again:

> It would give the Nation a lift to higher and holier things if we could be sure that the spirit back of the gentleman's amendment would always be preserved.

Those were the words of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama in opposing my amendment which was offered last year. It would be holy and high to keep the judiciary nonpartisan, avers my friend.

Now let us see what has happened.

There were 27 judges provided for in that legislation. The President of the United States has appointed 24 of those 27 judges and of those 24 it so happens that 23 are members of the Democrat Party. One happens to be a Republican. While I appreciate there are high and holy men in the Democrat Party, I question seriously whether the relative proportion of holiness in that party is as high as is indicated by the appointment of Democrats that has been made.

In other words, it was indicated in opposition to this amendment last year that it was not necessary to provide that at least one-third of the appointees should not be members of the majority party in order to maintain the bipartisan character of the judiciary. But it has turned out that of the 24 judges appointed 23 are members of the majority party. No doubt all of them are able gentlemen, but the fact remains that the Chief Executive in exercising the appointive power has failed to observe the salutary principle to which the representative of his party gave voice so eloquently when this matter was before us a year ago.

The history of the appointments from 1933, which was the year when the present majority party came into power, until this time is that there have been 289 judges appointed of whom 272 have been members of the Democrat Party and 17 not members of the Democrat Party, or a percentage of 95 to 5 percent. That is a condition which seems to me to deserve a certain amount of correction and is one of the reasons why I am opposing this bill to create further Democrat jobs in high places.

Furthermore, how can we be asked to give our support to this measure? Is it a part of the Truman program?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I took an active part in the campaign in the fall of 1948 and at that time I heard a great deal about this, that, and the other issue. But I did not then hear anything in the campaign about these bills, that there would be bills introduced to create 35 new Federal judgeships. I never heard anything about increasing the President's salary or boosting the pay of all the top officials in the Government or introducing and trying to pass a bill which would relieve those who came down here for the inaugural parade from paying admission taxes, or, as I say, this bill to create all these additional judges. It seems to me that these issues should be debated before the people. Do they want to have all of these new Democratic officials appointed, or officials of any party, as far as that is concerned? Does the need exist for saddling this expense on the wage earners and taxpayers of the country? Or is this simply a device to reward the party faithful?

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. HALE. I want to ask the gentleman if the proportion of 1 to 24 is retained, the Republicans will only get one-third of one judge; is that correct?

Mr. KEATING. That is correct, and it remains to be seen which third they will get, if any.

Mr. HALE. Would not that fractional operation be particularly difficult to execute?

Mr. KEATING. Yes; it would be, and painful too, whether performed on a Democrat or Republican.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to comment on the argument advanced that the Judicial Conference has approved of these additional judgeships. They have approved, I believe, of all of these bills before us.

Now the Judicial Conference is made up of estimable gentlemen, first-rate judges. I know a number of them personally. Two or three of them I am happy and proud to consider as my friends. But they belong to this club which we might call another body that meets from time to time. One of these estimable gentlemen comes in and says, after they have had dinner—I presume it is after dinner—"Now, we need another judge down my way." The rest of them say, "That is fine," and another will say, "As a matter of fact, we need one up my way." Whereupon after they all have their say, the matter goes through unanimously. All of these are always unanimous, there is never or rarely ever a dissenting opinion in the meetings of the Judicial Conference composed of these fine, estimable gentlemen. Please understand that I am not intending to be critical of them or of their devoted service to their profession. But it is our responsibility, not the responsibility of the Judicial Conference, as to whether these additional judges will be appointed. We must measure all of the factors entailed in such a determination.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I cannot yield at this time. I am limited in time.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from New York a minute?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman a minute.

Mr. KEATING. As soon as I finish this I will be happy to take the minute and at that time to yield to the majority leader.

The proper approach to all these judgeship bills is to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal court from $3,000 to $10,000.

When the $3,000 jurisdiction was set up it was a big sum of money; $10,000 will not begin to buy now what $3,000 bought when that jurisdiction was established. That is the sound approach. That will cut down the number of cases and will lead to a completely different set of figures in all these courts as to the number of cases pending. That is the move we should make, instead of continually adding new Federal judges.

Now, let me come to the consideration of this specific bill before us. I hope that the Members will look at the tables to which I refer as to this case here.

In deciding whether this judicial district needs a new judge, please look first at page 11 of the report, which gives the cases that have been commenced and terminated in this district during the last 10 years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. KEATING. Up at the top you will find that in the year 1949 there were 433 civil cases started, which was less than in three of the previous 10 years. Then when you come down to the criminal cases, down at the bottom of the page, you will find that in 1949 there were 138 cases started, which is the lowest number of any year since 1940. Now that is no doubt due to the increasingly law-abiding character of the fine citizens of Texas, and I congratulate the gentlemen representing those districts for the fact that their criminal cases have declined. But it is a fact that there is a lower number of criminal cases being tried in this judicial district today than at any time in 10 years.

When you turn over the page, table 2, on page 12, the strongest reason is revealed why this bill should be defeated. Here is shown the total civil cases per judge and the total criminal cases per judge. If you take the column relating to civil cases and you add it to the criminal cases, that gives you the total case load for the judge in the eastern district of Texas. The total is not printed in this report, but it is an easy arithmetical computation and is very illuminating. The total case load back in 1940 was 726. It went up next year to 783; in 1942 to 796; then 1943, dropped to 521; 1944, rose to 630; 1945 up to a peak of 837; 1946, 800; 1947, 695; 1948, 503; and 1949, 571. The year 1949 is the lowest year except 1948 of any one of the 10 years. The one judge has been handling that number of cases all of these 10 years, and there is no justification for creating another judge to handle fewer cases now.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. It seems to me that the meat of this question is on page 3 of the statement by Mr. Chandler, Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts:

> The time for disposition from filing to determination of cases tried in the district (exclusive of land condemnation, habeas and forfeiture cases which are not typical) shows an excellent record, 7.9 months, for the eastern district of Texas, compared with an average of 10.4 in the 86 districts.

Indicating that business is being disposed of there on a much more rapid basis than it is anywhere else.

Mr. KEATING. That is right. The gentleman from New York has put his finger on it exactly. The Members will hear on Monday from the proponents of some of these other measures that the main reason why judges should be named in their districts is that this 10.4 figure is exceeded. Now, if that basis is followed, then, certainly, when the 7.9 figure is so much of a decrease from the average, some effect should be given also to that factor. Otherwise, the taxpayer gets it in the neck going and coming. And I might add, that is without any corresponding benefit to the litigants. If the courts are so congested, that justice is unduly delayed and if that condition is occasioned by a shortage of judges and that fact can be affirmatively established, a strong case can be made out for the authorization of additional judicial officers. The statistics here show that exactly the opposite is true and litigants get substantially quicker justice than on the national average.

There is one other factor which distinguishes the Texas case from any other, and that is found on page 5 of the report, that some of the civil cases arise from the fact that injured workmen are given the right under Texas law to bring suit in the Federal Court against insurance companies, and that is reflected in the number of civil cases. As you see, a very large amount of the load, small though the total is, and less though it is than in most of the rest of the districts in the country, is caused by the fact that the State of Texas gives jurisdiction to bring these actions in the Federal court. Where does that end us up? It means that any sovereign State by conferring jurisdiction on a Federal court to hear their local controversies, and most of these involve just a few dollars, can throw the burden of the expense of all this litigation upon the United States Government. It seems to me that strong representations should be made to the State of Texas to compel these cases to be tried in their State courts and not permit them to be brought in the Federal courts. Of course, much of that litigation would naturally be channeled into the State courts if we were to adopt my suggestion about raising the jurisdictional limit in the Federal courts.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK].

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I listened with great interest to the adroitness of my friend from New York [Mr. KEATING]. We all know how adroit he is. But he let the cat out of the bag so far as he is concerned, and I was somewhat surprised because usually he does not make his objections so open as he did on this occasion, when he said he is opposing it as a Republican. I think that must have been a temporary lapse of memory on the part of my friend, because he usually is too adroit to admit that publicly. His open frankness, which is refreshing, clearly shows just what his opposition is based on, that he is a Republican.

My mind goes back to 22 years ago when I came here, when similar bills were brought in under the administration of the late President Coolidge and former President Hoover. We on the Democratic side never opposed them. We recognized that the important thing was service to the public. One of the most important problems confronting the people, whether on the Federal level or on the State level or on the city level, so far as our courts are concerned, is the crowded condition of the dockets, with people trying to get their cases tried as quickly as possible. Long delays create extreme dissatisfaction.

I know as a practicing lawyer, a very active trial lawyer, for more years before I came here than I want to confess, that in the Massachusetts courts it took anywhere from 4 to 6 years in those days to have accident and other cases tried. Clients would come into your office, and there was nothing you could tell them. The insurance companies would recognize that and would compel many a cheap settlement, because they knew they had time on their side. They knew that the plaintiff invariably was a person who did not have much means and could not afford to wait. The result is that oftentimes we were forced to make a settlement far below what the liability and the injuries and the damages called for.

It seems to me the basic question we should consider is not that of politics. While that is important to us, it should be secondary. The basic question in each one of these bills is whether or not the circumstances, the facts, justify favorable action on the bill, and whether or not the service to the people, the party litigant, those who go into the Federal courts in the district affected, warrants favorable action on our part.

The question of who are appointed, as long as they are good men, judicial-minded, is at times a matter of import, and it is important to have persons who are judicial-minded; but the basic question is whether or not an additional judge or a permanent judge is warranted in these districts, based upon the conditions that exist there, and having in mind the primary objective of service to the parties litigant, and particularly to try to speed up justice in bringing to the parties litigant early consideration and early action on the cases in which they are involved. This applies particularly to the person or the company that does not have the means to engage in long years of litigation, particularly when an important part of the delay is due to the fact that the dockets of the courts are so crowded that the courts are unable to hold trials as quickly as they would like to and as they ought to.

In any event I again want to say while I regret it I am pleased to note the open frankness of my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] in his expression that his opposition to these bills is based on the fact that he is a Republican.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 8 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, the letter written by Henry P. Chandler, who is the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts, has been referred to by the gentleman from New York. I want to quote from that letter a part which in my opinion will clinch this particular matter so far as settling the question of the necessity for this judge:

In a recent letter written to Chief Judge Hutcheson of the fifth circuit, the present district judge for the eastern district of Texas, Hon. Randolph Bryant, explained some of the factors in the business of the court as follows:

"However, the biggest intangible in the situation of this district at this time (and which is not disclosed by the statistics of business at all) is the fact that the Government has already begun condemnation proceedings looking to the acquisition of over 300,000 acres of land within this district, and embracing separate and diverse projects extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the westernmost county of the district. One project alone—that on Sulphur River in the Texarkana division—contemplates the acquisition of over 100,000 acres of land, and these matters are almost unending in their demands upon the time of the court in litigation involving disputes over the value of lands, hearings upon the distribution of proceeds resulting from the condemnation, and the like."

* * * * *

"Another important circumstance to be considered is the fact, of which I have kept the Administrative Office advised, that there are almost daily discoveries of oil and gas fields in this district, which, as you know, are always prolific of litigation.

"The dockets here (in Beaumont), where most of the business of the district originates, are fairly current, but this is due entirely to the adventitious fact that I have had the assistance of four or five outside judges here during the last year, in addition to my own valiant efforts. I am concluding my third week of court here now and expect to be here next week, and in spite of this there will remain 100 more civil cases upon the dockets here, and there will be twice or more that number by the time the fall term begins."

May I call to your attention the conclusion of Mr. Chandler based upon their investigation, and upon the facts that have been presented to them:

For the various reasons above-mentioned, it seems apparent that the business of the eastern district of Texas has outgrown the ability of one judge to handle it adequately, notwithstanding the excellent record of the present judge with the assistance from the outside which he has received in coping with the burden thus far and his own intense application.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. With pleasure.

Mr. TABER. It appears on page 2 that the committee recommends that this judgeship be temporary, therefore it does not appear conclusively that the need is of a permanent character which would indicate that the merits of this additional judgeship had not been too greatly impressed upon the committee.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Yes; Mr. Chairman.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have no personal interest in this at all. I do not recommend judges for appointment. This judge in this district everybody knows is not a well man. He is one of those good Republicans. I have known him and he has known me practically all our lives. He cannot handle the business of this district.

The reason why at times this thing looks slightly current is that four or five judges are pulled away from their own districts and brought in here to help clean up or partially clean up this one. Randolph Bryant is not a shirker; he is a fine man. His father was a great judge, and they have all been Republicans. But the litigants in this district are suffering; there is no question about that, and these other judges, busy as they are, cannot leave their districts every year, or twice a year, and go help Judge Bryant clean up this docket; they are all busy themselves. It is 400 miles from Sherman by Texarkana to Beaumont. This man has to sit in six places. Even if he did not have much of a docket, just going from one of these courts to another would certainly be a big physical task for even a man in good health.

Mr. GOSSETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I yield.

Mr. GOSSETT. The bill itself provides that this is a temporary judgeship.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GOSSETT. If it should appear later that the business of this area was so heavy that an additional judgeship was required, undoubtedly the recommendation would be made and our committee would have to consider the matter and act on the recommendation for permanency and establish the need. So we shall have an opportunity again to pass upon the question of permanency at a subsequent time in addition to the date we already have in the RECORD.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Let me finish this statement by Mr. Chandler, and this is very conclusive with me:

For the various reasons above-mentioned, it seems apparent that the business of the eastern district of Texas has outgrown the ability of one judge to handle it adequately, notwithstanding the excellent record of the present judge with the assistance from the outside which he has received in coping with the burden thus far and his own intense application. The additional judge for whom the bill would provide has become necessary on account of the increase in industry and business in the district. Accordingly I trust that the bill may be enacted.

With kind regards, I am,

Sincerely yours,

HENRY P. CHANDLER, Director.

Mr. Chairman, the table at the bottom of page 5 shows the additional work that was done by visiting judges: In 1947 3 judges gave attention to 13 cases in 11½ trial days; in 1948 5 judges came in and gave attention to 53 cases in 64½ trial days; in 1949 5 judges came in and gave attention to 33 cases in 43 trial days; and in the first half of the present calendar year 1950 2 judges have already heard 9 cases over a period of 12 days.

So it does appear that there is not only great necessity for a temporary judge, but undoubtedly great necessity for a permanent judge. As has been stated by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT], if the emergency arises and is serious enough undoubtedly there will be a demand made by the people in the district for a permanent judge.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I think no one will accuse me of being partisan in connection with the selection of Federal judges. It is regrettable that these selections are made on a partisan basis; that is all wrong. It is too bad that before a name can be sent to the Senate by the President for appointment to a Federal judgeship that that name must first have the approval of the Democratic national committeeman or the Republican national committeeman, depending upon which party is in power. The functions of political chairmen are not judicial; they are partisan entirely—to win elections and dispense patronage—and they would not be true to their trusts if they recommended somebody to be appointed judge who did not meet political specifications. A few years ago Congress established the judicial council composed of the presiding circuit judges of each circuit in the United States.

It was thought that this council would not recommend the appointment of additional judges unless they were absolutely necessary to the dispensing of justice in the districts affected. Well, council judges are human just like the rest of us. Practically all of them hold their positions because of political affiliation and invariably because of politically partisan activity and endorsements.

It has been clearly demonstrated, however, that Congress was too optimistic and this council, being fallible, has not solved our problem. I fear politics do enter into these matters. It is fine to talk about a bipartisan judiciary. It seems difficult to do anything about it, however. The present system is not nonpartisan and the political complexion of the Federal judiciary is bound to reflect to some extent the views of the political part appointing the judge.

Mr. Chairman, all virtue does not reside in either political party. For my part, I would rather have an outstanding lawyer whose integrity is above question and whose ability is recognized, appointed to a Federal judgeship even though he be a Democrat, than a renegade Republican selected by a Democratic national committeeman or even the State chairman of the Democratic Party. This is plain, blunt, ordinary sense. It is quality we want in the Federal judiciary rather than political expediency.

Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this bill. It has the approval of the judicial conference. The court calendar is in arrears to such an extent that the taxpaying constituents are entitled to have the benefit of the courts in administering justice to them. I have never talked with the Speaker, who happens to come from Texas—about this bill; however, there are two Members from Texas on the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentlemen from Texas [Mr. GOSSETT] and the gentleman from Texas, Judge WILSON, both are outstanding Democrats. They are fearless and patriotic representatives of the people. If there are any two men on the committee who are less partisan in doing the work of the committee, then I do not know who they are. Both of these gentlemen come from that part of Texas affected by this bill. Judge WILSON was an outstanding jurist in the district and, in addition, he is a splendid lawyer and I am sure would not advocate the appointment of another Federal judge unless he conscientiously believed such action was necessary in the interest of all of the people. When these Texas Members tell me of the existing conditions, and urge that this bill be enacted into law, I am convinced they speak with knowledge and sincerity, and I am inclined to follow their recommendations.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHENER. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I am glad the gentleman has made reference to what should be the nonpolitical character of the Federal judiciary. Without regard to any adverse position on this particular measure, I might point out that, at the time the matter of filling a vacancy on the Supreme Court was before the country, I took occasion to run down the figures on the political affiliation of recent appointments to the Federal judiciary. I discovered that of 10 appointments to the Supreme Court made since 1933, 9 were Democrats, 1 was a Republican; also, of the Federal judgeships that were filled in that time, of 189 so filled, 182 were Democrats, only 7 were Republicans.

I may say to the gentleman from Michigan that I have examined this particular bill and I am inclined to follow his leadership and vote for it; however, I think it is well that the attention of the Congress, the country, and the executive branch be called to the proposition that the judiciary should certainly—within some reasonable limits—include in its ranks people of different viewpoints or different philosophies as they may be found from time to time. Certainly they should all be people of judicial qualification—qualification based on law—but, beyond that, to pack the judiciary through the years with people of one political affiliation, which very often means people of one sort of inclination in respect to current problems as against any other, is not good for the judiciary and is not good for the country.

Mr. MICHENER. I agree with the gentleman's views, and to the end that that which he suggests might come about, if the present administration will not make a bipartisan judiciary possible, there is one place and one time in the United States when this question can be properly settled. That is at the election box on election day. In conclusion, if this judge is not needed, then this bill should not pass. I am persuaded it is needed and shall vote accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Of course, I will be delighted, and always am, to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. HALLECK. The gentleman almost overwhelms me, but not quite. I intended to add in the brief remarks I made, when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] so kindly yielded to me, that prior to the year 1933, to which I referred, the executives of the United States, the Presidents, Democrats, and Republicans, made what was very obviously a good faith effort to try to maintain in the Federal judiciary a reasonable degree of bipartisanship.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman for that contribution, and I would not, for any reason in the world, attempt to overwhelm him, and I am sure that I could not do so even if I would because of his ability to take care of himself.

I have said often before, and I now say, that the only fair policy in regard to the judicial appointment is the time-honored policy of a 50–50 balance, as nearly as can be, having regard to the variance in the life-spans of the different judges. I am mindful of my old instructor, Justice Horace Lurton, of Tennessee, who was appointed by a Republican President. I am mindful of the fact that Edwin Douglas White was appointed Chief Justice by the same distinguished Republican President. I believe that it ought to be polestar guiding every President, and of every Senator in confirming the judiciary, that the ability and integrity of the appointee should be the first consideration, but that there should be some balance maintained between the two Parties that alternately control, else we will have an unbalanced judiciary and not be able to preserve that ideal of the blind goddess who holds the scales of justice, and we cannot live up to the hope engraved on the front of the Supreme Court Building, "Equal justice under law."

Now, so much for that. That is nothing new; that has been with us ever since the founding fathers of this Republic declared the policy in the Constitutional Convention. The judicial branch of our Government will always be assured against a frozen ideology if that principle be observed.

I wish to make three other remarks:

"Justice delayed is justice denied." When a judge who is not up to par physically has a district 400 miles long, it is utterly absurd to ask the litigants, witnesses, and lawyers to come frequently to their court only to find the sign out, "There will be no court today. The judge is ill again." That kills respect for the courts. It denies justice by delay.

The other thing I wished to say was this, that this distinguished Republican who has so long and so faithfully, until his health failed, honored himself and the bench upon which he sat, is not being displaced for any other reason. A temporary judgeship is merely a catchphrase which we have employed in our committee. It does not mean temporary except that the position of the first judge to die shall not be filled unless it is necessary. As my good friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] knows better than almost anyone else, while these positions very nearly always are filled, it is only by making out a new case. Therefore, I think with assurance the word "temporary" does not mean temporary in the sense that this judgeship is not needed at this time.

Mr. BYRNE of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLOOD].

Mr. FLOOD. Mr. Chairman, on July 18 I introduced a resolution which was referred to the Committee on Rules. I see the distinguished chairman here. Upon his advice I communicated with the distinguished chairman of the House Committee for the District of Columbia, who assured me of his full cooperation. That resolution has to do with requesting an investigation of alleged war scare profiteering in the District of Columbia, where the price of bread has been increased 1 cent. I understand that today gas is going up half a cent. We do not know what the end might be. I hope the District Committee is empowered to act and proceeds to act immediately on this investigation.

I think you will be happy to know that I received 20 letters from Members of the House in today's mail approving of that and agreeing with the resolution and its purpose. I also received a number of telephone calls, also favorable, from Members of this House.

As a result of that, and conversations I have had with our colleagues on the floor and in the cloakrooms in the last couple of days, I have been prevailed upon by them to introduce a resolution, which I will introduce when I finish this talk, asking for the creation of a select committee of the House to conduct a full and complete investigation of any war-scare profiteering or panic buying or hoarding that may be or is going on any place in the United States or its possessions during the period of this emergency.

There is little more at this time that I feel it necessary to say about this resolution or its purpose or its potential or its intent. I am sure that my distinguished colleagues can do that far beyond my poor power to add.

You might be interested, however, in knowing that for the same purpose and along the same line I wrote the Attorney General of the United States this morning to this effect. I added, however, this: I advised him of what I had done with the District resolution and that I intended today to introduce this resolution. I further said to him that I felt under all these circumstances, if they are true—and I do not know whether or not they are any more than or as much as you do, but the press is full of it, the radio is full of it, and there are editorials and special stories about it, and the President of the United States in his address to the Nation last night commented upon and stressed this kind of thing—I asked the Attorney General to direct all the United States district attorneys to conduct a survey, or what you will, within their areas and jurisdictions and report to him what information they have as to the truth or falsity of these statements, and that being the case, to act as the Department best sees fit.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that under all of the circumstances, the best interest and the general welfare of the Nation will be served by the House acting immediately on the provisions of this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President is authorized to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one additional Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas.

With the following committee amendment:

On line 5, after the period add the following: "The first vacancy occurring in the office of district judge for the eastern district of Texas shall not be filled."

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder sometimes how a non-lawyer ever gets into this closed-shop argument with all these lawyers. I say to my nonlawyer friends—if we let some of our attorney members have their way, I think there would be a Federal judge to about every 10 square miles. We added 27 last year and there are 9 proposed this year. I imagine there are some difficulties and that some of these gentlemen are unable to get around. But I say to you in all sincerity, if the average Federal judge is willing to work half as hard as the average Member of Congress he would clean up his docket. If he was willing to work a few Saturday afternoons and Sundays and holidays in writing up some of his opinions, they would not be so far behind in their work. I am sure we do not want to get into any political argument on these bills as to whether the new appointees are going to be Democrats or Republicans. Of course if you are going to create these judgeships, I think the Democrats should have the edge. But seriously the way to get away from that, at least temporarily, is to put this off until next year. One of these vacancies is in my district. I know the judges are not suffering in northeastern Ohio. There has been a vacancy existing there for about a year. I do not think anybody is being hurt there. I would suggest that all these bills be defeated or else recommitted and when we get back next year we will have plenty of time. We are in an emergency and we are trying to avoid nonessential spending. Let us attend to our emergency needs and not go into anything new during this session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JACOBS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I feel there has been a fair case made out for the creation of this judgeship. In my judgment justice is of sufficient importance to the American people that its cost should not be counted too closely.

I do not know how to put a price tag on justice. As an illustration of what I mean, let me call your attention to something which is not a very good recommendation of this body. On the Speaker's desk there are two discharge petitions. One of them is Discharge Petition 28, which I filed several months ago. It would bring up a bill which would empower the Federal courts to force delinquent parents who take refuge in other States to support their children whom they have deserted and left behind. That is a problem with which the States have not been able to cope. It is an important problem and only the Federal courts can deal with it. Every lawyer and every judge who has had any experience with that problem knows that that is the truth. There are 54 names on that discharge petition. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another discharge petition on the Speaker's desk which was filed just a few days ago. That discharge petition is supported by some powerful organizations. It has 211 names on it. I do not want to be cynical about the thing, but I have a feeling that there is a good deal of merit to the legislation of which I am speaking—I will not discuss the merits of the other bill which the second discharge petition attempts to bring out. But I would just like for the Members of this House for a few minutes to consider the comparison. The deserted children—about a million of them in this country—of course are not organized, but the folks back of this other discharge petition are organized, and so it has four times as many signatures.

I am going to vote for this bill because I believe that justice is something on which you cannot put a price tag, but I will agree with the gentleman from Ohio to this extent, that the Federal judges are probably not too busy to render justice in those types of cases where only Federal courts can give relief. They might have to work a bit harder, but that will not hurt them. They have pretty good pay and security.

I know that this speech is vain and futile; I know that it is not going to do any good, that we are not going to get the bill out to help these deserted kids get justice, but at least I would like to shame those who sign for bills backed by organized groups and not for this bill. I should like for the Members of the House to think about it a little and to reflect as to whether or not their signature on discharge petition 28 would not be in support of the thesis upon which our jurisprudence is based, that the weak are entitled to justice the same as the strong; and I particularly would like for those folks who signed the other petition upon which there are now 211 names, to consider whether or not they would not like to sign the petition to give a remedy to about a million deserted children in this country.

The mark of failure of any government is when it becomes careless of the protection of its weakest citizens.

Your weakest citizens are the little ones, and they are entitled to their birthright—the right to support from their parents; not a shameful existence on charity nor on the pittance a poor mother might earn while she might be making their home comfortable for them.

Even the beasts of the field and jungle care for their young until the appointed time of emancipation.

Sadly, I say, there are parents who, in this respect are outranked in honor by the beasts of the field and jungle.

This bill would make them meet their moral obligations regardless of where they are. If we believe in justice for the unorganized "kids" we should sign petition 28.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRISON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 5137) to provide for the appointment of an additional Federal district judge for the eastern district of Texas, pursuant to House Resolution 706, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TWO ADDITIONAL DISTRICT JUDGES FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 702 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6454) to authorize the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois. That after general debate which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6454) authorizing the appointment of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois.

Both the Senators from Illinois have joined in introducing a like bill in the Senate, which has been reported favorably without amendment to the Senate by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

It should be noted, Mr. Speaker, that the Administrative Office of the United States Court, as well as the Department of Justice, the Bureau of the Budget and all of the United States district court judges for the northern district of Illinois, have joined in unanimously approving this legislation. All have urged that this bill be enacted because of the dire need for additional judges in this area. The situation has become acute. The latest figures as given me by Roy H. Johnson, clerk of the United States Court for the Northern District of Illinois, as of June 30, 1950, indicate that 3,349 civil cases are now pending in this court; and 349 criminal cases are pending. The estimate of the backlog on civil cases in 2 years, and the criminal docket is 8 months behind.

In the report of the Attorney General on this particular bill, which is contained in House Report 2393, he states—and I quote:

It is to be noted that the court for the northern district of Illinois adjudicated and terminated more cases in the fiscal year 1949 than were disposed of in either of the other districts (California and Pennsylvania). Yet, instead of being able to reduce the backlog, it has increased from 349 cases per judge in 1947 to 429 cases in 1949. It is also noted that * * * many cases may not be disposed of for 2 years because of lack of judicial power.

Notwithstanding the evidence presented showing the need for additional judges, the Committee on the Judiciary amended this bill to provide for two additional judgeships with the condition that when a vacancy occurred in those judgeships, such vacancy will not be filled. As it is, only yesterday, one of the judges, Judge Elwyn R. Shaw, passed away, creating still more of a work load for the other judges.

I am inserting herein, at this point in the RECORD, a letter which I received jointly from all of the honorable judges of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois, setting forth in detail the need for this legislation and the reasons for the delay in meting out justice. "Justice delayed is justice denied." The figures that I have given previously are as of June 30, 1950, and are not reflected in the afore-mentioned letter.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT,
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF ILLINOIS,
Chicago, October 13, 1949.

HON. ADOLPH J. SABATH,
House of Representatives,
House Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN SABATH: At a meeting of the judges of this court, held early last May, we considered the accumulation of cases in our court, the state of our calendars, and, particularly, the large number of cases pending which are likely to take many weeks to try, and unanimously resolved to request help. Our request for help came before the annual seventh circuit conference on June 16, 1949, and the conference went on record as approving our request and recommended the creation of two additional judgeships for this district. The Honorable J. Earl Major, chief judge of the seventh circuit, presented our request to the September 1949, session of the Judicial Conference of the United States and, as we are informed by Chief Judge Major, that conference approved our request for the creation of two additional judgeships for this district. The purpose of this letter is to call to your attention the foregoing facts and certain statistics hereinafter referred to, which we feel sure make the need for two additional judgeships in this district imperative.

Since the coming into the court, in 1933, of Judges Holly and Sullivan, the judges of this court have handled the business of the court without substantial assistance from the outside, and we think we may be permitted to say that, for a metropolitan community of the size of ours, this is a somewhat extraordinary record.

The statistics set forth on the attached sheet indicate, however, that, since July 1, 1944, we have been getting behind in the trial of our civil cases. You will observe that on July 1, 1944, there were 1,105 civil cases pending in the District. On July 1, 1949, there were 2,354 civil cases pending—an increase of 1,249 cases. During the same time, the number of criminal cases pending in our court has increased by only 2—this, for the reason that the Rules of Criminal Procedure require that we give preference to criminal cases and we follow the rules to the best of our ability, with the result that criminal cases have not piled up ahead of us.

During the same time, July 1, 1944, to July 1, 1949, the pending bankruptcy cases increases from 1,013 to 1,245. The low point in the pendency of bankruptcy cases was apparently July 1, 1946, when there were only 526 cases pending. On July 1, 1949, there were more than twice that number pending. Bankruptcy cases are increasing in number rapidly, but during the period under discussion bankruptcy cases have taken but little time, relatively, of the judges of our court. There was a time, however, during the middle 1930's, when bankruptcy cases took all of the time of certain judges of our court and very nearly all of the time of the remainder of the judges.

For present purposes, however, we need consider only the increase in the number of pending civil cases. As has been pointed out, and as the statistics set forth on the attached sheet show, there were 2,354 civil cases pending in our court on July 1, 1949. That was more cases than all of us disposed of in any one of the years from July 1, 1943, to July 1, 1949, inclusive. During the year ending June 30, 1946, we disposed of 2,352 civil cases, but that was an extraordinary year, and many of the cases disposed of that year were not the ordinary civil case. The average number of civil cases disposed of annually during the period beginning July 1, 1943, and ending July 1, 1949, was 1,853. Accordingly, there were pending on July 1, 1949, almost one and one-third times as many civil cases as all of us could dispose of in a year. Furthermore, the increase in the number of civil cases pending during the period from July 1, 1944, to July 1, 1949, of 1,249 cases is more than two-thirds of an average year's work for all of us.

We are all clearly of the opinion that the interest of society and of the court will be well served by an increase presently in the number of judges in our district by two. We respectfully request that you set in motion the machinery necessary for the creation of the two additional judgeships.

With kindest regards, we are

Sincerely yours,

J. BARNES,
P. SULLIVAN,
M. I. IGOE,
W. J. CAMPBELL,
WALTER J. LABUY,
ELWYN R. SHAW,
Judges, United States District Court,
Northern District of Illinois.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in view of these facts, I feel that justice demands that favorable action be given to the consideration of this legislation.

In view of the lateness of the hour, I shall not delay the House and I hope that the rule will be adopted unanimously.

For the House's information, I have agreed not to call up the bill today, and in view of the fact that I have been called out of the city and will not be here on Monday, I most respectfully ask, that in my absence, you will give this bill the same unanimous vote that I know you will give to the rule.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN].

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I am very much in favor of the passage of H. R. 6454, for the creation of two additional district judges for the northern district of Illinois.

The northern district of Illinois includes the metropolitan area of the city of Chicago, an ever-growing urban and suburban community, bringing with it the problems attendant upon concentrated, thickly populated city life. These problems have been reflected in the number of cases filed in the courts, and the six very able and distinguished judges of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois have worked long and diligently to clear their dockets. However, the situation has grown worse rather than better with the passage of time, and in spite of their best efforts the number of cases awaiting disposition is greater than it was a year ago.

I first became aware of the situation on September 27, 1949, when the growing district court docket was called to my attention, and I thereupon filed H. R. 6255, to authorize the appointment of two additional district judges. Civil cases have increased, criminal cases have increased, and apparently the United States District Court for the Northern District of Illinois was to become the forum in which the Government proposed to try more than 40 of its antitrust suits, the shortest of which would take not less than 3 months, and the longest, it was anticipated, would take more than 2 years. It is difficult to foresee how speedy and full justice can be given in the face of such a condition, and judges are being constantly harassed by the thought that no matter how hard they work to dispose of their matters two other cases will be filed to take the place of those disposed of.

Mr. Speaker, this is a very vital bill, not only to sustain the true administration of justice guaranteed under our Constitution to the people residing within the northern district of Illinois, but as well for the judges themselves who cannot sustain the pace of the work necessitated by the condition of their dockets today. I urge its speedy enactment.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I know of no opposition to this resolution

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

CALL OF BILLS ON THE CONSENT AND PRIVATE CALENDARS ON THURSDAY NEXT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order on Thursday next to call bills on the Consent and Private Calendars.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand it, that does not include the matter of any suspensions?

Mr. McCORMACK. There will be no suspensions. That is understood.

Mr. HALLECK. Just the call of bills on the two calendars?

Mr. McCORMACK. The minority leadership has very kindly consented to this call of the calendars, which is outside of the regular day and it will be confined to bills on the Consent Calendar and the Private Calendar.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Did the gentleman say there would be no suspensions or did not know of any?

Mr. McCORMACK. There will not be any suspensions.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM FOR NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the majority leader as to the program for next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. On Monday next there will be continuation of consideration of the judgeship bills, with the so-called Illinois bill, the rule on which has just been adopted, the first order of business. I announced yesterday that those bills might set aside as other legislation came up for consideration, but they will be called in the order I stated yesterday when opportunity presents itself during the next week, 10 days or 2 weeks. Monday will be confined to consideration of these judgeship bills and we will dispose of as many of them as possible on that day.

On Tuesday there will be H. R. 9177, extension of enlistments. That is expected to be reported out of the Committee on Armed Services tomorrow, and, if so, it will be brought up on Tuesday.

Then there is H. R. 9178, personnel ceilings in the armed services. That is in the same situation as the previous bill. The probabilities are that those bills will not take very long under the adroit leadership of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. VINSON] and the adroit leadership of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Following that there is H. R. 6277, Russian Railway Service Corps, and H. R. 8569, continuing Texas City tin smelter.

If there should result any roll calls on Tuesday I shall ask unanimous consent that they go over until the next day due to the fact that on Tuesday next there are primaries in several States. We have done this in the case of every State to date where there has been a primary.

Of course, if that program is not entirely disposed of on Tuesday it will go over until the next day.

On Wednesday there will be House Resolution 687, which relates to stationery allowance for Members. With all due respect to any opposition to this, I personally am strong for it. I feel we are entitled to it because all Members are buying stationery out of their own pockets. I know the people of my district do not expect me to do that.

Then there is S. 3520, the production of abaca, and H. R. 9038, determining the forms of budget.

As I stated, on Thursday there will be the call of bills on the Consent and Private Calendars, following which we will take up for consideration the bill H. R. 9109, cotton-acreage allotments and marketing quotas.

Mr. HALLECK. Has a rule been reported on the last bill?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; a rule has been reported today. If by any chance the Committee on Banking and Currency should report a bill following the recommendations of the President in his message of yesterday, such bill will be given priority.

Mr. HALLECK. I have had some inquiry regarding a bill out of the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee having to do with transportation.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is the forwarders' bill?

Mr. HALLECK. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. That is not on the program for next week.

Mr. SABATH. But a rule is outstanding.

Mr. McCORMACK. There is a rule outstanding. We have a very busy program without that.

If there is any further program, it will be announced later, particularly with reference to any bills involving the President's recommendations, and, of course, conference reports will be brought up at any time.

Mr. HALLECK. I take it the majority leader can assure us that the special legislation which might be necessary for action, in view of the President's recent message, will come along as rapidly as possible.

Mr. McCORMACK. As soon as it is reported out of committee, as soon as a rule can be obtained, it is my intention to bring it up. That is the only answer I can give. I understand that both the Senate and House Committees on Banking and Currency are going to start hearings on Monday. That is on information and belief. Of course, I cannot state how long those hearings will take. That rests within the jurisdiction of the committees. But all I can say is that as soon as a bill is reported out, it is my intention to bring it up just as quickly as I can.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course, the gentleman is in the position that many of us are in, that we are being asked constantly as to any adjournment or recess plans. However, I take it that that is a matter about which there can be no definite advice at this time.

Mr. McCORMACK. At this time it is difficult to state. My remarks are not so much directed to the leadership of this body, but I might say that, so far as I am concerned, and I am sure I express the views of the Speaker, I am very hopeful that the leadership of the other body will recognize that when we get through with our program, and get it through as quickly as possible, there is no necessity for Congress to be in session, and that some adjournment, sine die, as I hope, or some other form of adjournment or long recess might be made. I am hopeful that that might take place within the next 3 or 4 weeks. But that is clearly in the realm of probable speculation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I ask the gentleman to yield just to inquire of the majority leader the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], whether he is of the opinion that the bills that have been mentioned are the only projected measures that this Congress will be asked to pass upon in the foreseeable future.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to state now. As I am talking now, that is all I can say, but if I have any further information, I shall acquaint the House with it just as quickly as possible.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I have asked that question because I read, or thought I read, in the President's words, or in between the lines, the indication that he expected to come back to Congress and ask for further legislation on different matters a little later on. In other words, there was mention made of taxes, there was mention of possible controls, perhaps the freezing of wages, and many other actions, that he, at least, suggested in his words and in his message, both to the Congress and to the people over the radio and television, he might desire, and might request of the Congress in the foreseeable future, and I just wondered whether the gentleman had any information about that.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have no knowledge now, but as soon as I have any knowledge I shall acquaint the House with it, because it is only right that all Members should be acquainted as fully as possible as to what the situation is and what to expect.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL JUDGES FOR ILLINOIS

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, we have adopted the rule on the bill to provide two additional judges for the northern district of Illinois. The bill will be taken up on Monday. Unfortunately, I have been called out of the city and will not be here on Monday, as I said before. Of course, if it were possible, I would ask unanimous consent that it be considered and passed now, but I do not want to delay the House unnecessarily at this late hour.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. MASON asked and was given permission to address the House for 15 minutes on Monday next, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered.

COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Judiciary may have until midnight tonight to file a report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

CLASSIFYING COMMUNISTS AS ENEMIES

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. GWINN. Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I introduced a resolution, as follows:

Whereas world communism has avowed its intention to overthrow the Government of the United States:

Resolved, That the Communist International, the Comintern, the Cominform, and all their sections, branches, affiliates, organizations, subsidiaries, and agents are hereby declared to be the enemies of the United States, within the meaning of article III, section 3, of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, with freedom facing its severest test in history, it is time to call a halt and declare the Reds traitors to our form of government and subject to the penalties relating to treason.

Our men are dying on the Korean front in the current tragic phase of this eternal conflict between free men and slavery. We must now declare what we know and define more clearly our enemies and foes within as well as those without our borders.

This resolution extends the coverage of the word "enemy" as used in our Constitution. Instead of limiting the use of the word "enemy" to describe a particular nation, it includes organizations or individuals, even those within our own borders whose purpose is to overthrow our Government.

There are many confused and deluded Americans who are deceived or careless in their association. This resolution constitutes notice to all our citizens to risk identification with such enemies and to engage in disloyal action at their peril.

This resolution gives our authorities power to deal immediately with such elements as staged the Peekskill military demonstration in my district. It makes such recent efforts as those to liquidate Judge Medina in New York during their trial impossible. It exposes them to trial as traitors, which they are.

This resolution does not define as enemies any nations or any loyal nationals now residing in the United States such as Poles, Chinese, Yugoslavs, Russians, or any others. It does declare those to be traitors who by overt act aid or comfort those who have avowed their intention to overthrow our Government by force.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] is recognized for 60 minutes.

HON. J. HARDIN PETERSON

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I have requested this time in order that I might speak of one of the great records of service of its entire history, and about one of the most beloved Members who has served in this body. I want to talk about J. HARDIN PETERSON, Member of Congress from Florida, a man who is leaving the Halls of Congress at the close of this session after 18 years of distinguished and valuable service.

I think all of us recognize the fact that Pete's service has been public service at its best. The measure of his ability, the measure of his work are the things which will live on in our memories and in the records of this institution for many, many years. He is one of those people who possesses the simple, kindly, human qualities that all of us admire in men of any walk of life, and particularly admire, and often find it hard to discover in men whose careers have been devoted to public life.

I do not think any of us have ever called upon Pete for help when we did not get it. I know there have been innumerable occasions when he out of the goodness of his heart has given many of us a lift along the way in carrying on the heavy responsibilities of this work. Particularly has that been true of the younger Members as they have come in to the House. Ten years ago when I first came to Congress, the knowledge that I could lean upon Pete for help in finding my way and in learning my job, was one of the most comforting and reassuring things that happened to me.

Leadership is measured in many ways, and the leadership of Congressman PETERSON has been revealed time and again in the conduct of the affairs of the Nation during his period of service. The fine record of his committee is only one example of his influence. Perhaps it has passed more bills than any other in the history of the Congress. But above and beyond the fact that he has sponsored and passed many bills lies the fact that they were good bills. Many of them were little bills, but each of them went deep into the lives and habits of good, sincere, honest people somewhere in this great land, and they have helped those people.

I want to name one of the reasons, and a very important reason, for the leadership which Pete has shown. Always her influence has been shown in the uprightness, the moral stature of his work. Always she has been close to him when she has been needed to comfort, to cheer, and to inspire him. Today she sits in the Gallery, and I know that pride fills her heart for the things are said of his work, but we know that those things apply equally to her. I speak of his very fine and lovable wife, Christine. She has done much, indeed, to make him the great and valuable force that we know him to be.

Pete is leaving Congress voluntarily. He is leaving because he is tired and he wants to go home, to the comfort and pleasure of private life with his own family. He has earned the rest for his job has been more than well done. But we shall miss him greatly. I shall miss him as a friend and counselor. My State and my Nation shall miss him for his great contribution, his sterling character, his fine statesmanship.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am indeed glad to have an opportunity to pay a short tribute to a gentleman of the type of J. HARDIN PETERSON, of Florida. When I first came here, through the kindness and courtesy and hospitality of Mr. PETERSON I had the pleasure of meeting a number of you Members and particularly the Speaker of the House.

You know, for a country boy who had not gotten around, to get up here and shake hands with the Speaker was a mighty good feeling. I had heard so much about the Speaker and what an outstanding man he is. I felt that I was shaking hands with greatness when I shook hands with SAM RAYBURN.

Thomas Jefferson said there were certain qualifications that a public servant should have; first, he should be honest, second, he should be qualified, third, he should be faithful. You can add to those hard work. Mr friend, J. HARDIN PETERSON, has each one of those qualities. He is what I call a working Congressman. Pete has a fine conception of what a public servant is. He believes that public office is a public trust and his service, while he has been here, has demonstrated that.

I might say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the elements of progressivism and liberalism and conservatism are so mixed in J. HARDIN PETERSON that nature might well stand up and say to all the world, "This is a real American."

I regret to see such men as Mr. PETERSON, SAM HOBBS, JAY LEFEVRE, and BOB RICH, and such men as BILL WHITTINGTON and STEVE PACE and Mr. WADSWORTH and a number of others leaving the Halls of Congress in these critical times. They are real leaders who are leaving the service of the people at a time that we can ill afford to have them leave. These are critical and troubled times in the history of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I wish for J. HARDIN PETERSON Godspeed. May he have the Lord's blessing in his future career.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield.

Mr. POULSON. Mr. Speaker, we all regret that J. HARDIN PETERSON, affectionately known as Pete, is retiring from the Congress. We know it will not only be a loss to the State of Florida, but indeed a loss to the entire United States. I believe I can say as a member of his committee of which he is chairman, and I being a member of the opposition party, that there never has been nor will there ever be a better chairman than Pete. Pete not only has a knowledge of the problems which come before the committee, but he has that other great requisite, the ability to act as chairman and be fair to representatives of all groups, whether they be of his party or not. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I say that we in Congress are really losing a colleague of whom we can be justly proud and one whom we all affectionately love.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I wish very much to associate myself with the complimentary things being said about our senior colleague from the State of Florida, J. HARDIN PETERSON. The other evening I was privileged, at a Florida alumni party in honor of J. HARDIN PETERSON, to sit beside Mrs. Holland, the wife of the junior Senator from the State of Florida. She said that she and Pete had grown up together and that they had gone to school together. The first time she met Pete was when she entered the school and the young boys and girls came to her and pointed out this fellow and said of him, "He makes 100 percent in all of his studies—and he even makes 100 percent in deportment." So far as I am concerned Pete has been 100 percent from that day to this.

He has been 100 percent in his devotion to his duty, 100 percent in his loyalty to his friends, and 100 percent cooperative with his colleagues. I do not know of anyone who has been nicer to other people nor more helpful to them and to me than the senior Member of our Florida delegation, J. HARDIN PETERSON. Some of the many things that have been accomplished in the last 4 years, even in my district, he has been responsible for. I am frank to say that the establishment of the Everglades National Park, for which I got most of the credit, actually the greater portion of that credit is due to the hard work and generous attitude of J. HARDIN PETERSON, who as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, guided that legislation through the House.

We here are going to miss him. The Nation is going to miss him. Words cannot properly express the sadness his retirement brings. The one gratifying thing about his retirement is that it will make it possible for him to associate himself again with those good people of the State whom he loves and wants to be with. He looks forward to a wonderful and closer association with a really fine young man, J. Hardin Peterson, Jr., a young man for whom I feel a great affection and to whom I owe a debt of gratitude for campaigning for me recently. He is a fine man, and that young man has the stamp of greatness and goodness on him that his father and mother have put there. We hope their association may continue for many long years to come—we know it will be a happy one—but let us never forget that J. HARDIN PETERSON's retirement is a great loss to the United States Congress, to the State of Florida, and to our Nation.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I want to join with the friends of J. HARDIN PETERSON in paying a word of tribute. I have been a member of the Committee on Public Lands for 8 years, during which time we have had several chairmen, but none more anxious to please, none more willing to accommodate than J. HARDIN PETERSON; in fact, he leaned over backwards, sometimes to his own detriment, in order to accommodate some little thing, something going on in the committee.

J. HARDIN PETERSON! I do not know what the "J" stands for; I have always called him "Pete" and I hope when he leaves the House of Representatives and I meet him down in Florida—I hope to go down there and fish with him—he has invited me as he has almost everyone—that I will be calling him "Pete" at that time. The Public Lands Committee has already lost a number of very able men; we lost a valuable man in the death of William Lemke; FRANK BARRETT is running for Governor of the State of Wyoming, and the friend in front of me is not running again. JOHN SANBORN is aspiring to be Senator from his State, and there may be others on the other side who will not be back. That has been a good committee; it has worked hard under the leadership of Pete as we affectionately know him.

Mr. PETERSON is a great American; and, best of all, he is a Christian American. I know that. I think he must have found, some place along the road of life, that the finest flower that grows is that of fellowship and friendship with his fellow man. There is a little poem, the words of which, if I remember right, run something like this. I think he may not know it but he exemplifies the thoughts expressed in these few words:

The greatest business in the world is that of making friends,
And no investment on the street pays higher dividends,
For life is more than stocks and bonds and love than great percent
And he who gives in friendship's name shall reap what he has spent.
Yes; life is a great investment, and no one lives in vain.
He guards a hundred friendships as a miser guards his gain;
So let's give the world a welcome whate'er it may bring forth,
And may no mortgages e'er foreclose this partnership of friends.

Pete, I'll be seeing you in Florida.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentlewoman from Utah [Mrs. BOSONE].

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Speaker, first I should like to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. ASPINALL] may extend his encomium of Mr. PETERSON at this point in the RECORD, Mr. ASPINALL being unable to be here; and also that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] may likewise extend his remarks. He regrets his inability to be present today.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASPINALL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to join with my colleagues of the House and, especially with those of the Committee on Public Lands, to voice my appreciation of the challenging ability and leadership, fine character, thoughtfulness for his associates, pleasing personality, and ever-present apparently unlimited enthusiasm of our distinguished chairman, our colleague from Florida, the Honorable J. HARDIN PETERSON.

I have worked with many people, both in the capacity of leader and follower. Never have I come to appreciate a fellow worker and a leader more than I have come to esteem the high worth of my chairman, Mr. PETERSON. I have found him to be at all times most considerate with those with whom he works and has the responsibility of being their leader. His inherent humility almost covers up a recognized atttribute of stern realization to the necessary activities of the day. The unbounded energy which he expends has been carried over into the activities of his colleagues and has permitted—without any known evidence of the expending of too much energy—the completion of a program of work accomplished, that can only be appraised upon a close study of the results of our committee labors performed during the last 2 years. I doubt very much that any committee has ever worked harder and expended more labor with less inclination to engage in partisan or personal criticism than has this committee of ours under the talented leadership of its present chairman, Mr. PETERSON.

His innate consideration to the individual members of his committee and his loyalty to each one of them has been most pleasing to me. His intrinsic sense of fairness in conducting debate in the committee and in the taking of testimony, together with his ability of exercising the utmost personal impartiality in securing the decisions of the committee, will leave with all of us a precedent well worth following throughout the years to come. No chairman could possibly exert a more desired or a more effective degree of comradeship, fairness, and understanding within his committee.

Personally, I have come to know and love this gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON] as I would a brother. He possesses the fine attributes of friendship and character that causes one to enjoy his presence and fellowship, and to desire his company in times of his absence.

Mr. Speaker, this past 2 years have been a very enjoyable experience to me. I have appreciated making many new relationships and, in many instances close friendships, with all of you, but I say in all sincerity that my appreciation for the gentleman being honored at this time is second to none in this entire House of Representatives.

Mr. O'NEILL. Mr. Speaker, I am unhappy that it is my obligation to make the following remarks about my esteemed colleague, Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON. I am unhappy because he is a man my age, still a young man, and I can see no reason for him to leave this legislative body because of age or any other reason. Considering his kind of experience, I am to lose a colleague whose activities have been invaluable to me since the day of our first meeting.

The Congress will lose an able and honorable Representative and, although it is said that everyone is replaceable, it is difficult to replace a person with all the good characteristics of this man. His successor will find similar achievement very hard to acquire.

I have been in legislative work 11 terms, in contrast to Mr. PETERSON's 9 terms and, in all of that time, I have not found a man more pleasant to work with and to be guided by during the serious hours of our work; nor have I ever found a more affable gentleman in the few social hours that our work allowed us.

I mentioned above that I was unhappy and I believe I have explained why. I now herein extend to Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON my sincere best wishes for his furture interests whatever and wherever they might be. I reiterate my sincere thanks to him for the very many kindnesses shown me.

Mrs. BOSONE. Mr. Speaker, I believe we are losing one of the finest Members of this House when we lose J. HARDIN PETERSON. I cannot blame him for wishing to retire, and I certainly do not blame his wife, Mrs. J. Hardin Peterson, for wanting a home, a permanent home, after 18 years of service in the National Capitol.

The Members of Congress who are conscientious know that there is absolutely no glamor in this job; it is plain slavery. I believe one of the slaves of the public and of the United States and of this House and of the Committee on Public Lands is J. HARDIN PETERSON. Selfishly, certainly, as a member of that committee and as a Member of this House, and as a colleague, I hate to see him retire; but I think he has earned his retirement.

He is still plenty young to engage in the practice of law with his son. He and his wife are still young enough to enjoy the comforts and the security of a beautiful home in Lakeland, Fla.

Mr. Speaker, a good public servant is rare. A good public servant is not only intelligent, he is able, he is honest, and he is courageous. I wish we had more J. HARDIN PETERSONS in the Congress.

J. HARDIN PETERSON has been a very able chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. I know of no one who knows the rules any better than he does as indicated by the way he has executed them in his committee. With great dispatch we have covered very important bills in that committee. He is very fast in his work, he is exceedingly fair and courteous to both Republicans and Democrats alike. I have not been able to observe where he has granted favors to one side as against the other.

Mr. PETERSON is not a sectionalist. We westerners almost believe that he belongs to Utah, Idaho, Colorado, and any of the 17 Western States; yet he is a resident of Lakeland, Fla., a State in the South. If Florida would like to give him up, certainly we in Utah or any member of the Western States would be tickled to death to have him. We think he is just about the best westerner in this Congress.

J. HARDIN PETERSON has been big enough and great enough to know the problems of every section of the United States. That, I think, makes him a man of national stature. We westerners regret that we have to lose him. He is a great American and it is my prayer that he and Mrs. Peterson and his family may begin to enjoy life as they left it 18 years ago to give this magnificent service to the Congress of the United States.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. PHILLIPS of California. Mr. Speaker, I should like to agree with all the good things that have been said about J. HARDIN PETERSON, our good friend from Florida. There could not be too many good thing said about him. We have had many things in common, as the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] knows. All of us have been recipients of favors, of friendships, from the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON], while he has been a Member of this body.

I feel that no Member of this House is going to leave at the end of this year who will be more greatly missed, and no Member will leave with greater affection in the hearts of those Members who stay in the Congress than J. HARDIN PETERSON.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, no one in this body will regret the leaving of J. HARDIN PETERSON more than I regret it. This is a splendid opportunity for us to express our feelings for him while he is present to hear. I concur in the good things said about him and that will be said about him. But before I get too serious I want to take advantage of this public opportunity to make to him due apology and explanations and to ask his forgiveness. I have had J. HARDIN PETERSON out my way several times and I have played a few tricks on him. I hope he will forgive, because I expect an invitation to come down to Florida some time and I fear he might repeat some of those tricks on me if I go down there.

I must admit, too, that when we have been alone privately telling stories, I have occasionally doubted him when he told me about wrestling years ago in the waters of Florida with those 'gators as a boy. At first I could not believe that story, but when I observed how expertly and successfully he wrestled with legal and legislative problems in the Public Lands Committee, I am inclined now to believe him. As he has handled these difficult, complicated matters in committee, he undoubtedly must have been able to handle the 'gators as a boy.

Laying aside levity and speaking seriously, may I say that we are going to miss "Mr. Pete." May I confess again that as a Scotchman I have occasionally sought and used his services as a lawyer without benefit of his receiving a retainer fee. He has a splendid legal training, coupled with judicial temperament, which he freely used for his colleagues. I hope it will be useful in other walks of life as well as it has been for us Members of Congress.

He told me that he had bought a home and he said, "I bought a home on the highest hill in Florida and Mrs. Peterson and I are anxious to go back and live there." I thought I understood, but I had visions of a mountain retreat. So when I asked him about the altitude, I think he said it was about 38 feet above sea level. I want to say now to my good chairman and my splendid friend that I will invite him to come out west to gather petrified wood or any other kind of rock if he will only invite me to go Alpine climbing with him in Florida.

After 18 years of wonderful service he and his good wife have undoubtedly earned the right to retirement and rest while they are yet young. We shall expect his counsel to prevail, and his experience and helpfulness to count in other fields after he has left Congress. So I say to him, as some of the Indians of the West would say, to whom he has been most gracious and kind, "Mr. Pete, we shall love you until the sands of the desert grow cold."

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEFEVRE].

Mr. LEFEVRE. Mr. Speaker, it was back in the Eightieth Congress that my old Committee on Insular Affairs was merged into what is known today as the Committee on Public Lands.

Early in the Eighty-first Congress, Congressman JAMES HARDIN PETERSON, of Florida, was named chairman. He has been a devoted chairman and has given unstintingly of his time and knowledge.

It has been one of my most enjoyable and informative duties to have served on a committee under the direction of a personage such as Congressman PETERSON, who always knew the full content of the subject before the committee. In his 18 years in public office he has served not only the first district of the State of Florida, but the entire State, and the Nation as a whole. His jovial and sincere personality has won him friends from every State in the Union. His biography in the Congressional Directory will show the extent of his outside activities and interests. However, I note the absence of one treasured hobby. I am sure you all know what I am leading up to. I understand that Mrs. Peterson has stated that they will have to build a small museum to house Pete's collection of rare stones, shells, war trophies, and coral. I recall a trip made to the South Pacific last fall when my good friend, the late William Lemke, collected coral from Samoa and Truk to add to the Peterson collection.

I am sorry that Congressman PETERSON has seen fit to announce his retirement from the Congress and I know that his presence will be greatly missed and his counsel often referred to.

My best wishes go to Congressman PETERSON on his return to his native State.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Speaker, as a freshman Congressman, I have had many opportunities to call on "Mr. Pete," as we affectionately call him, for help and assistance. There is no one who can give greater and more effective assistance than can Mr. Pete. He certainly has wonderfully helped me many times since I have been here.

Shortly after I came here I had a little accident; I had to go to the hospital. Congressman PETERSON kept in more than daily contact with me while I was there so that I could record my position on each vote in Congress while I was in the hospital. When I came out of the hospital, Mr. Pete observed that he though I was working a little too hard, so he and Mrs. Pete used to take me out driving Sunday afternoons, and many times we used to ride through some of these great parks that Mr. Pete was very much interested in establishing. There are many parts of this country where you will find spots of green, especially in our national parks, which have come about through his efforts, because he has given so much of his time to the development of beauty in this country. To me these spots of green will be a living memorial to his life of public service.

Mr. Pete has a keen intellect and a warm and understanding heart. Both played their part in the laws we have today, not only in the field of conservation, but in many, many other things for the betterment of mankind and the land in which we live.

When I think about Mr. Pete, I cannot help thinking about all the stories about him. I would like to mention one, which he once told me and which illustrates not only his good humor, but also his innate humility. Somebody mentioned today about his habit of picking up a rock here and there and shinnying up a tree to see if he could get something out of the ledge to put in his collection. Some time ago, so Mr. Pete told me, there was a Florida judge who had a man up for being drunk. The judge asked the prosecutor if he knew what the evidence was. The judge listened very attentively. The prosecutor replied about the alleged drunk, that the prisoner had his hair all ruffled up, and he had all kinds of stuff sticking out of his pockets and was covered with clay and was filled with sand spurs. The judge turned around and said, "That sounds like you are talking about Congressman PETERSON."

Mr. Pete has certainly shown on all occasions that he is above the little things in life. If there is anything outstanding in Mr. Pete's life—and there is plenty—it is his friendship, and next to that his humility. I think that you can measure a man by his humility. I think that Mr. Pete is great in that respect among other noble attributes.

Before coming to Congress, Congressman PETERSON had already made an outstanding name for himself as an able lawyer, an effective prosecutor, and a civic leader. He is a veteran of World War I; an alumnus of the University of Florida, having made an enviable record there in his studies and extracurricular activities; and, in addition, holds an honorary degree from another great educational institution. All of his life has been characterized by well-earned success.

His natural ability is but a part of his greatness, for no one has a better record than he for persistent hard work, thoroughness, initiative and loyalty to American traditions. In the House all instinctively rely upon his unfailing, complete honesty, his good judgment and his good will toward everyone. These qualities and all the others which represent the best in manhood and which we find so richly in his life give us confidence in his work. His natural leadership and good will have furnished the foundation stones for many of the important pieces of legislation which have become the law of the land.

I can think of lots of stories about him and I am going to tell you just one more, because I think it tells of the warmth of this man's life. It is not an important story and there is no moral to it. As I think of Pete I think of these little stories about him, because they are so characteristic of him, and indicate how he has shared his chuckles with others.

In the district I represent there is a great deal of rural country, real "country country," as they say. There is one small town out there that Mr. Pete grew up in. I will not mention it because that city now claims it is a little larger than the Bureau of the Census says it is, so I will not refer to its smallness, but it was small when he lived there. Mr. Pete claims he is the only buzzard-pecked Member of Congress. I want to tell you about that.

It seems back there when he was just about 9 or 10 years old he was the biggest boy in the little gang in this little town. They had a little menagerie, they had a little toad, a little grass snake, and a few other things like that. They heard of something that was real good that they were going to get. That was a buzzard with a broken wing that was in a palmetto patch in the hummock land. So they all went down there. Mr. Pete, being the biggest, about 10 years of age, was the one assigned to go in and get the buzzard to put it in the menagerie. He went in. He always had heard that if a buzzard pecked you it would give you cancer. But he went in there and tried to approach the buzzard, in the adroit way in which he has handled some of the legislation on the floor of the House in these later years. He approached the buzzard, thinking he had it just right, but somehow or other the buzzard gave him a good peck. The boys got mighty scared. They ran down the middle of the street looking for a doctor. They used to have a doctor in that town in the old days. Everybody was crying, the little kids wailing, and people came out and everybody was saying, "What's the trouble?" They cried, "The buzzard pecked him, the buzzard pecked him, the buzzard pecked him."

That is just a little story that Mr. Pete tells on himself but it illustrates the warmth and humility of this man, something that means a lot to us.

I want to say before I conclude that any tribute to Mr. Pete would be incomplete if it did not refer to Mrs. Pete. She is about the sweetest person, next to my own mother—I am an old bachelor, so I can say that—that I ever met. She is a great woman, and has great warmth in her heart. Anybody that could put up with all the kindly devilment of Pete all these years would have to be the wonderful person she is. He does have habits, like picking up stones, that might get annoying. She works hard and so does he. They both make a team. They have put a lot of good legislation on our statute books. I think providence has never brought to this land and this earth of ours a statesman more lovable than Mr. Pete.

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I, too, greatly regret the fact that our friend Pete has decided to voluntarily retire from Congress. It will be a great loss to the Nation, to his own State of Florida, and to all of us. To make it brief, I simply want to concur in all the nice things that have already been said about him. In the 10 years I have been here I have known of no Member of Congress who has had a greater spirit of cooperation with his colleagues than has J. HARDIN PETERSON. I have never known him to say an unkind word about any Member of the House either on or off the floor, nor has he ever been unkind in his actions or looks toward any Member. He is outstanding in that regard.

He is a profound and deep student of American history. He has often talked to me about the fact that the State of Florida and the State of Iowa were both admitted to the Union on the same day and under the same act of Congress. Therefore, in closing, Pete, when you get lonesome down in Florida, as you will, in spite of the great sunshine you have there, just remember you will always be welcome in your sister State of Iowa.

Mr. SIKES. I yield to my friend from Florida [Mr. HERLONG].

Mr. HERLONG. Mr. Speaker, I want to concur in the splendid tributes that have been paid to Mr. Pete and Mrs. Pete. I believe I have known Mr. Pete longer than most any other Member of Congress. I knew him long before he came to Congress. As a matter of fact, three of the counties of my congressional district were originally in his district. It was my privilege the very first time Mr. Pete ran for Congress to be his campaign manager in that area.

I can say that I have never had occasion to be other than tremendously proud of my very first venture into politics, when I was supporting PETERSON for Congress in 1932.

I do not have to remind you Members of Congress of the affection and respect which we hold for Mr. Pete. We all love him.

I can say also that the people of the First Congressional District and for that matter all the people of the State of Florida have the same respect and love for Mr. Pete that we here in Congress hold for him.

Sometimes you wonder why people love a man so much. I will tell you why in Mr. Pete's case. It is because he loves people. He loves them and they simply return his love. While he has a love for people, he also has a love for other things. He loves rocks, shells, books, and things like that. Reference has been made here how he has collected rock. He has them in his desk drawers. He has them on his shelves. And I will bet if you look in his pockets right now, you would find some rocks. He has collected rocks everywhere except in his head. He has a good head and a good mind and he is going to keep that good mind in the practice of law down in his district.

Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I want to say you have to deal in superlatives when you talk about J. HARDIN PETERSON. I know of no finer man. He is a great American; a great statesman, and a splendid Christian gentleman.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. D'EWART].

Mr. D'EWART. Mr. Speaker, I consider it a privilege to join with Mr. PETERSON's colleagues from the State of Florida and the members of the Committee on Public Lands as well as the Members of the Congress generally in paying this tribute to Mr. PETERSON. I have served with him on the Committee on Public Lands as a member of that committee and have served under him as chairman. He is an able parliamentarian and he knows the order of business and how to conduct a committee. He is always courteous, kind, and helpful to the witnesses. He invariably is helpful to the members of the committee in getting legislation through the committee and through the Congress. Whether they are members of the majority or the minority party seems to make no difference to him.

I had an opportunity to go to Florida on a committee trip not long ago and met not only his son and daughter, but his many friends in that area. The high regard they hold for him in that area is evidence of the service he has given to his constituents in that State. It made no difference whether it was a member of the chamber of commerce or a member of the sponge fleet that works in the Gulf of Mexico—they all have just as much love and respect for J. HARDIN PETERSON.

Mr. Chairman, I join with the others in regretting that he is not going to serve in the Congress any longer. We here and the State of Florida are losing an able Representative. The Nation is losing a statesman. I join with the others in wishing him and his wife happiness, contentment, and success in his future life.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORRIS].

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, someone has made, I believe it was the poet Edwin Markham, two significant statements. First he said:

> We have committeed the Golden Rule to memory. Now let us commit it to life.

I believe I have never known any person who more completely has carried out that admonition; who more truly actually has committed the Golden Rule to life, than J. HARDIN PETERSON.

The other statement was this:

> He drew a circle that shut me out.
> Heretic, rebel—a thing to flout.
> But love and I had the wit to win,
> We drew a circle that took him in.

Mr. Speaker, I have never known a person who could more effectively encircle people by his innate, inherent love for humanity, by bands of love and draw people to him more closely and firmly than our good friend Pete.

As chairman of the Indian Affairs Subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands, naturally I am thrown in almost constant contact with him. He is honest. He is sincere. He is very, very able. In addition thereto he is a courteous Christian gentleman and one of extraordinary tact. My remarks are going to be brief because I realize the hour is late, but I would like to bring this particular significant thing to your attention.

In addition to the virtues that I have mentioned and the other virtues that have been so eloquently mentioned by so many, and the others still which I am sure will be, I would like to mention this particular one.

It has very properly been said that the bigger a man is the easier it is to approach him, that it is the little man who is hard to approach. The big man is always easy to approach. Mr. PETERSON is the easiest man to approach I have ever known, bar none. It has been a refreshing experience to me to find that the great Speaker of this House, and the great majority leader of this House, and yes, the great minority leader of this House, and the leadership generally of this House on both sides are easy to talk to, easy to see, easy to approach; and that means a lot, Mr. Speaker, in a democracy. It means a lot toward the welfare of our great Nation. I am glad that our leadership on both the majority side and the minority side possess that particular virtue. But of all the men I have ever known in my life, men of big affairs, I believe Pete has them all beat on being approachable. Anyone can see him who cares to do so.

Just this last suggestion and I conclude: Many times, busy as he was—and he moves like a locomotive, a steam engine on this floor—if you will watch him you will see that he moves rapidly, he walks fast—he has to walk fast to get his job done. Many times just 2 or 3 minutes before an important matter arose I have had to distract his attention and the current of his thought—and they were important matters he was dealing with—and ask him to help me with some other important matter. Never has he seemed the least bit perturbed, but immediately he came to my rescue and assistance.

Out of a grateful heart I express to this House my sincere appreciation for the help that he has given me as a struggling chairman of one of the subcommittees of this great Committee on Public Lands of which he is chairman. May God bless him and all his loved ones.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my friend the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HORAN].

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to join with all of the fine folks here and say to you, Pete, "I love you also."

We are losing a lot of very, very able statesmen; they are voluntarily retiring. I think it is a compliment to all of them that none of them will be missed more or welcomed back with greater affection than J. HARDIN PETERSON and his wife; and I say that sincerely.

To you, Pete, I do not designate myself as a member of the opposition party. I have never seen Chairman PETERSON of the Public Lands Committee opposed to anything that had merit and which could be backed up with able arguments; on the contrary, he has seen fit to see the case of every section of the United States and to fight for that legislation which would be beneficial and contribute to progress. I come from the State probably farthest away from Florida, yet I have found J. HARDIN PETERSON in his heart a citizen, a resident, and a supporter of the Fifth District of the State of Washington.

So, in closing, I want to say to you, Pete, that the quality of our representative Republic and our democratic processes here have been added to by your ability to eliminate partisanship in the consideration of things purely and strictly American.

I think that probably the Delegates from Hawaii and Alaska whom you have helped so much will join with those of us from the extreme Northwest United States in saying that Florida's gain as a permanent resident is a loss to the entire Nation.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ENGLE].

Mr. ENGLE of California. When J. HARDIN PETERSON retires it is going to cause a loss to this House which cannot very well be replaced, and yet I think that every member of our committee will agree that the place where he will be missed most is in the Public Lands Committee where we have had such a splendid opportunity over a period of years to observe the diligence and the real leadership that he has given here in the Congress of the United States.

J. HARDIN PETERSON came to the Congress before I was old enough to vote; yet after 18 years in this House he pursues his duties with a diligence that puts us younger Members to shame. Anyone who has observe the burden that J. HARDIN PETERSON has carried in these past 2 years has acquired a tremendous admiration for his capacity for real labor.

He was to all intents and purposes the acting chairman of our committee prior to the time that he was formally elected to and held that position because of the illness and incapacity of his predecessor, the Honorable Andrew Somers of New York.

Our committee has dealt with a great deal of legislation and all of it has had the personal attention of J. HARDIN PETERSON, our chairman. I think this record would be incomplete if it did not indicate in a general sort of way the type of work this committee has done and to which J. HARDIN PETERSON has given so much of his time. I will recite these just briefly because time is growing late.

There have been 745 bills referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Five hundred and fifteen of these bills have been considered by the committee. Three hundred and thirteen of those bills have been reported out of the committee. Two hundred and seventy bills have been passed by the House and one hundred and sixty-four have been enacted into law. There is no committee of this House which carries an equivalent burden and that considers as much legislation save and except possibly the Committee on the Judiciary which now handles the bills involving personal claims. In the subject matter of those 270 bills considered by our committee and passed by the House, have been the following:

Hawaii statehood.
Alaska statehood.
Navajo-Hopi rehabilitation.
Folsom Dam, California.
Various Indian rehabilitation bills.
Homesteading in Alaska.
Puerto Rico Constitution.
Fort Berthold Indian payment, re Garrison Dam site.
Critical and strategic mineral and metals.
Mining incentive bills.
Palisades Dam project.
Canadian River project.
Mapping program.
Water resources program.
Study re payments in lieu to tax.
Park concessions policy.
Forestry problems.
Synthetic Liquid Fuels Act amendment.

That is just a brief summary, a cursory summary I may say, of the legislation our committee has handled. In all of these our chairman has had to give his personal attention. He had to be prepared to go before the Rules Committee, he had to appear here on the floor of the House personally informed on what the legislation was about. Many Members of this House, as well as of our committee, are personally indebted to our chairman for the favors he has done for them, in getting their bills through this House.

Mr. PETERSON has carried that burden without complaint. He has seemed to prosper, if anything, under the terrific strain that has been put upon him, yet throughout it all he has shown a patience and an unwearied good humor that is almost beyond belief. Other men in this Congress get agitated, irritated with the delay, the procrastination and sometimes the contention that goes on in committee, but in all of my experience with J. HARDIN PETERSON, which goes back over four terms in this House, I have never seen him display one ounce of temper or one iota of bad humor. He is without question the most patient, the most long-suffering chairman there is in the House of Representatives.

But added to his diligence and his patience is a real statesmanship. He has given outstanding leadership in our committee and he has always been actuated by the highest motives of public service. It is perfectly plain to me why the people of his district have returned him one time after another.

Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that a man with 18 years' experience in this House, and with the rare qualifications which J. HARDIN PETERSON has, must retire—and I do not question for a moment his right to retire or his reasons for doing so—and take from this Congress his valued experience and the special gifts he has for statesmanship. If I had any wish to express, and I expressed this not long ago at a dinner honoring J. HARDIN PETERSON, I would like to express the wish, if it could be granted, that J. HARDIN PETERSON, when he leaves the House of Representatives, could will to me, a younger man, that vast and valuable accumulation of experience which he has, that almost unlimited energy and diligence which he has displayed in his 18 years in the Congress of the United States, his untiring and his unwearied patience, his good humor, and, most of all, his grasp of the fundamental principles of real statesmanship.

Our chairman leaves a record which is rich in good works. He has been a faithful and honorable public servant. He is a man of singular integrity and learning. Among his colleagues he will be remembered as a man of constant, loving, and noble nature. It is our unhappy task to bid him good-by when the last day of this session is closed, but he will carry back to Florida with him the abiding affection, the deep respect, and the good wishes, for him, and his faithful helpmate Mrs. Peterson, of every man and woman in the House of Representatives.

Mr. SIKES. I now yield to the Delegate from Alaska [Mr. BARTLETT].

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, opportunities seldom come to utter a eulogy with the recipient sitting only a few feet away, hale and hearty, and obviously happy. But that is the way it ought to be. A person's hearing apparatus ought to be in good order when nice things are being said about him. Selfishly, I could express the wish that all these laudatory words could be deferred for 2 or 4 years or into the indefinite future because, selfishly, I hate to see Pete leaving here. He has been a tower of strength, as the gentleman from Washington suggested, in all matters having to do with the Territories. He has put through bill after bill for us. In regard to the development of the Territories, and their development and progress, Alaska and Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands owe him a debt of gratitude. In that connection, I want to say that the Delegate from Hawaii [Mr. FARRINGTON] left Washington this morning for Hawaii, and I think the Delegate from Puerto Rico [Mr. FERNÓS-ISERN] is at present in Puerto Rico. They have asked me to express their expressions for what Pete has done for the Territories.

Pete, as has been said, is a wonderful legislator. Even more important, it seems to me, he is a wonderful human being. He has had time to attend to all the affairs of his district, but he has given time to the affairs of the Nation, and this country, particularly the public-land States of the West, will be a better land for his having served in this Congress and his having been chairman of the Committee on Public Lands. We hate to see him go, but at the same time we all feel that he and Mrs. Peterson are entitled to the retirement while they are still in the prime of life, and I am sure that the well wishes of every Member of this House will go with Mr. and Mrs. Peterson when they retire to their "mountain home" at Lakeland, Fla.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JENISON].

Mr. JENISON. Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to join with my colleagues in this hour of deserving tribute to the Honorable J. HARDIN PETERSON, of Florida, who is retiring after 18 years of conscientious service to his country.

It has been my privilege to work with Mr. PETERSON during my membership on the Committee on Public Lands in the Eightieth Congress, and again, and most recently, when I returned to that body when he had become chairman. His high sense of responsibility, his unswerving loyalty to his country and his constituents, and, most of all, his consideration of those who worked with him, have stamped him as an outstanding public servant and a great American. It is extremely unfortunate, I think, for our country that he finds it necessary to retire from the Congress, but his accomplishments will most certainly remain as a constant reminder of his conscientious service.

I join, I am sure, with every Member of the House in wishing for him and for Mrs. Peterson the rest and joy and happiness that they so richly deserve.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, the hour is growing late. I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. LARCADE. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to join with my colleagues in tribute to our devoted friend and coworker, J. HARDIN PETERSON, of Florida, who will retire from the Congress at the end of this session. There are so few times when a man has made the sacrific in life to serve his country and his people that appreciation is expressed for that sacrifice and that service as has been demonstrated on this occasion.

While I know that this good man is glad to hear the expressions of esteem and appreciation of his service in the Congress, it is my opinion, that there is nothing that can be said that will be of greater satisfaction to our colleague than his own satisfaction and knowledge in his own mind and conscience that he has served his country and people well and faithfully, and that his contribution has been constructive, unstinting, perennial, and generous, and that as a result of this service he has the satisfaction in his own mind that his contribution has been helpful and has made his country a better place in which to live.

Mr. Speaker, we have heard encomium on almost every phase of the life of our colleague during his service here, and I know that there are few Members who have had and have the respect and esteem for a Member that the entire membership of the House holds for J. HARDIN PETERSON; however, it has been my good fortune to visit with Congressman PETERSON in his district in Florida, and I want to say that I can testify also to the place that he holds in the hearts of his constituents. I have been around both in politics and business and in civic and fraternal work and I can tell from what I see and hear what the people feel and think about a man in his community. Hardly a person, of all races, wherever we went together that did not greet him by his familiar name of "Pete" or "Mr. Pete" and who exclaimed how glad they were to see him, or who thanked him for some favor he had performed for them.

This fact is also borne out because, unless a man is a good man and able and performs his duties in a political office, it is seldom that he will survive politically for more than a quarter of a century, and then retire voluntarily.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a great pleasure and privilege for me to claim J. HARDIN PETERSON as my friend, and while I regret to see him leave the Congress due to his long years of experience and wisdom and qualities of statesmanship, he has done his part for his country and is entitled to the rest that he has so richly earned from the arduous duties here which he has performed with distinction and faithfulness. I wish to Congressman PETERSON and his good wife and family continued success and a full measure of happiness in the days to come.

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I have often described J. HARDIN PETERSON as the most accommodating Member of Congress. I could take up the entire CONGRESSIONAL RECORD eulogizing this splendid and kindly gentleman. However, I simply want to pay him this tribute. "He is a good fellow." I know of nothing better that could be said of any person, be he colleague, or other associate.

Mr. Pete, as I have always affectionately referred to him, has often invited me to go fishing with him in his native Florida. I sincerely hope that he will take time out from his law practice, after leaving the Congress, to indulge in this fine pastime and that he will never allow the big ones to get away.

He is one of the wealthiest men I have ever known. Not, of course, in dollars or other things of intrinsic value. His wealth is in the friends, the esteem, the confidence and well wishes of all who have known and respected him during his outstanding years of service in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege and an honor to join with my colleagues in expressing our admiration and high personal friendship for Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON, of Florida, on this occasion.

While I have never served on the same committee with the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PETERSON], it has been my privilege to attend many meetings of the Committee on Public Lands during their deliberations on bills involving national defense, and especially concerning strategic and critical materials and the mining industry.

Throughout those meetings I had occasion to observe Mr. PETERSON'S great diligence and devotion to duty in the interest of our Nation's welfare. His energy and his understanding of the legislation under study was most outstanding and was exceeded only by his courtesy and his friendly cooperation with his colleagues on the committee, with colleagues from the House of Representatives appearing before the committee, and with all witnesses who appeared before the committee.

I believe I am in position to judge the services of most of the Members of Congress in national defense matters during the 12 years of my service in the House of Representatives and I place Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON very high in the quality and value of his services and his contribution to our Nation.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Speaker, it is fitting and proper at this time that I express a few words to show my appreciation to a great chairman, a great statesman, and a great American, the Honorable J. HARDIN PETERSON, of Florida.

It has been a great privilege for me to serve on the Committee on Public Lands. We have the most friendly relationship on that committee due in a large part to the ability and fairness of Chairman PETERSON.

At every opportunity, Chairman PETERSON has given every possible consideration to me. He has given me every opportunity to be heard and express my views and has given me all possible assistance with parliamentary procedure.

He has the unique ability of making me feel at ease. He extends the warmth of his personality to witnesses. Everyone who has come in contact with him has had the greatest respect for the best representative legislative body in the world, the House of Representatives. Every person who has come in contact with him becomes a better American and a better citizen for that contact.

It has been a real privilege to serve with him. All of us who represent the people of the United States can profit from the richness of his character and all of us have profited from being associated with a good American.

Minnesota, the northernmost State in the Union, extends to Representative and Mrs. Peterson, from the southernmost State, an invitation to spend a summer in the land of the sky-blue water. In return, many of our people will winter with you.

Mr. REGAN. Mr. Speaker, the voluntary retirement of JAMES HARDIN PETERSON will bring to a close the service of one of the most able and industrious men in the House of Representatives. His distinguished career here has been climaxed by his elevation to the chairmanship of the important Committee on Public Lands. It has been my pleasure and honor to serve with and under him on this committee. I have found him congenial, considerate, and cooperative. His interest in the work of this group has not been confined to his own section of the country but extends to all parts of the United States and to the manifold activities comprehended in the scope of this committee's jurisdiction.

His record as an American and a statesman speaks for itself, and his decision to quit the Halls of Congress will cause general and sincere regret among his colleagues. For my part, I shall miss him not only as a coworker but as a helpful and understanding friend. I wish for him abundant success in his new chosen field of activity.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to speak of our dear friend, the chairman of the committee on which I serve, Congressman J. HARDIN PETERSON. His is a political career that will long remain an example for us all to follow. True, he is a member of a party, but equally true is that he has represented all of the people.

Throughout his entire public career his voice has always been heard on the side of those who needed an advocate most.

He is a gentleman much beloved by his colleagues. He is a man endowed with many fine qualities and many natural abilities. He is endowed, too, with an idealism that has made him share those talents without thought of personal reward or gain. He has never been too busy but what he was ready to advise and counsel the younger Members of this House and give them the benefit of his years of experience in the Congress of the United States.

It has been a pleasure to watch him preside over our committee. He has been a presiding officer who has always demanded that we have all of the facts before us. Then he would patiently, logically, and intelligently help chart the course of action to achieve a solution.

The House of Representatives is losing a generous, kindly, and thoughtful friend. Remembering his years of outstanding service to his district and country, we cannot begrudge him returning to his beloved State and we only hope that when he slows his pace enough to do a little fishing along the banks of the Swanee that he will stop to remember his friends here in Washington. It is my understanding that his home county is staging a "J. HARDIN PETERSON day," which pleases us all to know that here, for once, is an exception to the old saying that "a prophet is not without honor except in his own country." The citizens of Polk County are to be commended for their vision in sending this outstanding man to the Halls of Congress and keeping him here to render a valuable service to our country.

Certainly he has represented the sentiments expressed by Chapman when he said, "There is a nick in Fortune's restless panel for each man's good." And that of our good friend, J. HARDIN PETERSON, is surely overflowing.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, under unanimous consent I include a few brief remarks with reference to the voluntary retirement of the very able Congressman from Florida, the Honorable J. HARDIN PETERSON.

It has not been my privilege to serve on the Committee on Public Lands upon which he was an outstanding member nor has it been my privilege to serve as a member of his delegation, but as a North Carolinian and a representative of a neighboring Southern State, I am honored to add my remarks to the many fine tributes paid him by other Members of this body on Thursday, July 20, in the House of Representatives.

I consider Congressman PETERSON one of the most resourceful and practical Representatives in the Eighty-first Congress and at the same time possessing an unusual understanding of the other Congressmen's problems and especially of the new Members.

When I entered the Eightieth Congress as a new Member with no previous experience in this forum and naturally being uncertain as to procedure and at times decisions, I found Congressman PETERSON of great practical assistance to me. He not only gave me sound advice, but made me feel that my judgment was as valuable as his although his was grounded on long valuable experience in the Congress and mine was entirely new. Kindness and simplicity marked him as a great legislator because at all times he showed that he had rare qualities of ability and leadership without the accompaniment of any conceit.

It is very regretful indeed that a man who is still so able and active in this body should voluntarily retire. It is a great loss to the people of this Nation as well as to his native State of Florida and to the leadership of this Congress that he is entering other fields. What makes the Congress of the United States the greatest deliberative body in the world is because a great many of the Members are of the same fine type of experienced statesmanship as J. HARDIN PETERSON.

I feel that I can understand the call that he has to return to his home and practice law with his son and thereby climax what has been a most eventful and splendid record in the Congress of this great country. As a Member from the North Carolina delegation, I wish for him Godspeed and a continuation of his eventful and successful life.

May I add in conclusion that the voluntary passage from the Halls of Congress of Hon. J. HARDIN PETERSON is a poignant and irreplaceable loss to this great Nation which he has served so long, so well, and so capably. Our country can ill afford to lose in this hour of crisis congressional leaders of the type and caliber of the senior member of the delegation from the great State of Florida.

Mr. MILES. Mr. Speaker, I am but a newcomer to the House and have chosen not to seek reelection, and I wish to pay a brief tribute to my good friend, J. HARDIN PETERSON, who has also chosen not to seek reelection.

I shall treasure the experiences I have had as a Member of Congress, but I shall cherish even more the friendship of the men and women with whom I have served. None of these will mean more to me than my service on the Committee of Public Lands under Mr. PETERSON'S chairmanship and the friendship and helpful guidance he has given me. It is through his patience and intelligent understanding of all matters that come before the committee that my duties there are made a pleasure rather than a task.

The Public Lands Committee, the Congress, and the people of the United States will lose a man who is almost irreplaceable. I think he is one of the soundest men in Congress. He is hard working and thorough, and I have never yet seen him go after anything that he did not accomplish what he set out to do.

Mr. PETERSON has earned the confidence of both Democrats and Republicans in the House of Representatives. I feel that I have been privileged to have been able to serve and to associate with him on the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. SIKES. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, upon learning of the determination of HARDIN PETERSON to retire from this body I immediately began to speculate as to what his reasons for that decision might be. I know, of course, that there is some idea abroad in the land that no one ever leaves the House of Representatives except by reason of death or defeat. Those of us who serve here know that is not true. Certainly as to Pete, I know that he never could be defeated down there, and he is too hale and hearty for any of us to think about anything really bad happening to him. So in order to satisfy myself about it, I asked him one day, and his answer to me, in my opinion, is a real evidence of the great character of the man. He said, "You know, Charlie, my boy is coming back to practice law. I have been busy here. I have worked hard. Through the years I have not had as much chance and opportunity to be with my boy and to enjoy his fellowship and his company and to help him and guide him as I would have liked."

I might say parenthetically that those same reactions must occur to many of us who find ourselves in a similar position.

He said, "I am going to quit Congress. I am going back, and I am going to practice law with my boy, and I am going to fish with him, and I am just going to go live with him, and I am going to make up for a little lost time."

I say what better could indicate the greatness of the man.

I want to say one other thing here. On occasion it falls to my lot and it is my great privilege to be in the districts of my colleagues who serve here. I never undertake to tell the people back home what they feel or believe about their Representative in Congress, but I have always felt competent to advise them as to the standing of that individual Member among his colleagues here in the House of Representatives. I have frequently said that for a man to come to this body and here earn by his record the respect of his colleagues who serve with him is one of the greatest distinctions that can come to any man.

The things that have been said here today about HARDIN PETERSON are great, clear, true evidence of the acknowledged fact, that he, among the best who are here, has earned and well deserves the respect, the admiration, and the love and affection of those of us who serve here with him.

So one day I trust that you, his colleagues in Florida, and the rest of us whenever chance may come our way, will see to it that his people down there, with whom he will now be more closely associated than ever before, will know and understand just how much we think of him, how much we dislike seeing him leave, but at the same time how much we joy in the great future that lies before him.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to my able and dear friend the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. STAGGERS].

Mr. STAGGERS. I wish to thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES] for yielding me this one moment. I know it is rather unusual for him to do this, but he did it for a special purpose, so I could express publicly my respect and admiration for our colleague J. HARDIN PETERSON. He happened to know that my mother is in the gallery, and for that reason he said he would let me say that publicly.

Mr. Speaker, J. HARDIN PETERSON is one of my closest friends if he is not my closest friend in Congress. I have been here only one term, but he has done me many, many favors. Not the least of them was the time last year when he and his wife drove up into my district and made a speech for me, after I had had my throat operated on and could not go myself. That is just one of many, many things. For him to do that for me, just a first-timer, was certainly something.

He believes in gentlemanliness, honest, chivalrous, clean-minded, God-fearing manliness. He believes in man, the masterpiece of God's creation, the finest of all fine things in this world. He believes in God, the infinite Architect of the universe and the compassionate Ruler of all things.

May God travel with you along life's pathway, Congressman PETERSON. I know that this House and this Nation in the trying troubles just ahead are going to miss your wisdom and your experience.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the State of Florida has sent many great men to this body and to the other body of the Congress and has made many powerful and constructive contributions to the progress of our country. But I think I can say without exaggeration that in the entire history of the State of Florida as a State of the Union the people of that State never sent a greater man to the Congress than J. HARDIN PETERSON. That observation is no reflection upon any of their great citizens of today or of yesterday.

But I think I can make that statement on the basis of my own personal knowledge and my observation and experience as a Member of this House, and for 8 years of the last 10 years as majority leader of this body.

The thing that interests me is the mind of J. HARDIN PETERSON. I am not interested in the name of a man nor his color or race, nor his religion. It is the character of a man that interests me. J. HARDIN PETERSON is possessed of a noble mind and an understanding intellect, and is a man of great integrity. He, like all of us, has received the gift from God of the power to think and reason and resolve our thoughts into a will for good or evil. J. HARDIN PETERSON in his life has resolved that that great gift from God shall be for good.

I say without any intention of flattery or exaggeration that J. HARDIN PETERSON exemplifies to the fullest extent humanly possible a fine, noble character and the nearest approximation humanly possible to that nobility of mind and beautifulness of character which is as close to God as any man can be or any person can be.

J. HARDIN PETERSON served in this body for 18 years. Coming from his community in Florida and from his congressional district he has brought credit to his people. He has brought credit to his State. He has enriched the history of our country. He has given great aid to the enactment of far-reaching legislation of importance, not only to aid our people of today, but to aid generations to come. I know that the people of Florida and particularly the people of his congressonal district will always remember the contributions J. HARDIN PETERSON has made to the progress of Florida and the Nation, and they will know that his place is for all time indelibly inscribed in their hearts and in their minds.

Reference was made to the fact that he is going back to the practice of law. The story that CHARLIE HALLECK told is exactly what our friend, J. HARDIN PETERSON, told me. May I say, not for the purpose of advocating a law business for HARDIN PETERSON and his son—I expect no part of any of the fees from cases that may come to him and to his son—but might I say to the people of Florida, in my opinion there is no abler man either as a legislator or as a member of the bar than HARDIN PETERSON.

If I had a case which particularly involved the Federal Government or Washington, and if I lived in Florida or elsewhere, I would engage HARDIN PETERSON as my attorney. I also trust, and I hope that Pete will remember "The laborer is worthy of his hire."

As majority leader it has been my privilege and my duty to be close to the Members of the House, particularly the Democratic Members, and more particularly to the chairmen of committees. In my opinion, as has been stated by other Members, HARDIN PETERSON is one of the ablest chairmen who has ever served in this body. As majority leader of the House of Representatives, I publicly admit that. He is a great leader, a great American, a great Democrat. He is a great team man. He has been a source of strength and support to me and to the Speaker of the House of Representatives during the years that I have acted as majority leader and during the time that the Speaker has been the presiding officer of this body.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am very happy to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JENKINS. I think the measure of a good chairman is the manner in which he gets along with the individuals of the other party than that to which he belongs. Congressman PETERSON has been in a class by himself when it comes to that.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank my friend from Ohio and I thoroughly agree. The responsibility of leadership in the majority party, and that means in the Committee, is a great trust, and it is evidenced most effectively in the consideration given to the minority Members in protecting their rights and seeing that their rights are not trespassed upon.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall be pleased to yield.

Mr. COLMER. If all of us who desired the opportunity here this afternoon to extol the virtues of our dear friend from Florida were to do so I am afraid we should be here all night. But I do want to say to this House as one who entered this body along with my distinguished friend that Nature great equalizer of persons that she is, did not give any one of us all of the virtues, but she has given our friend one virtue that it seems to me excels and stands out above all others. To me, my colleague from Florida is a person who lives by the side of the road and is a friend to man.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to my colleague from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I should like to pay my tribute to the gentleman from Florida. I have had the pleasure of serving with him on the committee; and I should like to speak of his great wholesomeness, his belief in the good in the world and not in the bad, his belief in his fellow man. There is not a finer man that I have ever served with than Mr. PETERSON. I wish him all possible happiness, and I wish to his wife and his son the greatest of happiness also.

Good luck to you, colleague; I shall miss you as I did when you left the committee.

When Mr. PETERSON was chairman of the subcommittee it always semed to me that he had a magic wand that he used over his bills; he knew just when to press a point, just when to bring a bill out. It is a great gift.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say that whenever he had a bill up in the House I never worried about its being handled correctly; and, as majority leader, I did not have to hang around the floor closely, because I knew that the bill was in the hands of one who was able and in whom I had complete confidence.

And I may say that J. HARDIN PETERSON enjoyed the confidence, the respect, and the friendship of the late Franklin D. Roosevelt; and he enjoys the confidence, the respect, and the friendship of President Harry S. Truman.

J. HARDIN PETERSON, and also Mrs. Peterson, have been gifted with understanding minds; God gave them that gift, and they have both developed it to the highest extent humanly possible. As one of our colleagues said, "He loves people, and people love him." How true. And I shall miss him not only as a colleague, but also as majority leader—and he has been a source of strength to me. I regret very much that he is voluntarily retiring, but having made the decision he and Mrs. Peterson carry with them the best wishes of all of his colleagues for every happiness and every success throughout their lives.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a great pleasure for me as a Republican who has been in the House now for about 32 years to pay my highest respects and esteem to J. HARDIN PETERSON. I regard him as one of the most faithful public servants I have ever seen operate in this House. He is a credit to the State and to the district which sent him here. I personally am very sorry to see him leave the Congress, even though he belongs to the other party. I think we need such men as J. HARDIN PETERSON, and especially in this hour of trial and peril of our country. But I know that if he goes back to Florida he is not going to escape the call of the people, for sooner or later I expect to see him Governor of the great State of Florida, and that his leadership will add greatly to the prestige of that State. I rejoice that we have had him with us so long and am sorry that he is leaving us.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure, pride, and humility that I now yield to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, along with all the other Members who have expressed themselves this afternoon, I deeply regret the retirement from public life of HARDIN PETERSON. I do not blame him for retiring under the circumstances, going back to where he can be closely daily associated with his son, because I am a believer in blood and I like people the best who like their own blood better than any other blood.

HARDIN PETERSON has been an able legislator, an outstanding chairman of a great committee. We not only are devoted to HARDIN PETERSON, but we have for him a deep, a very deep, respect for the kind of a man he is. His life has been a good, a fruitful and a full one. He is an able statesman, he is a great American, he is a fine patriot. His is a lovely soul. My life during my acquaintance with him throughout the years that are allotted to me will be richer, much richer, because I have known him.

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Speaker, the hour is late. I could take a long time in my own feeble way to express appreciation. But may I say that what I have been able to accomplish here has been due to the kind cooperation of the distinguished Speaker, the majority leader, the minority leader, my friends on the committee and in the House. I appreciate more than I can tell you the kind things that have been said today.

I shall always treasure my service in the House. I thank all of you from the bottom of my heart. May God bless you all.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report and statement on the bill H. R. 6073.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HUBER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

FARM PROBLEMS

Mr. HUBER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the opportunity to discuss all of our farm problems personally and individually with every farmer in the Fourteenth Congressional District, which I have the honor to represent, but since I cannot do that I am doing the next best. I want to make this written report to you on some of the major farm issues. The quality of the work of a Congressman seems to vary directly with the extent to which he is able to learn and understand the problems and aspirations of the people in his district. The elected representatives of the people have a solemn duty to report on the issues involved in new and pending legislation.

Most of us would agree, I think, that we have a very good Federal farm program right now. But all of us could suggest some improvements that ought to be made. The Federal farm price support and production adjustment program was inaugurated in 1933 when farmers all over the country were in dire economic distress. It helped to pull farmers out of the depression. During World War II the support program provided a price assurance to farmers that allowed them to make a wartime production record which helped to win the war and to feed a world faced with famine in the early postwar years.

Farm price supports also helped bridge the gap for farmers between war and peace. After World War I, prices of farm commodities dropped over 50 percent in less than 10 months. No such drop occurred after World War II, owing in part of the operation of price-support legislation. This prevented disastrous drops in farmers' incomes and was probably of considerable importance in preventing the slight recession of 1949 from becoming a postwar depression.

The Eightieth Congress enacted a farm price support program called the Agricultural Act of 1948. One part of that law provided that the wartime support program would be continued through 1949; the other part of the law was to take effect on January 1, 1950. This delayed-action part of the law drastically lowered the levels of support for most commodities and removed from mandatory support many of the most important farm commodities produced in north Ohio.

The Eighty-first Congress took cognizance of farmers' objections to the delayed-action part of the Agricultural Act of 1948 and enacted some rather important changes. Among those changes was the provision for mandatory price supports for milk, butter, and their products. This is a change of real importance to farmers in northern Ohio. The new law, the Agricultural Act of 1949, also provided for a somewhat higher level of support for the so-called basic commodities—corn, wheat, cotton, tobacco, rice, and peanuts. It also revised the formula for calculating parity prices by the inclusion of the wage rates of hired farm labor.

During both sessions of the Eighty-first Congress, both before and after the enactment of the Agricultural Act of 1949, a great many other changes in our price-support legislation have been urged upon Congress by many different groups. I would like to have the benefit of your thinking on some of the major issues that are involved in these proposals.

American agriculture is geared to high production. In the past 10 years farmers have set six new production records. Since the war, however, per capita consumption of farm products has declined; and agricultural exports declined last year.

These developments placed a downward pressure on farm prices and farmers' incomes at a time when farm people were still expected to live on smaller incomes than nonfarm people. In 1948 the per person income of farm people was $909, compared with $1,569 for nonfarm persons, a difference of $660. In 1949 the figures were $763 per person for farm people and $1,555 for people who do not live on farms. Farm people make up nearly 20 percent of the national population but received less than 8 percent of national income in 1949.

If these conditions continue, some kind of direct action seems indicated. Looking at the experience of the thirties and since the war, the Congress has noted a widespread agreement that some kind of farm price-support program seemed to be the answer. But there has not been such widespread agreement on just what kind of support program the law should provide.

Mainly, the discussions have revolved around four major issues.

First. The old parity formula that has been in use since 1933 is based upon the idea of maintaining the purchasing power of individual farm commodities such as wheat, or corn, or butter at the same level in terms of things that farmers buy as it was in the period 1909 to 1914. It has been suggested by several farm organizations, and by the Secretary of Agriculture, that a more nearly current farm family purchasing power formula should be substituted for the commodity purchasing power formula. Those who suggest the change point out that farmers are more interested in total farm income than in just per bushel or per pound prices of their commodities. And, therefore, farm income is the most realistic and most desirable goal for the support program.

Second. The second issue that is being widely discussed, and upon which Congress is asked to decide, is that of the appropriate or proper level at which farm prices or farmers' incomes should be supported.

(a) Some, a minority, oppose the whole idea of a support program for farmers.

(b) Others say that such support programs should act as a protection against the loss of out-of-pocket production costs—this would be a level of between 55 and 70 percent of parity. In bad years such a level of support would leave very little for family living expenses, farm improvement, and debt repayment.

(c) Another group favors supports ranging between 75 and 90 percent of parity, with minimums in years of large supply close to the 75-percent level. Such a level would help prevent complete bankruptcy of those farmers who had sufficient reserves to tide themselves over several bad years in succession.

(d) Still others urge that the best interest of the entire Nation as well as that of farmers demands that farmers' incomes be maintained from year to year at a level not too far below that of immediately past years. The thinking here is that if farmers' incomes are allowed to fall too far too fast, this would set up a series of economic repercussions that would injure not only the farmers involved but everyone who sells or manufactures the things that farmers buy.

Third. Closely associated with the previous question is the one of what commodities should be provided with price supports.

(a) There is, of course, the group that says "None."

(b) Another group would restrict price-support operations to the storable so-called basic commodities—cotton, corn, wheat, tobacco, rice, and peanuts.

(c) Others would extend the list to include the important perishable commodities such as milk, butterfat, the meat animals, hogs and cattle, eggs, and farm chickens.

(c) Still others would urge the inclusion of important fruits and vegetables.

(e) While others would cover all bona fide farm products.

Fourth. A fourth issue is the question of the method of support. There are basically two major methods of supporting farmers' returns on the commodities they sell. One of these is the purchase method by which the Government, through direct purchase or a loan program, takes enough of the supply of the commodity off the market to bring the market price up to the support level. The other method is the payment method, whereby farmers sell their entire supply into the market, at regular supply and demand prices, and, if the resulting average market prices are below the support level, the difference would be covered in a production payment from the Government to the farmer.

The loan and purchase agreement method of support seems to have worked relatively well for storable commodities and has not worked a hardship upon consumers because the so-called surplus production that is taken off the market one year by the Government can be safely and economically stored for use in a later year. Moreover, when it is possible to store a commodity cheaply for a period of years it is only good sense to maintain an adequate safety reserve against poor weather, low yields, or other national emergency.

But for perishables there are a great many people who feel that the payment method of support would be preferable. If not used, perishable farm commodities must be destroyed or stored at a very heavy expense. Provision has already been made by law to use as much as possible of such commodities in the school-lunch program, in public and private welfare agencies both in this country and abroad. Yet Government-owned inventories of such products as potatoes, eggs, and milk products continue to pile up in expensive storage. It is felt by many that it would be best to allow the retail prices of such commodities to drop to a more realistic supply and demand level and thus encourage the current consumption of such products.

There have been a great many confusing statements about the cost of the farm price support program. For my part, I am inclined to think that the cost of a support program will be well spent if by doing so we can prevent a major national depression and unneeded suffering by our farm families.

The need for a farm price support program grows out of the fact that the individual farm family is unable to protect itself from the fluctuations of the rest of the economy. Farmers make up the large majority of our free competitive enterprisers. In an economy where farmers are required to sell at the giving price in an unprotected market and buy at the asking price in a protected market, they operate at a disadvantage. This disadvantage is measured in terms of lower farm incomes.

If there is no price-support program at all the entire burden or cost of this economic unbalance falls directly upon farmers, even though their customers may for a time be enabled to obtain an abundance of farm commodities rather cheaply.

By setting up a support program of some kind a part of the cost of our economic unbalance is shifted off the shoulders of farmers to the entire population. These allow farmers to continue to produce abundantly and insure consumers a steady supply of farm products from year to year.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. SHEPPARD] is recognized.

RADIO NETWORK MONOPOLIES

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to your attention a very serious problem which is confronting us in one of the greatest industries which has come in our time, that of radio broadcasting. It can be said that this industry consumes more of our people's time than any other single thing which our people do, except sleeping and working. Any industry which commands such a large percentage of our people's activities certainly should be given serious consideration by the Congress of these United States.

Fortunately, in 1934 the lawmaking bodies of this country produced a masterpiece of legislation, the Communications Act of 1934, which act has generally been well administered by the Federal Communications Commission. I label this act a masterpiece because since 1934—16 years ago—this act has served as a template to form and regulate the radio-broadcasting industry, which industry is paramount in the lives of our people.

Under this act an industry which has seen thousands of basic changes within itself has been able to flourish. Under this act thousands of citizens of our country have been licensed by the Government to use these channels of public domain. Under this act these licensees of the facilities of the public communication airways generally have done an excellent job of using their grants in the public interest. Under this act thousands of industries have seen fit to spend millions of dollars each year to produce entertainment second to none in order that these industries may convey to the listening public the qualities of their wares. In the radio field these industries are called sponsors.

Under this act, one of the greatest monopolies this country has ever seen has grown to such proportions that it dictates what entertainment and what information the public shall hear over the public's own radio airways. This monopoly is that of the radio networks or chains, the American Broadcasting Co., the National Broadcasting Co., the Columbia Broadcasting System, and the Mutual Broadcasting System.

The above four chains dictate to the licensees of our radio stations that the licensees shall not broadcast a program of local or home-town interest or a commercial program of a local or home-town merchant. This dictatorial power is made possible because of a clause in the contracts of the radio chains, with the licensees of radio stations, called an option time clause, which clause gives the power to the radio chains to force any local radio program off the air through intimidation of the licensee of the radio station. These radio chains dictate the rates that hundreds of radio broadcasters shall charge for their radio facilities. These radio chains dictate what programs and over what stations the radio public shall be informed or entertained. These chain monopolies dictate which commentators interpret the news for millions of our people. Nothing in the make-up of these radio chains prevents their control by foreign countries or agents; yet these monopolies dictate the majority of the programing of our country's radio stations through the medium of their affiliation contracts with these radio stations. These monopolies dictate the editorial policies of some of the major trade publications of the broadcasting industry. At this point I would like to state that the publication Variety, the trade paper of the entertainment world, is the only radio publication which, to my knowledge, has had the fortitude to expose these radio chain monopolies, as exemplified in a recent article which they published, entitled "Affiliates Cry Chain Gang—affiliates being those independently owned radio stations which affiliate themselves with the radio chains. These monopolies operate four of the greatest lobbies in the Capitol. They attempt to, and at times do, exert undue influence on the decisions of the Federal Communications Commission by dangling lucrative jobs before the eyes of the personnel of our controlling agencies.

May I here cite a recent situation where it was rumored in the radio broadcasting circles for over a year that the National Broadcasting Co. proposed to hire Mr. Charles Denny, then Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, which rumor was denied by Mr. Denny. The final outcome was that Mr. Denny resigned as Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission to become vice president of the National Broadcasting Co.

These network chains control the executives of the organization supposed to represent the individual broadcasters of this country; namely, the National Association of Broadcasters.

I wish to particularly call your attention to a situation where the secretary of the National Association of Broadcasters, Mr. C. E. Arney, Jr., deliberately attempted to prevent radio broadcasters which were members of his organization, as well as nonmembers of his organization, from obtaining copies of radio legislation introduced before this House, which legislation called for the licensing of the four network radio monopolies by the Government, namely, my bill (H. R. 7310), which was introduced before this Congress on February 15, 1950. Not only was the distribution of copies of this bill suppressed at the NAB convention in Chicago, but at a meeting of the nonmembers of the National Association of Broadcasters, discussion on the legislation was prevented by the chairman of the meeting, which chairman was sitting next to and was under the control of Don E. Petty, the chief counsel for the National Association of Broadcasters.

In addition to the above, Mr. C. E. Arney, Jr., secretary of the National Association of Broadcasters, enlisted the officers of the Stevens Hotel in an effort to stop the distribution of copies of the legislation in the lobby of the hotel, where most of the broadcasters attending the convention were registered.

Here we have the officers of the National Association of Broadcasters, an association made up of and purported to represent the interests of the radio broadcasters of this country, working for the radio network monopolies, in direct contradiction to the interests of the members which support the salaries of these NAB officers by their dues. These officers attempted to prevent the members of their association from learning about legislation introduced before this House, which legislation would be very beneficial to the interests of all of the broadcasters in this country. Here we find a concrete example of the radio chain monopolies controlling the actions of the officers of an organization which is supposed to represent the interests of the individual broadcasters of this country rather than the interests of all of the radio chain monopolies.

We shudder when we hear about the suppression of public information in countries controlled by dictators, but we find it right here at home.

Now, I wish to talk about another phase of this network monopoly, a phase which should interest this House, every radio sponsor, every radio station representative, every radio station licensee, both network affiliated and independent, as well as the listening public. A very comprehensive survey made in this country by C. E. Hooper during the month of October 15 to November 15, 1949, a month that is considered a very high month of radio listening, because it is after the summer vacation period and before the period occupied by the Christmas holidays, confirms the following.

The average commercial radio broadcast, of all of the four network chains in this country, is heard by only 2.74 percent of the radio listeners of this country, when it is broadcast coast to coast over a network chain for the first time; while 97.26 percent of our people do not hear the broadcast. This is concrete proof that rebroadcasting a radio program for the second time would be advantageous to the sponsor of the program, as well as to the listening public, which were unable to hear the program at the particular time when it was first broadcast.

Another Hooper survey made last December for the Pacific coast indicates that in four isolated cases rebroadcasts of popular broadcasts were made, and this survey pointed out the fact that the rebroadcast of Charlie McCarthy attracted 25 percent more listeners than the first broadcast of the program, and the rebroadcast of Jack Benny attracted 31 percent more listeners than the first broadcast of that program.

Rebroadcasting of radio programs can be very profitable to the sponsors of these programs because it enables the sponsor to procure additional listeners at a very low cost. Rebroadcasting is beneficial to the listeners because it encourages the sponsors to produce high-grade entertainment, thus affording the listeners a better quality program, and it also is in the public interest to make the program available to the 97.26 percent who were unable to be at their radios to listen to the first broadcast.

In light of the above, I have had a thorough investigation made as to why rebroadcasting is not more general, and I have found this shocking fact to be true.

First, the rebroadcasts made in the West were made by the networks over the same stations which broadcast the first program a few hours before, and during a time when the networks had some open option time to sell on their affiliated stations. In this situation, the rebroadcasting was in full control of the networks. Further investigation shows that the reason rebroadcasting is not more common on the east coast is that there is little or no option time available on the east coast network stations. Therefore, if rebroadcasting were done on the east coast, the individual affiliated stations would receive the revenue direct from the sponsors for these rebroadcasts, and the networks would lose the economic control which they have over these stations. Also, the rebroadcasting of sponsor's radio programs would create additional business for a lot of independent stations which can use such new business to keep them out of the red, where a great percentage of them are now operating.

In an attempt to encourage sponsors to rebroadcast their programs on the east coast, one radio station has attempted to negotiate with the sponsors of these radio programs, in an effort to arrange for their rebroadcast; but this station has been told by the network monopolies that he cannot rebroadcast these programs, even if he has the permission of the sponsor.

Here we find a plain example of the network monopolies restraining trade between a broadcasting station and the sponsor of a program, which sponsor pays the entire cost for the production of his radio program, and by so paying owns the property right in the program.

Here we again find the network monopolies preventing millions of dollars in revenue from reaching the broadcasting industry, just because this revenue could not be controlled by these monopolies. These networks are not only preventing the sponsors of these programs from using their radio programs to their best advantage, but more important, this action on the part of the network monopolies is directly preventing the listening public from hearing these high quality broadcasts.

Now this huge monopoly has had fertile ground in which to conduct itself against the public interest because of one thing, which the Communications Act of 1934 failed to consider and that was, the licensing by the Government of these four monopolies, in the same manner the Government has for years licensed the individual radio stations. Naturally, the fathers of the Communications Act of 1934 did not foresee this possible condition, and, therefore, could not provide legislation to regulate it.

In drawing up my proposed bill, H. R. 7310, I found the Communications Act still a masterpiece of legislation. My investigation showed that this act does not need any basic changes, it merely needs to be amended to provide for the control of the four monopolies, the above-mentioned four radio chains, in a manner similar to the way the act now controls individual radio stations. Such control will lessen the regulation of the individual radio stations of this country because these stations are now held responsible by the Federal Communications Commission, if the networks with which these radio stations are affiliated violate any rules which the Federal Communications Commission has attempted to set down for the control of these networks. Such attempted indirect control of the radio chain monopolies by the Federal Communications Commission has been very ineffectual, and might be likened to the case of spanking George because his brother Jack misbehaved and was out of reach of a spanking.

The purpose of my statement today is, in some small way, to acquaint you with this serious situation, and how it is affecting the radio listening public of our country. These monopolistic practices require our immediate attention.

Because of the tremendous detrimental effect these radio chain monopolies are exerting on our people; on the independent and network affiliated stations; on the radio talent of this country; as well as on the sponsors of our commercial radio programs and all other phases of the radio broadcasting industry, and because, remedial legislation cannot be enacted at this session of Congress, I urgently request that the Department of Justice, as well as the Federal Trade Commission make an immediate and thorough investigation, to determine the extent which these network chains are violating the Communications Act of 1934, as well as all other antitrust, monopoly and fair trade acts, to immediately apply these laws to correct this deplorable situation, and that these Government agencies report to this House their findings and the corrective action taken by them.

SENATE

FRIDAY, JULY 21, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. F. Norman Van Brunt, associate minister, Foundry Methodist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou great indwelling Spirit, who art ever attempting to guide the spirit of man to the realization of abundant life, give us a greater expectancy. Deliver us, we pray, from fears that paralyze the will, and from doubts that breed despair. Let us see Thee, the unchanging, secure foundation, upon which we can continue to build a glorious heritage of freedom and fidelity. We need the insight of Thy spirit and the all-pervading power of Thy love. To this end grant unto us the divine initiative that, as imitators of the Infinite, we may be bearers of light and abundant life to our age. Teach us to look upon our purpose and place in the world with the same sense of mission of the One who staggered the world by the daringness of his faith, the Man of Galilee. Amen.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators be permitted to present petitions and memorials, introduce bills and joint resolutions, and submit routine matters for the RECORD, without debate and without speeches.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. President, before action on the request of the Senator from Arizona, I desire to make a unanimous-consent request that the consideration of the appropriation bill may be proceeded with for 2 hours today. I do not want to be greedy at all, but we did not proceed with the consideration of the bill at all yesterday, and we have been proceeding very slowly with it for the last 2 days. I think we should pay some attention to the bill. Our country is in very serious condition, and it is necessary to have these appropriations made. Instead, we are dealing with other matters and are not considering the bill before the Senate.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that beginning at 2 o'clock this afternoon the Senate proceed for 2 hours, until 4 o'clock, to consider the appropriation bill. I appeal to Senators to give the matter some thought, and let it be done. I hope Senators will agree at least 2 hours today should be allotted to consideration of the unfinished business so that we may get as far with the bill as we can. We made very good progress earlier in the consideration of the bill, but we are now making no progress at all. Therefore, I make my unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The senior Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that from 2 o'clock p. m. until 4 o'clock p. m. today the Senate proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business, the appropriation bill. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, there is no one in the Senate who believes in expediting the work of the Senate more than does the junior Senator from Nebraska. I want to say to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee that I should like to cooperate with him as much as I can. He is the chairman of the committee of which I am a member, and I usually cooperate with him. However, I wish to say that this is a most unusual request, in face of the fact that all day yesterday was spent on the Tydings report, and most of the time was occupied by Senators on the majority side, and rightly so, because the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] was making a speech in connection with the filing of the report. Certain objections were raised, and Senators on this side stated that at the proper time today they would ask to have the floor so that they could set the record straight. In view of that fact, notice has been served that Senators expect to speak today on the report, I think they should be allowed to proceed. I suggest, therefore, that we should get the record straight today, and then take up the appropriation bill. With all due respect to my distinguished chairman, the junior Senator from Nebraska is forced to object to the unanimous-consent request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Tennessee. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] with respect to the transaction of morning business? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC INTEREST IN CASE OF STRIKES—RESOLUTION OF GREENBURG (KANS.) CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. SCHOEPPEL. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution which I have received from the president of the Chamber of Commerce of Greensburg, Kans., which resolution urges some form of legislation be enacted whereby the public interest is protected in the case of strikes that affect our transportation systems, public utilities, and communications.

The resolution is an expression typical of many I have received, and it definitely should signify to those of us in Congress that some appropriate action be taken to prevent recurrences of strikes affecting these types of industries.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it resolved, That Senator ANDREW F. SCHOEPPEL of Kansas be informed that by a majority vote of the Greensburg Chamber of Commerce, Greensburg, Kans., at an advertised meeting held on July 14, 1950, urges that some form of legislation be enacted whereby the public interest be protected in case of strikes that affect our transportation systems, public utilities, and communication systems; that in passing this resolution the chamber of commerce recognizes the rights of individuals as well as employees of such systems and that the rights of both must be protected; that the chamber of commerce believes the rights of the public are paramount in the matter of the transportation of grain, live stock, farm commodities, and mail and also in the matter of heat, light, power, and public health; that our national economy not be permitted to be endangered by such strikes.

STATEHOOD FOR HAWAII AND ALASKA—COMMUNICATION FROM INTERRACIAL FEDERATION OF MILWAUKEE COUNTY, WIS.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I received this morning from W. J. Doyle, president of the Interracial Federation of Milwaukee County, Wis., an important communication concerning the interrelationship between the present war in Korea and America's relations with Oriental peoples. Obviously one of the key considerations in the proposed statehood legislation for Hawaii and Alaska endorsed by the federation is the matter of the impact on our foreign policy of United States granting of statehood—the effect of our action in terms of cementing our relationships with the peoples of Asia. Of course, there are many other considerations, strategic, military, and otherwise, which must necessarily go into making a decision on the two statehood bills. I believe, however, that this communication from the federation will be of general interest and so I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the body of the RECORD to be followed thereafter by a listing of the officers of the federation, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERRACIAL FEDERATION OF MILWAUKEE COUNTY,
Milwaukee, Wis., July 18, 1950.

Hon. Senator ALEXANDER WILEY,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILEY: In view of the current situation in the Orient including the war in Korea and the unrest all along the eastern periphery of the Pacific, a great burden is placed on the American people and their Government to show their good faith to Asians. For a number of years now it has been the most important talking point by Communists to create discontent and hatred that the American people regard Asiatic people as inferior.

To give for once and for all the lie to this line of talk, the United States should at once take steps to grant statehood to Hawaii and Alaska.

Since 1920 Hawaii has been only a passive member of our American system of government. It is not democratic to deny the right of self-government to people who are otherwise so integrally a part of America. It would seem to us that the requests of the people of Hawaii have been too long ignored and that the time has arrived to recognize the rightful claims of the people to partnership.

Both political parties are committed to early statehood in their platforms. The strategic importance of the two Territories in a military sense cannot be ignored, but what is more important is the fact that full statehood will give the people throughout the entire Pacific Basin a knowledge that America has at last grown to her full stature as a member nation of the Pacific area.

We urge you to give your full support to getting the statehood bills up for a vote.

Cordially yours,
W. J. DOYLE, President.

(Officers: W. J. Doyle, president; Mrs. Webster Woodmansee, vice president; Mrs. Sophia Foreman, secretary; Miss Edwina Thomas, corresponding secretary-treasurer. Executive committee: Miss Dorothea Carter; Mrs. Vernice Gallimore; Robert George; Mrs. Josie Glover; Miss Jeanette Hayes; Father Claude Heithaus, S. J.; Miss Virginia Huebner; William V. Kelley; Father Franklyn J. Kennedy; Mrs. Manfred Landsberg; Mrs. Austin F. Lutter; Mrs. Fred Madison; Rev. W. J. G. McLin; Miss Marie Merkle; Mrs. Henry Mullen; Mrs. C. T. FINANCING OF STORE BUILDING AND MODERNIZATION—RESOLUTION OF NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL GROCERS

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference, and ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, a resolution adopted by the National Association of Retail Grocers, at Chicago, Ill., relating to financing of store building and modernization.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTION ADOPTED AT FIFTY-FIRST ANNUAL CONVENTION, NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETAIL GROCERS, JUNE 4 THROUGH 8, INCLUSIVE, 1950, NAVY PIER, CHICAGO, ILL.

FINANCING OF STORE BUILDING AND MODERNIZATION

Whereas the problem of adequately financing new food stores or modernizing present locations through present banking facilities is quite often impossible for most independent food retailers: Therefore be it

Resolved, at the Fifty-first Annual Convention of the National Association of Retail Grocers, in Chicago, Ill., June 4 to 8, 1950, That Congress be petitioned to pass adequate legislation to provide for the insurance, similar to the present Federal insurance on loans for home improvements, on a self-sustaining basis, and without cost to the taxpayers, of bank loans up to $50,000, repayable within 10 years; further

Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to all Members of Congress.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on February 28, 1949, Senate bill 1119 to authorize settlement for certain inequitable losses in pay sustained by officers of the commissioned services under the emergency economy legislation, and for other purposes, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Upon discussion at executive session of the Judiciary Committee on July 18, 1950, the committee considered that the subject matter of the bill was one which more properly came within the jurisdiction of the Armed Services Committee.

On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary I request that the committee be discharged from further consideration of the bill, and that it be referred to the Armed Services Committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on the Judiciary is discharged from further consideration of the bill, and it is referred to the Committee on the Armed Services.

REPLY BY SENATOR YOUNG TO CRITICISMS IN NORTH DAKOTA UNION-FARMER

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, the North Daktota Union Farmer in its issue of July 3, 1950, contains an article severely criticizing the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] and myself.

This was in connection with the vote by which the Senate adopted the conference report on H. R. 6567 (S. 2826).

I ask unanimous consent to have inserted as a part of my remarks the article from the North Dakota Union Farmer and my answer contained in a letter addressed to Mr. Bob Dugan, editor.

There being no objection, the article and Mr. YOUNG's reply were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BUTTON, BUTTON—WHERE WERE LANGER AND YOUNG WHEN THE SENATE VOTED ON CCC BILL?

While you're sitting on your tractor these days doing your summer fallowing, and pondering on the strange and devious ways of North Dakota politics, the Korean war, and the price of wheat, here's something that will keep you busy while you finish up the north quarter.

It has to do with politics, the price of wheat, and a couple of North Dakota Senators. And when you get done thinking about it, you'll begin to realize that politics and Senators and Congressmen are a pretty important part of your farming operation.

Here's the way this little story goes:

For 6 months Congress has been dingdonging around with the appropriation bill which will provide the necessary funds by which the Federal Government gives you farmers price support for your wheat. Under the present law (and it doesn't look now as if it will be changed in this Congress) the support floor isn't as high as we or you would like it to be. It's set for 1950 to guarantee you about 80 percent of parity. It's too low, but it's better than no supports at all.

Now it isn't enough that Congress has passed a law saying that certain crops will be supported. Congress must also appropriate the money.

That's the appropriation we're talking about—the so-called $2,000,000,000 Commodity Credit Corporation bill. The House passed it some time ago.

Last week the $2,000,000,000 appropriation bill came up on the floor of the Senate. The Dixiecrats and the Republicans ganged up and when the vote was tallied—it ended in a tie. It took a nasty, old, liberal Democrat like Vice President BARKLEY to break the tie—in favor of the farmer. The farmers are now assured of at least 80-percent price supports on basic crops for 1950.

But wait. That's only half the story. This is where the story starts getting dirty.

While a nasty, old Roosevelt-New Deal-Fair Deal-Truman Democrat was breaking the tie, did you know where North Dakota's two great Republican agricultural Senators were?

Well it seems as if there was a primary election campaign coming on in North Dakota about that time. Mr. YOUNG was spending $10,000 and two sets of vocal cords telling the voters that he was not only a member of the powerful Senate Appropriations Committee, he was also a member of the equally powerful Senate Agricultural Committee. Yes, sir. No other North Dakota Senator could make that statement. As such, he was God's own gift to the American farmer—particularly the North Dakota farmers since they had the votes.

Two days before the primary election, just as Mr. YOUNG was getting a full head of steam on this great-man theme the papers announced the dramatic victory of how BARKLEY broke the Senate tie. At the bottom of the story it said: "YOUNG paired against."

Yes, Mr. YOUNG, junior Senator from North Dakota, one of the brave, liberal GOP turks, the champion of farm legislation, the proponent of high price supports—the dirt farmer from Berlin—was recorded "against" appropriating money for not 100-percent price supports, not even 90-percent price supports, but for 80-percent price supports.

Wait a minute. The story is not over yet. What about Mr. LANGER?

At the time this crucial piece of farm legislation came up on the Senate floor and when every vote in favor of the bill was so urgently needed, the senior Senator from North Dakota was out in the State campaigning for his great and good friend, Mr. Vogel. Usually when a Senator knows he is going to be absent when an important vote will be taken he arranges to "pair" with some other Senator who will be absent. At least, Mr. YOUNG was conscientious enough and had the courage to record his vote—though we believe there is no plausible excuse for his voting against the farmers. But Mr. LANGER did not even take the trouble to indicate whether he was for or against—and, since he did not vote, we must assume he was against the appropriation.

Both Mr. LANGER and Mr. YOUNG owe the farmers of this State an explanation of their vote or lack of vote on this important appropriation bill. Both talk glibly about being for the farmer—about how they are for high price supports. Today, more than ever before, we need those words backed up with action.

Last year North Dakota farm income dropped $225,000,000 from the 1948 level. So far this year North Dakota farm income is down another $40,000,000 from the 1949 level.

Mr. YOUNG is up for reelection this fall. Every Farmers Union member who sees Mr. YOUNG during his fall campaign should ask him about this vote. Mr. LANGER is up for reelection in a couple of years. He needs to explain his position also.

It all comes to this: That this business of politics, this business of keeping informed as to the record of our public figures, regardless of personal party loyalties and affiliations, is just as important to the farmer today as the actual job of farming itself.

In this particular instance, what good would it be to you as a farmer if you did harvest a good crop this fall, if that $2,000,000,000 CCC appropriation bill had failed to pass. With glut of wheat on the market and no price supports, you'd go bankrupt in a hurry on $1 wheat or less.

It's something to think about, isn't it?

JULY 14, 1950.

Mr. BOB DUGAN,
Editor, North Dakota Union Farmer,
Jamestown, N. Dak.

DEAR MR. DUGAN: This letter is in answer to your vicious and maliciously untruthful article attacking Senator LANGER and me in the July 3, 1950, issue of the North Dakota Union Farmer.

It is inconceivable to me that the editor of a publication primarily designed for farm readers could be so ignorant of legislative processes and the workings of the present farm program as this article makes you appear. Therefore, I can only conclude that the many misrepresentations were deliberate.

Three times in the course of this diatribe you flatly state that price supports on 1950 crops are based upon 80 percent of parity. As every one of your readers knows the true figure is 90 percent. You imply that I am opposed to high supports when, as a matter of fact, you have previously published the information that I was a joint sponsor of the Young-Russell amendment for 90 percent supports, a principle which was, in part, embodied in the Farm Act of 1949.

In the course of your article you tell your readers over and over again that I was "paired" against the $2,000,000,000 appropriation for CCC. In the first place, this was not an appropriation bill. It was a measure to increase the borrowing authority of CCC by $2,000,000,000. In the second place, as the record will show, I fought in the Senate Agriculture Committee, on the floor of the Senate, and in conference for this $2,000,000,000 increase. I opposed every crippling amendment, including the one offered by Senator WILLIAMS to reduce the borrowing authority by $1,000,000,000. My vote for the bill is recorded in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 6, 1950.

The "pair" which you have so grossly distorted was against adoption of the conference report on the measure. I had refused to sign this report, as a Senate conferee, because the so-called Magnuson-Morse amendment, inserted by the Senate to prevent a flood of importations of foreign farm commodities, was deleted in conference. My "pair" was to send the measure back to conference in the hope that the House conferees could be induced to yield on this vital point.

You assert that the Dixiecrats and the Republicans ganged up in an effort to defeat the CCC bill. Had you bothered to check the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 26, 1950, on page 9176, you would have discovered that not one southern Democrat voted against the adoption of the conference report. Southern agriculture, by and large, has not been injured by foreign importations as the North has.

The Magnuson-Morse amendment was a direct outgrowth of large importations of apples and nuts which wrecked the price of these commodities in the Pacific Northwest. It was supported by 16 of the major farm and producer organizations. It was supported by these organizations because they felt that the most important part of any farm program was to protect our markets against a flood of more cheaply produced foreign commodities. Producers of rye, potatoes, beef, nuts, pork, wool, and other commodities felt very keenly about the need for such a provision.

For your information—and I believe you would do well to absorb a considerable amount if you intend to attempt further interpretations of Washington developments—the Magnuson-Morse amendment was designed to make effective section 22 of the Agriculture Act. This is the section which permits the President of the United States to impose quotas or increase tariffs when importations of foreign farm commodities jeopardize domestic price-support programs.

During the 12-month period from May 1, 1949, through April 30, 1950, the United States imported great quantities of agricultural commodities from Canada and other countries, at a time when the cash price of these commodities was below support levels in the United States. Importations of rye and potatoes, particularly, had a disastrous effect on our market situation. The importation of 12,000,000 bushels of potatoes undoubtedly had a more depressing effect on our markets than even our own surplus. It would seem almost insane to import such huge quantities of potatoes when we were dumping millions of bushels of American-produced potatoes on the ground for fertilizer or other purposes. Had rye imports even been curtailed, with our extremely short rye crop last year prices would have been far above support levels and would have required no price-support program whatever.

You could not have been entirely ignorant of the rye situation, Mr. Dugan, inasmuch as the Farmers Union Herald of St. Paul has specifically called to the attention of its readers the fact that American rye requirements are being virtually filled by importations from Canada. The fact of the matter is that United States rye was going into storage under the price-support program while we were importing 10,095,000 bushels of Canadian rye. These importations were more than half of our total production.

Under these circumstances, I have no apology for supporting wholeheartedly the Magnuson-Morse amendment to the CCC bill. This proposal would have directed the Secretary of Agriculture—who is to my mind the responsible official—to initiate the investigation whenever foreign importations threatened the domestic farm price-support program. The Secretary would then report his recommendations to the President who then could invoke quotas or tariffs. In my opinion, this would have insured speedier and more certain action to halt imports.

At the same time, the Magnuson-Morse amendment would have prevented further international agreements or extension of existing agreements which did not reserve the right of this country to invoke section 22. This provision is vital to the protection of American agricultural interests.

For years foreign wool has supplied approximately two-thirds of United States requirements. Simple tariff protection would have been all the farmers needed to maintain decent price levels for wool. Failing to accomplish this, a wool price-support program became a necessity.

For your further information, I am a co-author and co-sponsor of the present CCC Charter Act. Among the provisions of the act is the present authority to borrow $4,750,000,000 from the United States Treasury to support farm prices. I supported the $2,000,000,000 increase in borrowing authority, even though I do not feel that the additional funds will be required for some time. Nearly $1,000,000,000 of CCC funds were still uncommitted and the prices of many commodities were above support levels.

As a farmer, it never occurred to me before becoming a Member of the United States Senate that anyone working in the interests of agriculture would not only have to fight opponents of farm legislation such as the grain trade, but would even have to battle the editor of a publication ostensibly devoted to the improvement of agricultural conditions. Could it be that you are so narrow in your partisan views that you can see no merit in anything done by a Republican, whether he be of the ROC or Nonpartisan League group?

The recent election returns demonstrate rather well, I believe, that your narrow views on candidates and policies are not shared by many people in North Dakota.

Sincerely yours,

MILTON R. YOUNG,
United States Senator.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATIONS IN THE ARMED SERVICES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Chair whether it would be in order to ask unanimous consent to have certain routine nominations for promotions in the Army, Navy, and Air Force considered as in executive session at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair supposes it is in order to ask unanimous consent.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that certain routine nominations for promotion in the Army, Navy, and Air Force, which I am reporting favorably from the Committee on Armed Services, be considered and approved. All these nominations are reported by the committee unanimously, no objections having been heard. They are all routine nominations, and for the most part from colonel on down, and, so far as I recall, not any high-ranking officers are involved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator whether all the nominations are within the armed services, or are there civilian nominations also?

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall have to refresh my memory. My recollection is that the nominations cover solely promotions of persons in uniform. If I am in error, I hope some Senator will correct me; but in going over the list, I see that I am correct.

Mr. WHERRY. If that is the case, and the nominations are routine, and if this action will save a printing bill, I acquiesce, as I always do in such cases.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the nominations will be considered, and, without objection, they are confirmed en bloc.

THE METAL MINING INDUSTRY AND THE PRESENT CRISIS—LETTER FROM SENATOR McCARRAN

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, in view of the President's message to the Congress this week with reference to our preparations for any eventuality that might grow out of the Korean crisis, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter I have written to the President of the United States concerning this country's metal-mining industry.

It is my considered judgment that those in control of the strategic and critical metal mines which supply materials so vital to a synchronized industrial machine, should be informed what demands may be made upon them in the event of total war, which we pray will never come. I have tried to set forth some of the problems the metal-mining industry faces today; and for which it is seeking answers.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE, COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS,
July 20, 1950.

HON. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
President of the United States,
The White House,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I want to bring to you a message from the metal-mining industry, that it is ready and willing to do any job it may be called upon to do as a result of the Korean conflict, or any future eventualities that might be thrust upon this Nation.

This country's mining operators and miners are awaiting some advice from you, Mr. President, and the National Security Resources Board, as to how they might best make preparations to gear themselves for their all-important job.

I need not remind you that during the last war our domestic metal supply played a role second to none in winning victory. Although these metal producers are anxious to assist in every way possible, I want to explain that the relative health of this industry is considerably worse than it was in 1940, insofar as the ability to produce is concerned.

Statistics available to me show that exploration and development of metal mines, other than iron, today show a drastic decline. In the event of total war, 98 percent of the industry would be in a worse condition than it was in 1940, and 30 percent of it would be in a most deplorable condition. Only a few of the open-pit copper mines would be as well off as in the years prior to World War II.

Exploration for the critical metals—copper, lead, and zinc—has declined by 57 percent, while exploration for strategic metals—manganese, tungsten, antimony, and quicksilver—has declined 96 percent.

As illustrative of the retrenchment of western mining activity, the number of operating underground metal mines from the period 1940 to 1949 has decreased 76 percent in California, 89 percent in Utah, 95 percent in Oregon, and 66⅔ percent in Nevada. The number of skilled miners has likewise dropped proportionately.

These statistics can show only that greater preparations must be made now than in 1940 if our metal-mining industry is to meet demands placed upon it. Without these metals we would have no steel industry, no jet engines, no poison gas, no storage batteries, no electric lights, no radio tubes, no guided missiles, no antiatomic weapons. In the event foreign sources of the strategic and critical metals should be cut off due to submarine warfare, these mines would be what the military calls the strategic reserve upon which we would have to rely.

May I urge upon you, Mr. President, that the metal-mining industry be permitted to have its task outlined to it in as specific terms as possible so it can prepare, and prepare now. As a manufacturing plant must take time to tool up, so must a mine make lengthy preparations before the actual metal becomes available for planes, tanks, and guns.

Another subject I feel honor bound to mention is the future of gold and silver producers. During the last war, War Production Board order L-208 was handed down without consultation with the precious metal producers. This arbitrary ultimatum, while designed to aid our war effort, affected mines that could not possibly have been a deterrent in any way to our industrial effort. It was later admitted that the order was hasty and probably ill-advised. Today our gold and silver mines have not recovered from that order that closed down their operations. Many never will recover, since shafts and tunnels are filled with water and the gold and silver is lost forever.

The precious-metal mining industry asks only, Mr. President, that if any need for such an order is believed to exist for any reason in the future, the industry be consulted in order that it may explain its position. It wants to be heard before a guilty verdict is handed down.

I will await any information that you may provide to me on the above matters, which I deem to be so important to the future welfare of our country.

My kindest personal regards and all best wishes,

Sincerely,

PAT MCCARRAN,
United States Senator.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CALL OF CALENDAR ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I should like to make an announcement. Before doing so I wish to state that I am fully in accord with the desire of the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee to move forward as rapidly as possible with the unfinished business, the omnibus appropriation bill. I may state in that connection that I have taken up with the distinguished minority leader the question of working out some kind of agreement in regard to limitation of debate on that bill beginning next week. I am hopeful that such an agreement may be reached.

It is the intention of the majority to ask that the unfinished business, the appropriation bill, be laid aside temporarily next Wednesday for the call of the calendar. It is necessary to announce in advance the time for the call of the calendar so that Senators will know when they can count on the calendar being called, I make the announcement now, and if there should be any change in the plan, further announcement will be made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to make a suggestion to the majority and minority leaders in connecnection with working out some sort of system whereby we may make progress with the appropriation bill. My suggestion is that debate be restricted perhaps to 15 minutes or 10 minutes by any Senator on each amendment prior to 4 o'clock, let us say, of each day, and that after 4 o'clock other matters may be considered.

Mr. McFARLAND. Evidently the distinguished Senator from Colorado has been reading our minds, because that is what we have been discussing, except we have considered 5 o'clock to be the proper time at which to proceed to other matters.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That suits me better.

Mr. McFARLAND. I hope we can work out an acceptable plan. I shall not propound a unanimous-consent request now.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the acting majority leader announced that on next Wednesday the unfinished business will be laid aside temporarily and that the calendar will be called.

Mr. McFARLAND. A request will be made to lay aside temporarily the unfinished business on that day for the purpose indicated.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand. If the unfinished business is laid aside on next Wednesday, is it intended to begin calling the calendar at the point where we left off the last time, or will the calendar be called from its beginning? If the latter action is proposed, it would make some difference.

Mr. McFARLAND. That will be announced later.

Mr. McFARLAND subsequently said: Mr. President, it will be our intention to ask that the calendar be called from the place at which we left off at the last call, and also to include a few bills which are listed as to which objections have been withdrawn.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is already a list in existence containing eight or ten bills which will come under that designation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I understood it was the Senator's intention to request a call of the calendar on Wednesday. If the calendar is called during the consideration of the appropriation bill, it will be next Wednesday, and we can be assured of that. Is that correct?

Mr. McFARLAND. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Are there any further routine matters to be presented?

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, I am trying to obtain the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New York is seeking recognition to make a speech. The Chair is not in position at the moment to recognize the Senator for that purpose. He will do so later.

THE MERIT CO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1027) for the relief of the Merit Co., which was on page 1, line 6, strike out "$47,427" and insert "$31,612.39."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a private relief bill, passed by the Senate last year. As it passed the Senate, the bill authorized the payment of $47,427. In the House of Representatives, the bill was delayed for many months, and during that period a supplemental report was submitted by the Navy Department. On the basis of this supplemental report, the House has amended the bill so as to reduce the amount allowed to the claimant to $31,612.

I have been informed that the sponsor of the bill, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] will be satisfied if the Senate accepts the House amendment. Accordingly, it does not appear to be necessary to send the bill to conference, and I now move that the Senate concur in the House amendment to the bill S. 1027.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES FOR DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2864) to authorize certain administrative expenses for the Department of Justice, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 15, strike out "marshals," and insert "marshals and"; on page 2, line 15, after "attorneys,", insert "and at the request and in behalf of the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts those of the"; on page 4, strike out lines 6 to 12, inclusive; on page 4, line 13, strike out "SEC. 8." and insert "SEC. 7.", and on page 4, line 18, strike out "SEC. 9." and insert "SEC. 8."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the purpose of this bill is to enact into substantive law authorization for certain items that frequently recur in the appropriation act dealing with administrative expenses incurred by the Department of Justice.

The bill consists of a total of nine sections, each one of which furnishes the necessary authorization in substantive law to support a specific part of an appropriation. In the past such appropriations have been supported solely by legislative language contained in the annual appropriation act for the Justice Department. Such legislative language in an appropriation bill is always subject to a point of order. The new policy is to put the legislative language on the statute books outside the appropriation bill.

This bill passed the House July 10, 1950, with certain amendments which are explained fully in House Report 2309.

Only two substantive amendments were made by the House. The first of these is designed to preserve the present authority of the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts. Failure to include this provision in the bill as originally submitted by the Justice Department to the Senate was an oversight on the part of the Justice Departmnet, and that Department now concedes that this provision should be in the bill.

The other substantive amendment made by the House is to strike out section 7 as superfluous, on the ground that the same subject matter is adequately covered by Public Law 285, Eighty-first Congress, chapter 535. This section was left in the bill as it passed the Senate, because it was believed that the section was slightly broader than Public Law 285, Eighty-first Congress. The Department of Justice now feels that the bill should pass with this section deleted.

Accordingly, I now move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the first change has to do with replacing in the bill the appropriation for the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts; is that correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Why was that left out in the first place?

Mr. McCARRAN. The Department of Justice left it out when it sent the bill to us. It was left out by oversight by the Department.

Mr. WHERRY. Of course, the Senator is not referring to a conference report, but to two House amendments to a bill passed by the Senate. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. These amendments, if enacted, will be substantive law, will they not?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me inquire about the other amendment made by the House of Representatives, and the difference between the bill as passed by the Senate and the bill as passed by the House. As I understand, the Senate broadened the authority.

Mr. McCARRAN. The other substantive amendment made by the House is to strike out section 7 as superfluous, on the ground that the same subject matter is adequately covered by Public Law 285, Eighty-first Congress, chapter 535. This section was left in the bill as it passed the Senate, because it was believed that the section was slightly broader than Public Law 285, Eighty-first Congress. The Department of Justice now feels that the bill should pass with this section deleted.

Mr. WHERRY. Can the Senator tell us how the Senate version of the bill was broader than the House version of the bill?

Mr. McCARRAN. Merely in giving a little broader scope, which it is now felt is unnecessary.

Mr. WHERRY. So if the House amendment is adopted, that provision will be deleted from the bill; and Public Law 285 will govern; and there is to be no change in that respect. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARRAN. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection——

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I was unavoidably detained, and had to enter the Chamber late. Let me ask to what subject this matter relates.

Mr. McCARRAN. It relates to Senate bill 2864, which passed the Senate, after having been reported from the committee of which the able Senator from North Dakota is a member. The bill relates to the administrative expenses of the Department of Justice.

Mr. LANGER. I have no objection.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I now renew my motion that the Senate concur in the House amendments to Senate bill 2864.

The motion was agreed to.

AMY A. TAYLOR AND MYRNA TAYLOR

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1049) for the relief of Amy Alexandrovna Taylor and Myrna Taylor," which was, on page 2, line 5, after "residence", insert "upon the payment of the required visa fees and head taxes."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on June 8, 1950, the Senate passed Senate bill 1049, a private immigration bill. The House has amended the bill to make provision for the payment of the required visa fees and head taxes, which is in accordance with established precedents in this type of case.

Accordingly, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS N. EPIPHANIADES AND WANDA J. EPIPHANIADES

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1792) for the relief of Thomas Nicholas Epiphaniades and Wanda Julia Epiphaniades, which was on page 1, line 8, after "1948" insert ", upon the payment of the required visa fees and head taxes."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on June 8, 1950, the Senate passed Senate bill S. 1792, a private immigration bill. The House has amended the bill to make provision for the payment of the required visa fees and head taxes. This is in accordance with established precedents in this type of case.

Accordingly, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

TEVFIK KAMIL KUTAY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2243) for the relief of Tevfik Kamil Kutay, which was on page 2, line 2, after "entry" insert ", upon the payment of the required visa fee and head tax."

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on April 19, 1950, the Senate passed S. 2243, for the relief of one Kutay. This is a private immigration bill. The House has amended the bill to make provision for the payment of the required visa fee and head tax, which is in accordance with established precedents in this type of case. Accordingly, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OF FEDERAL DEPOSIT INSURANCE ACT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2822) to amend the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (U. S. C., title 12, sec. 264), which were, on page 12, strike out lines 10 and 11, and insert "drafts drawn by it on deposit accounts in other banks which are issued in the regular course of business; and the amount of any advices or authorizations, issued by it for cash letters received, directing that its deposit account in the sending bank be charged with the amount thereof;"; on page 12, line 22, after "one", insert "semiannual"; on page 14, line 24, strike out "1949, and" and insert "1950, and as of December 31, of"; on page 15, line 5, after the word "bank", insert "becoming due"; on page 15, line 5, strike out "Such credits" and insert "Each year such credit"; on page 15, line 7, strike out "assessments" and insert "assessment"; on page 15, line 8, after "July 1", insert "and any excess credit shall be applied upon the assessment next becoming due"; on page 24, line 23, strike out all after "States." over to an including "brought." in line 2, page 25; on page 26, line 24, strike out all after "to" over to and including "bank" in line 9, page 27, and insert "examine any insured bank, any bank making application to become an insured bank, and any closed insured bank, whenever in the judgment of the Board of Directors an examination of the bank is necessary"; on page 31, line 18, strike out "proof of" and insert "admissible to prove"; on page 33, line 11, after "bank," insert "or of any noninsured national bank or District bank hereafter closed,"; on page 35, line 15, strike out "and subject to withdrawal on demand"; on page 45, line 9, strike out all after "the" down to and including "closing" in line 10, where it appears the first time, and insert "Board of Directors deems it necessary"; on page 45, line 10, strike out "such closing" and insert "the closing of an insured bank"; on page 45, line 13, strike out "or make deposits in,"; on page 45, line 14, strike out all after "prescribe" down to and including "community" in line 17; on page 45, line 17, strike out "and deposits"; on page 47, after line 15, insert:

No agreement which tends to diminish or defeat the right, title, or interest of the Corporation in any asset acquired by it under this section, either as security for a loan or by purchase, shall be valid against the Corporation unless such agreement (1) shall be in writing, (2) shall have been executed by the bank and the person or persons claiming an adverse interest thereunder, including the obligor, contemporaneously with the acquisition of the asset by the bank, (3) shall have been approved by the board of directors of the bank or its loan committee, which approval shall be reflected in the minutes of said board or committee, and (4) shall have been, continuously, from the time of its execution, an official record of the bank.

On page 47, line 17, strike out "out of its capital account."; on page 47, line 18, strike out "and the Federal Reserve banks, respectively,"; on page 47, line 21, strike out "such" and insert "the Federal Reserve"; on page 47, line 22, after "repaid," insert "The amount payable hereunder shall be considered as operating costs and expenses of the Corporation in determining the net assessment income under section 7 (d) of this act."; on page 52, line 16, strike out "in advertisements relating to deposits."; on page 52, lines 16 and 17, strike out "statement," and insert "statement"; on page 52, line 18, after "poration", insert "in all of its advertisements: Provided, That the Board of Directors may exempt from this requirement advertisements which do not relate to deposits or when it is impractical to include such statement therein"; on page 57, line 19, after "SEC. 3.", insert "a)"; on page 58, after line 10, insert:

(b) The eleventh paragraph of section 709, title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding the following new sentence at the end thereof "The use of the contraction 'Federal Savings Insurance Corporation' or the initials 'F. S. I. C.' shall not be construed as a violation of this section."

(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall become effective on January 1, 1951.

And on page 59, after line 3, insert:

SEC. 5. Subsection (b) of section 405 of Title IV of the National Housing Act, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) In the event of a default by any insured institution, payment of each insured account in such insured institution which is surrendered and transferred to the Corporation shall be made by the Corporation as soon as possible either (1) by cash or (2) by making available to each insured member a transferred account in a new insured institution in the same community or in another insured institution in an amount equal to the insured account of such insured member: Provided, That the Corporation, in its discretion, may require proof of claims to be filed before paying the insured accounts, and that in any case where the Corporation is not satisfied as to the validity of a claim for an insured account, it may require the final determination of a court of competent jurisdiction before paying such claim."

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAYBANK. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does the bill deal with the FDIC?

Mr. MAYBANK. The bill deals with the FDIC, yes. It is the proposal for an increase of guaranty of bank deposits from $5,000 to $10,000.

Mr. LANGER. I am interested in the $65,000,000 which it is alleged was taken out of this fund. Can the distinguished Senator tell me what happened to that?

Mr. MAYBANK. I will say that that is what I want to find out. We are going to have a conference on it, I may say to the Senator from North Dakota, to see if we can iron out the differences between the two Houses, and when the conference report is made I shall certainly notify the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I thank the Senator from South Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion is a privileged one. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. TOBEY, and Mr. FLANDERS the conferees on the part of the Senate.

LOUIS P. MURPHY

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives announcing its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3506) for the relief of Louis P. Murphy, United States immigrant inspector, El Paso, Tex., and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, this is a private bill for the relief of a United States immigration inspector of El Paso, Tex., who lost his personal effects, and Mexican pesos to the value of 500 American dollars, when the automobile in which he was traveling to his post of duty in Mexico was totally destroyed by fire.

The total amount of the bill as originally passed by the House was $725.50. The Senate reduced the amount to $225. The reduction represented the $500 in Mexican currency stated by the claimant to have been in a suitcase which burned up when the car burned. It was the opinion of the Senate committee, in which the Senate apparently concurred, that in the absence of affidavits definitely establishing that the cash actually was in the suitcase which was destroyed, the bill should be amended to the reduced amount. Since the Senate's action on the bill, affidavits have been received which do establish that this currency was in the suitcase and did burn. It is believed, therefore, that a conference would simply result in the Senate receding from its amendment. Accordingly, instead of asking that the Senate agree to the conference asked by the House, I now move that the Senate recede from its amendment to the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the amount of money involved?

Mr. McCARRAN. The amount is $725.50.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the rescission?

Mr. McCARRAN. We recede from the amendment reducing the amount $500.

Mr. WHERRY. Which brings the amount up to $725.50?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 91) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens, which were, on page 2, strike out line 1, and on page 22, after line 4, insert:

[redacted], Bakker, John or John Cornelius Bakker or John C. Bakker or John Baker or Jan Bakker.

[redacted], Contis, Eleni Constantine nee Paschalis.

[redacted], Friedmann, Ernest.

[redacted], Friedmann, Alzbeta nee Gottesmann.

[redacted], Kuo, Ching Tsiu or Kuo Gin Chiu or Helena Gin Chiu Kuo.

[redacted], Linguista, Antonio Luigi.

[redacted], Lutschewitz, Anna Marie Elizabeth nee Elfner.

[redacted], Rinde, Oistein.

[redacted], Tsolainos, Mariongouls T. nee Coumarianos or Mariongoula Vardakas.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the House has amended Senate Concurrent Resolution 91. This is a resolution dealing with the suspension of deportation of certain aliens. One House amendment strikes out the name of one alien, in a case which has been withdrawn by the Attorney General, and the House has added the names of nine additional aliens. These names have been checked, and the individuals named appear to be properly eligible for this relief.

Accordingly, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments to Senate Concurrent Resolution 91.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I do not quite understand how it is that one name has been stricken from the resolution and nine have been added.

Mr. McCARRAN. The House has a right to strike out names and to add others, and when they add others those names come back to the Senate committee for screening.

Mr. WHERRY. That has been done, and the Senator is satisfied with the screening?

Mr. McCARRAN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF CERTAIN ALIENS

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 95) favoring the suspension of deportation of certain aliens, which were on page 25, strike out line 5, and on page 32, after line 20, to insert:

[redacted], Bortolotto, Paoli.

[redacted], Calovich, Mary or Mara Abram alias Mary Car.

[redacted], Didner, Samuel.

[redacted], Edquid, Arturo M. or Arturo Maatubank Edquid.

[redacted], Livanos, Arietta Stavros nee Zafirakis.

[redacted], Mondillo, Giovanni Battista alias Giuseppe Battista Mondilla or Gio Batta Mondillo.

[redacted], Tonseth, Johanna Katharina Flood.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, the House has amended Senate Concurrent Resolution 95. The amendments strike out the name of an alien in a case which has been withdrawn by the Attorney General, and adds the names of seven additional aliens.

It is recommended by the committee staff and by the committee that the Senate concur in the House amendments. We have screened these additional aliens, and concur in the House amendments.

I therefore move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The motion was agreed to.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Arizona. The appropriation bill which is now before the Senate, in the items dealing with the Bureau of Reclamation, has abandoned the form which was used in prior years, so that individual projects are not mentioned.

Mr. HAYDEN. That change was made at the suggestion of the House of Representatives. What appear in the bill now are lump sums. In order to obtain a break-down of the lump sum, one must examine the House committee report and the Senate committee report.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to have the attention of the minority leader, also, please.

Last year when we passed the Interior Department appropriation bill, it contained two legislative limitations upon the expenditure of funds which were appropriated for the Missouri River Basin. The first of these was one upon which the junior Senator from Nebraska and the present speaker agreed with respect to the Glendo unit. That amendment reads as follows, being a provision of the existing appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1950:

Provided further, That in order to promote agreement among the States of Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado and to avoid any possible alteration of existing vested water rights, no part of this or of any prior appropriation shall be used for construction or for further commitment for construction of the Glendo unit or any feature thereof, until a definite plan report thereon has been completed, reviewed by the States of Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado and approved by Congress: Provided further, That no part of this or prior appropriations shall be used for construction, nor for further commitments to construction of Moorhead Dam and Reservoir, Montana, or any feature thereof until a definite plan report thereon has been completed, reviewed by the States of Wyoming and Montana, and approved by the Congress:

Mr. President, the purpose of the two amendments was to provide that since the streams involved are interstate streams, there should be, in the spirit of the existing law, complete agreement between the Bureau of Reclamation, representing the Federal Government, and the States affected, before any expenditure should be made for either of these units.

The definite plan report and the review and the approval required of Congress have not been had in either case. Nevertheless, a reading of these two amendments will show that they refer only to limitations on the appropriations carried in the appropriation bill for 1950 and prior appropriations. In order to make a proper legislative enactment, there should now be an amendment to this bill providing that no part of this appropriation shall be expended for either purpose. But inasmuch as last year's bill required the preparation of a definite plan and report, to be submitted to the States and to be approved by Congress, it will not be necessary.

Mr. HAYDEN. I was about to suggest that, since the Senators from Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado were in perfect accord last year, nothing should be done until the authorities in their several States have had an opportunity to examine and agree to these matters. Obviously the Bureau of Reclamation should spend no money for the units referred to by the Senator from Wyoming, until the States have satisfied themselves. I do not think it is necessary to incorporate such a provision in the bill, because the understanding is perfectly clear. It was expressed here on the floor that it should be binding on the Reclamation Service.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am satisfied that by the legislative recognition of this situation, and in view of the legislative history of the matter, the Bureau of Reclamation will recognize what we are doing, just as the Bureau has always regarded a statement in a report as being a directive to be followed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Obviously, if the directive of last year could not be complied with within the time available, and the States have not had an opportunity to examine into this matter, nothing should be done, on the face of it, until an understanding is arrived at.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I think we appreciate the action of the Senator from Wyoming in calling attention to this provision. It apparently is not in the bill. I deeply appreciate the remarks of the chairman, with whom I am in entire agreement. I am also in agreement with the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. I hope there will be no objection, since it was done last year. Personally, if there is no objection, I should like to see this language included in the bill. My reason for it is that there has been a great deal of question as to whether a committee report governs in such cases. That question has been raised on the Senate floor and discussed at length in the consideration of the Interior Department appropriation bill. I appreciate the legislative history which is being made now, upon which there is absolutely complete accord. In view of the fact that all the States went to such length and a compromise was reached, on which they are in total agreement, even though it be legislation on an appropriation bill, since it was included in an appropriation bill once, I wonder whether the distinguished Senator from Wyoming will prepare the amendment and offer it for insertion in the bill. That is the least we can do. If it is thrown out on a point of order, we can do nothing about that, but at least I should prefer to have it in the bill.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I personally believe that is the proper way of accomplishing what is desired. I believe the most expeditious way of handling it then is for me to ask unanimous consent, inasmuch as this is a legislative matter, that a legislative amendment may be added to this bill, providing that no part of the current appropriation may be expended for the purposes set forth, with respect to the Glendo unit and the Moorhead unit in the appropriation bill for 1950.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, what the Senator is now proposing is that we repeat the text of last year's bill, is it not?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Exactly.

Mr. WHERRY. Then if any Senator wants to object to it or to debate it, he will have a perfect right to do so. But certainly I shall not object to such a unanimous-consent proposal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is the Senator from Wyoming proposing to make it a part of the bill?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his request.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My request is for unanimous consent to insert in this bill the complete text of the two amendments which were approved by the Congress last year with respect to the Glendo unit and the Moorhead unit in the Missouri River appropriation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the Senator's offering such an amendment, which is an amendment to perfect the bill? The Chair hears none. Will the Senator send his amendment to the desk to be stated?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the amendment which I propose will be found marked on pages 21 and 22 of the appropriation bill for 1950. I ask that these two amendments be now stated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is the amendment in the exact form of the amendment which was inserted in the bill last year?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. They will be stated by the clerk precisely as they appear in the present law.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. At the proper place in the bill, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That in order to promote agreement among the States of Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado, and to avoid any possible alteration of existing vested water rights, no part of this or of any prior appropriation shall be used for construction or for further commitment for construction of the Glendo unit, or any feature thereof, until a definite plan report thereon has been completed, reviewed by the States of Nebraska, Wyoming, and Colorado, and approved by Congress: Provided further, That no part of this or prior appropriations shall be used for construction, nor for further commitments to construction, of Moorhead Dam and Reservoir, Mont., or any feature thereof, until a definite plan report thereon has been completed, reviewed by the States of Wyoming and Montana, and approved by the Congress.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, on page 152 of the report which was submitted by the Appropriations Committee on the Interior Department appropriation bill, there is a proviso, to which my colleague, the junior Senator from Wyoming, and I have both agreed, which reads as follows:

KEYHOLE DAM, WYO.

The 1951 estimate for this project appears under phase A in the amount of $3,179,000, which has been allowed by the committee. However, representations have been made to the committee that the water supply on the Belle Fourche River is such that under the Wyoming-South Dakota compact of February 18, 1943, it may be difficult to fill this proposed reservoir. Under the terms of the compact between the two States, there is no limitation upon the number of small reservoirs which may be built in Wyoming. It is the opinion of the committee that a comprehensive study of the future water supply should be made before construction is undertaken.

Mr. President, this matter has been the subject of a great deal of consideration by the water authorities of the State of Wyoming. I have in my hand a letter from the State engineer, Mr. L. C. Bishop, together with a photostatic copy of a letter which he received from District Engineer Francis M. Bell, of the Geological Survey of the Department of the Interior, with respect to this matter. There is no question that under the compact between the two States, Wyoming has the right to build these small reservoirs. What the effect may be upon the water supply, I do not pretend to know. Some residents of the State say that there will not be sufficient water. But the State engineer of Wyoming writes me, in this letter, as follows:

The enclosed copy of a letter received recently from Mr. Francis M. Bell, district engineer, United States Geological Survey, Denver, Colo., is self-explanatory. This information from Mr. Bell was at the request of Mr. James Munro, of Sheridan, who represents some of the landowners above Keyhole dam site, and who insists that there will be no water for the reservoir because under the Belle Fourche River compact, all of it will be held back in stock reservoirs. I do not agree with Mr. Munro on this.

I ask unanimous consent that the entire text of the State engineer's letter may be printed as a part of my remarks. I read it, because I want to emphasize the essential nature of the recommendation made in the committee's report, that the Bureau of Reclamation undertake a close scrutiny of this water supply before any construction is initiated.

There being no objection, the letter, with its enclosure, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF WYOMING,
STATE ENGINEER'S OFFICE,
Cheyenne, July 5, 1950.

Hon. JOSEPH C. O'MAHONEY,
Senator from Wyoming,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR JOE: This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of July 1 with reference to the water supply for the Keyhole Reservoir.

It is my own opinion based on a review of the report of the United States Bureau of Reclamation, the records of the United States Geological Survey and my own knowledge of the water shed above Keyhole Dam site that the average flow above the dam will average between 20,000 and 26,000 acre-feet per year.

The enclosed copy of a letter received recently from Mr. Francis M. Bell, district engineer, United States Geological Survey, Denver, Colo., is self-explanatory. This information from Mr. Bell was at the request of Mr. James Munro, of Sheridan, who represents some of the landowners above Keyhole Dam site, and who insists that there will be no water for the reservoir because under the Belle Fourche River compact, all of it will be held back in stock reservoirs. I do not agree with Mr. Munro on this.

The Bureau of Reclamation estimates the 1929–47 average runoff of the Belle Fourche River above Keyhole Dam at 28,500 acre-feet with a maximum of 243,000 acre-feet in 1929, and a minimum of 3,100 acre-feet in 1934.

In a stream with such large variation in its runoff, a large capacity reservoir is necessary as you know to hold over irrigation water for the short years and control the floods if and when they come.

Since you have a copy of the definite plan report of the Keyhole unit, Cheyenne division, South Dakota, Missouri River Basin project, I will conclude by saying that our office is in general agreement with this report although we do believe that the height of the water level of the dam could well be reduced 10 feet, and thus save a million dollars or more in the cost of construction. This we agree will impair the flood-control value to a great extent, and also reduce the carry-over capacity, which, according to past records, will be needed. We urged this at the hearing in Moorcroft, but the Bureau officials did not see fit to make this change.

As you know in allowing the permit, we required an outlet to be constructed at the bottom of the pool and a compromise was later made with the Bureau officials whereby a 24-inch outlet may be placed at elevation 4,034 or 14 feet above the bottom of the pool, and about 1,000 acre-feet of water held as dead storage. The original plan proposed a dead storage of about 10,000 acre-feet.

Yours very truly,

L. C. BISHOP,
State Engineer.

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GEOLOGICAL SURVEY,
Denver, Colo., June 5, 1950.

Mr. L. C. BISHOP,
State Engineer, Cheyenne, Wyo.

DEAR MR. BISHOP: I am sending to Mr. Eisenhuth at Sheridan a copy of your letter of May 31 relative to average flow of the Belle Fourche River and by copy of this letter am suggesting that he obtain a series of comparative measurements at the Moorcroft gage and at the Keyhole Dam site. Since the Moorcroft gage is located at the upper end of the proposed reservoir, it is my personal opinion that measurements will show no decided increase in flow between the gage and the dam site unless there are some spring-fed streams in the intervening area. Apparently the additional area involved is less than 200 square miles.

Unfortunately, the Moorcroft record itself is too short to permit any accurate determination of average annual discharge. The Moorcroft record is in two periods, the first of which is broken. During the second period the gage was at a different location. The longest record in that part of Wyoming is on the Powder River at Arvada, and although that is a much larger stream it seems reasonable to assume that over a period of time both streams would behave in a similar manner. On this assumption, average discharge may be computed for each period of record for Moorcroft and for the two periods considered as one. The calculations are as follows:

FIRST PERIOD

Average discharge Moorcroft, 1924–32 equals 79 cubic feet per second.

Average discharge Arvada, 1924–32 equals 534 cubic feet per second.

Average discharge Arvada, 1916–49 equals 426 cubic feet per second.

Computed Moorcroft, 1916–49 equals 63 cubic feet per second equals 45,500 Af. (approximate).

SECOND PERIOD

Average discharge Moorcroft, 1944–49 equals 25.5 cubic feet per second.

Average discharge Arvada, 1944–49 equals 330 cubic feet per second.

Average discharge Arvada, 1916–49 equals 426 cubic feet per second.

Computed Moorcroft, 1916–49 equals 33 cubic feet per second equals 23,900 Af. (approximate).

BOTH PERIODS

Average discharge Moorcroft, 1924–32, 1944–49 equals 56 cubic feet per second.

Average discharge Arvada, 1924–32, 1944–49 equals 447 cubic feet per second.

Average discharge Arvada, 1916–49 equals 428 cubic feet per second.

Computed Moorcroft, 1916–49 equals 53 cubic feet per second equals 39,400 Af. (approximate).

The wide range in these values indicates that the original assumption is not entirely correct. However, it seems reasonable to assume that the longer the period of comparison the more accurate would be the result. On this basis the average Moorcroft discharge would be 39,400 acre-feet. It should be pointed out, however, that included in this figure are 2 years of extremely high run-off. If those 2 years were not considered, the figure would be reduced to 22,200 acre-feet which closely approximates the figure obtained by using only the last 6 years of record. Thus, it would appear that the true average annual discharge is somewhere between 22,000 and 39,000 acre-feet.

In view of the influence on the average discharge of the extremely high run-off years of 1924 and 1929, another comparative study may be made using median discharge rather than mean. On this basis it may be determined that the median discharge (likely to occur 50 percent of the time) is about 21,500 acre-feet. Since this method is statistically incorrect this figure cannot be given full weight despite the fact that personal judgment indicates it may not be too far out of line.

Because of the short, broken record at Moorcroft a detailed analysis of precipitation-run-off relations would be required to obtain an idea of the correct annual discharge at the Keyhole dam site or at Moorcroft. Superficial studies of available streamflow records as shown above indicate that in an ordinary period of years run-off would average about 22,000 acre-feet. However, the occasional occurrence of an extraordinary wet year such as 1924 would greatly increase the average.

Information contained herein should be considered as preliminary and provisional. The results of comparative measurements may throw additional light on the subject.

Very truly yours,

FRANCIS M. BELL,
District Engineer.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, as the chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished Senator from Arizona, will recall, on pages 837 to 841 of the Senate hearings on the measure a justification was presented by the Bureau of Reclamation for the proposed development of a cooperative farm upon the Riverton project. Included in the testimony is a letter from President Humphrey, of the University of Wyoming. The letter sets forth the interest of the university in the establishment of a development farm on the Riverton project under a cooperative agreement with the Bureau of Reclamation, Soil Conservation Service, the Bureau of Plant Industry, Soils, and Agricultural Engineering, and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture.

I did not seek to offer any amendment, and I do not now, because the Reclamation Omnibus Adjustment Act, section 40, provides as follows:

Provided, That in connection with the settlement and development of each of these projects the Secretary of the Interior is authorized in his discretion to enter into agreements with the proper authorities of the State or States wherein said projects or divisions are located, whereby such State or States shall cooperate with the United States in promoting the settlement of the projects or divisions after completion and in the securing and selecting of settlers.

So I think the legislative authority is quite sufficient for such a cooperative agreement if the State authorities and the Bureau of Reclamation see fit to carry it out. It is an agreement which I heartily recommend. The Riverton project is one of the most productive and one of the oldest under the reclamation law, and it would be very helpful in encouraging settlement if such a cooperative farm should be established.

Mr. President, I should like to say that I felt it would be very desirable if this farm should include a soil-testing station, but that is a matter to be worked out.

Does the Senator from Arizona agree with the statement which I have made?

Mr. HAYDEN. I am quite sure that the Senator's quotation from the law is correct. There was no budget estimate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 250, line 5, to strike out "$7,000,000" and to insert "$7,400,000."

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate was treated to the spectacle of a blistering demonstration in a seemingly desperate effort to prove that a fraud and a hoax have been committed by one of its own Members.

The effect of that demonstration will be determined in part by public reaction to the majority report of the Foreign Relations Committee's subcommittee investigating disloyalty in the State Department, when compared to the individual views of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who has been a minority member of the subcommittee. It will be determined also by public reaction to any political motivation behind the demonstration.

Charges of a fraud and a hoax, with or without provocation, whether substantiated or unsubstantiated, should not be allowed to serve as camouflage for dereliction in duty or failure in performance on the part of those preferring the charges.

Errors in commission by some should not blind us to errors in omission by others.

The Senate Committee on Foreign Relations had been given the task of conducting a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State.

Its duties and functions were not to be limited or confined to an investigation of the charges by the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

To the contrary, if there was one function not specifically assigned to the committee, it was an investigation of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] himself.

In fact, investigation of the McCarthy charges was purposely omitted from the text of Senate Resolution 231 as a result of debate in the Senate last February 21.

That resolution as originally offered was as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are employed by the Department of State as charged by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem desirable.

At that time I objected to the inclusion of the words "as charged by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]", and, speaking on the subject before the Senate, I spoke, in part, as follows; and my remarks can be found on pages 2063 and 2064 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I do not like to see this particular investigation limited to the charges made by one particular individual. * * * If we are going into this matter, it seems to me that we very definitely should not limit the investigation to those charges. If there are conditions in the State Department which ought to be investigated, they certainly ought to be investigated in full, and the investigation should not be limited in any respect.

I wish to say that I intend at the proper time to move to amend the resolution offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] by deleting the words "as charged by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]." That would give us a clear investigation of the type which it seems to me should be undertaken if an investigation at all is to be conducted.

After some debate on the question, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] made the following statement, which appears at page 2066 of the RECORD:

I have conferred with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and with other Members of the Senate. We believe that the amendment which was suggested by the able Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] is in keeping with the best interests of what we believe to be a thorough and fair investigation. I should like to modify my resolution by striking out * * * the words * * * "as charged by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]."

Subsequently, these words were stricken from the resolution, and the resolution in its final form was adopted on February 22, 1950.

Not until yesterday, however, was the cat let out of the bag when the majority leader stated that the Democratic policy committee drafted the resolution for this investigation.

So there may be some who feel that if a fraud and a hoax have been perpetrated on the Senate of the United States and the American people, such perpetration is evident in the apparently deliberate action of the subcommittee in disregarding the will of the Senate, as expressed in the debate on February 21, and in Senate Resolution 231, as finally adopted by the Senate.

The tone of the report and yesterday's presentation by the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. TYDINGS] show beyond question that the subcommittee's investigation has been aimed primarily and exclusively at the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

The individual views of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and yesterday's statement before the Senate by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] offer compelling evidence that the subcommittee has not performed the function assigned by the Senate to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

With this task, therefore, wholly uncompleted and with no evident effort or even desire to complete it on the part of the majority responsible for it, this important work should now be assigned to a body qualified to finish the undertaking as originally directed by the Senate.

For this reason I strongly support and urge favorable action on the proposal of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], or on any other appropriate proposal, by which the job can be properly concluded.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to express my appreciation to the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] for having so completely and indisputably cleared the record. Our subcommittee was specifically directed by the Senate not to make its work an investigation of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. ANDERSON. Did I understand the Senator from Massachusetts to say that the subcommittee was instructed not to investigate the charges of the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LODGE. In effect, yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. How does the Senator come to that conclusion?

Mr. LODGE. I came to that conclusion by listening to the record just read by the Senator from New York, which showed that the Senate voted to strike out the language of the original resolution which provided that the committee should investigate the charges of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does not the Senator from Massachusetts realize that the Senator from New York was trying to broaden the scope of the investigation and not to eliminate the charges of the Senator from Wisconsin? It was clearly stated by him that he wanted those charges investigated.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now the Senator from Massachusetts says the committee was not to investigate those charges.

Mr. LODGE. Not to concentrate and focus on them.

Mr. ANDERSON. How much should the committee have done?

Mr. LODGE. I think they should have gone to the whole question of foreign penetration, I will say to my good friend from New Mexico, and the committee definitely did not do that. To create the impression before the country that we have considered the whole question of foreign penetration, to use a not very kind expression—but it is true nevertheless—would be an attempt to bulldoze the country.

Yesterday reference was made a number of times to what I thought about various phases of the investigation. As a matter of fact, I think every single reference was inaccurate and was based on partial quotations or quotations taken out of context. Therefore today I plan to set the RECORD straight about myself. I shall do so in four or five different parts, and I shall not yield while I am discussing a particular point. When I get through with the discussion of a particular point I shall be very glad to yield for questions. It is understandable that Senators should want to quote each other, but I think that when a Senator is in good health, and is here and not in Siberia, or some other place, it is better to let him speak for himself.

The Senate heard statements made about my vote in the subcommittee in relation to the case of Mr. Philip Jessup. As I recall, we were asked to vote on whether or not the investigation had cleared him, or words to that effect. Let me say that I am very glad to take the word of General Eisenhower for the fact that Mr. Jessup is a splendid American. I would be very much surprised if an investigation into Mr. Jessup were to reveal that he was not a splendid American. However, though I may be wrong about it, when the motion was made in the subcommittee I had the feeling that it was similar in effect to the question which a lawyer may sometimes ask a man as to when he had stopped beating his wife. I thought it was an attempt to be very clever about it, if Senators know what I mean, instead of being frank about it and playing it straight across the board on the merits. I will say that if Mr. Jessup had been investigated I would not have hesitated to vote my conviction on what the investigation showed. It is certainly contrary to the facts, and not at all helpful to Mr. Jessup, to pretend that an investigation has been held when in fact no investigation has been held. There were only two individual cases which the committee investigated. One was the case of John Service, and the other of Owen Lattimore. The Owen Lattimore investigation was, as I shall show in a minute, most incomplete. However, an attempt was made to investigate him.

The Senate was not told yesterday what happened after the vote was taken on Mr. Jessup. It seems to me it is always much better when trying to give the story of what went on in one of the subcommittee meetings to give the whole story and let the Senate judge for itself, instead of trying to censor the account which the Senate gets. After the vote on Mr. Jessup was taken, which was a vote of three voting in favor of Mr. Jessup and two members of the committee voting "present," I moved that the committee report a resolution establishing a bipartisan commission to clear up this whole question once and for all. I still think the country demands something of that sort. The motion was defeated, with only two members voting in favor of it. So much for the last meeting of the subcommittee.

Reference has been made to my position with regard to Owen Lattimore. It has been stated that I cleared him. I would prefer to have the word "cleared" set off in quotation marks, because it pops up all the time. I say to the Senate very frankly that sufficient evidence was not developed with regard to Mr. Lattimore to enable me to clear him or not to clear him. The most I could say, as I said in my individual views—and it is all there for Senators to read—was that the evidence which had been developed did not sustain the charge that he was the "top architect of American foreign policy in the Far East," or that he was the "chief Communist agent in the United States." The most pertinent questions about Mr. Lattimore were never asked. They were questions which would have to be asked in executive session and we were never given a chance to have an executive session in which to ask those questions, although I tried many times to get those questions asked. The pertinent questions related to whether or not Mr. Lattimore influenced American foreign policy. It is perfectly clear of course that he never held a major office in the State Department. That was not the point. The point was whether the unofficial influence which he may have had on the policy makers in the State Department was extensive, and if he did have that influence whether his influence was good or bad. That was an extremely pertinent matter.

I should like to read a few of the questions which I thought should have been asked with regard to this subject. Here are questions in the Lattimore case, which were not covered.

I refer to my individual views:

There is no authoritative and detailed presentation in the record from the State Department setting forth precise evidence, dates, etc., concerning Mr. Lattimore's relationship in the State Department. The persons mentioned by Mr. Budenz as having had relations with Mr. Lattimore have not been examined. There were some 16 in number.

Those who headed the China desk in the State Department have not been questioned to determine whether Mr. Lattimore gave advice on United States policy on China, and whether his advice was followed.

The United States Ambassadors to China who held that office during Mr. Lattimore's period of activity have not been questioned along the same line.

One can very well see that those are pertinent questions. They are questions which could not be gone into in public.

The subcommittee has not discovered whether any new information has come into the possession of the Department of Justice respecting Mr. Lattimore since March 24, 1950, when the members of the subcommittee were allowed to see a summary of Mr. Lattimore's file.

On April 25, Mr. Budenz stated that he would furnish the subcommittee with names of Communists whom he knew to be in the State Department. That list has not come to the subcommittee.

Investigation has not been made of all those whom Mr. Lattimore is supposed to have brought into the Institute of Pacific Relations.

It seems to me that those are all legitimate questions which a trained commission would go into, and which anyone would desire to go into who wanted to reach a dependable conclusion about this case.

This went to the very heart of the whole Lattimore question and it is a pity from the standpoint of Lattimore and from the standpoint of the State Department and from the standpoint of the public that we were never allowed to go into that question. My position therefore is a very simple one. It is that the record which we made does not sustain the charge against Lattimore and that the record which we made is most inadequate and fragmentary. No good purpose is served by trying to twist that statement into an endorsement or into a clearing. As I said in my report, my conclusions regarding Lattimore were inescapably tentative, and I do not see how, with the very inadequate record which was made, it could be otherwise.

Now I come to the matter of the 81 files. Senators heard it said yesterday that I said, after reading 12 of the 81 files, that because I was not a lawyer I was unable to appraise the files. I have great regard for lawyers, but I think a person with newspaper training is just as much qualified to read these files and reach conclusions on them, if anyone can reach conclusions on them, as a lawyer would be.

The statement that I said that is utterly inaccurate. My statement of views in this matter is contained in full in my minority views, and neither there nor anywhere else have I said I could not reach a conclusion on the files because I was not a lawyer. I was unable to reach conclusions on the files for perfectly obvious, simple, nontechnical reasons. I was unable to reach conclusions on the files because the leads were not followed up, the evidence was not developed.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. As soon as I finish this part about the files, I shall yield.

I repeat, I was unable to reach conclusions on the files because the leads were not followed up, the evidence was not developed, the credibility of the witnesses was not demonstrated, and all sorts of extremely damaging allegations about the subject of the files were neither proved nor disproved. That is not a question of being a lawyer or not being a lawyer; it is simply a question of common sense.

Now, Mr. President, let me give three examples of the files I read. I will say to the Senate that we were not allowed to take any notes out of the White House, but when I got back to my office after being at the White House, I would dictate memoranda to a dictaphone, from memory, and I believe the account I am now giving is substantially accurate. But, of course, not being able to take a note out of the White House, one cannot be absolutely sure about any detail being accurate.

Example No. 1 was an employee whose loyalty was vouched for by two persons whom I happen to know personally and in whom I have confidence. In fact, they are two members of the press. On the other hand, the file contained the following unfavorable allegation against him: First, that a Communist who was well known to the FBI stated that the subject was a Communist; second, that another man who had worked in a well-known newspaper office in a big city in the east, stated that the subject was a Communist; and, third, that the subject was a member of an organization the officers of which were Communist. My natural personal inclinations were to abide by the judgment of the two men who vouched for this individual. On the other hand, one could not possibly ignore the unfavorable allegations. Yet there was nothing in the file which had any material bearing on the three categorical charges of communism. As far as the information in the file was concerned, the investigation apparently ended right there.

To say that I was in the position of a juryman and that my only job was to decide on the basis of the file alone whether the man was guilty or innocent is utterly to miss the point. A Senator who is a member of an investigating committee is not in the position of a judge or juryman and, even if he were, he would have to have all relevant points cleared up before he could make up his mind. The handbook guiding the procedure of loyalty boards makes it clear that the loyalty boards are not required to make any findings of fact—those proceedings are included in each person's file—or to obtain rebuttals or answers to allegations which may be made, but are simply required to announce their conclusion, it being prescribed in directive IV, page 25, that the board "shall state merely the action taken." They do not have to say why. This does not make for a record which is illuminating to someone who has not seen any of the witnesses and who is limited in his knowledge of the facts to what he may find in the file.

Example No. 1 also raises the question clearly to my mind, as to whether in this case the announced policy of resolving all doubts in favor of the Government have been followed, but Senators can see that in that example alone it is impossible, at least it is from my viewpoint, for a man who has not made up his mind already to look at that file and reach a conclusion.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I will yield when I get to the end of the discussion of the 81 files. I announced, before the Senator from Connecticut came into the Chamber, that my remarks would be very brief, and would be in three or four parts, and that at the end of each part, I would yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Will the Senator indicate when he gets to the end of that part?

Mr. LODGE. I shall be delighted to do so. I am giving three examples taken from the files I read to show how hard it is for someone who approaches the matter with an open mind to reach a conclusion.

Example No. 2: In this file a statement occurred that the subject married a girl in a foreign city and then took her to another foreign city and abandoned her. Upon reading this statement, I made mental note of it, expecting that as my reading of the file progressed the statement would be either confirmed or denied. I read the whole file and there was no further mention of it. It was just left hanging. If one is limited to reading the file alone, it is obviously impossible to reach a conclusion regarding the character of this man without knowing whether this allegation is true or false.

Example No. 3: This case contained an allegation that the subject had asked a high-placed State Department official to put in a word with another high official in behalf of two former Communist employees of the State Department. I searched the whole file and found no confirmation or denial or explanation of this allegation. This file also contained an FBI statement "from a reliable informant" that the subject had associated with a very well-known Communist indeed. This was also neither denied nor explained.

I think it is to be noted, speaking of these files, on which so much emphasis was put yesterday, much more than I would have put, that the Senator from Maryland, as appears on pages 10710 and 10711 of the RECORD, makes it perfectly clear that neither he nor the Senator from Connecticut nor the Senator from Rhode Island read all the files themselves. It is really not necessary, and hardly fitting, to point the finger at me when they themselves did not read them.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. It is noteworthy that the majority in their report—and I ask Senators to look at the report—did not make a case by case description of each file together with their verdict on each file. There is simply the broad statement, in effect, that "God's in His heaven and all's right with the world." I realize that we were forbidden by Presidential order from taking notes out of the White House, but we were furnished with a listing of the files and it is possible from memory to reconstruct one's opinion of each one and it would have added greatly to the completeness and the authoritative character of the majority report if each one of the 81 files had been completely described, without, of course, giving the name, and an opinion expressed on each one. That would have been a thorough, conscientious, and authoritative way of handling the question. As it is, there is just a broad, sweeping statement which in no way meets the objections which I consider to be fundamental.

The question here is not that of being a lawyer, brilliant or otherwise. We did need technical help, but it was not help from a lawyer. It was help from FBI personnel, who could have given real assistance in interpreting some of the notations which were in these files from the FBI.

If any of my colleagues have never seen one of those files, I may suggest that they are extremely complicated, very voluminous, and the FBI notations appear in a special format, a special style. As a matter of fact, on May 10, 1950, I requested that an FBI man be detailed to be present all the time in order to respond to questions as to what the significance was as to the different items that occurred in the files, and I was flatly turned down by Mr. Peyton Ford, the Assistant Attorney General. He flatly turned down that request. We were also denied any help from the subcommittee's professional staff or from our own staff.

I have discussed the state of these files confidentially with persons who have had long experience in the Government service, persons who are respected by everyone in this Chamber, persons whose experience has been very broad. They had to discuss the matter on a confidential basis, but they confirmed my view that the files were not sufficiently developed, were not sufficiently complete to enable a person to reach a conclusion based on the files alone. It seems to me that only a person whose mind was made up in advance could possibly reach a conclusion based on the files alone.

Mr. President, if the bipartisan trained commission which I advocate is created, it could investigate all persons making allegations, such as are mentioned in the files, and disprove or confirm the allegations. This would mean an average of about 10 witnesses per case, which would mean a total of about 800 persons to be examined. This is the thorough, conscientious, businesslike way to do this job. It will probably take a full-time commission of trained men a good 6 months, but at least when it was done we would have definitive results.

I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON].

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator, of course, appreciates the fact that the reports of investigations which he found in the files he did consult—and, incidentally, for the Senator's information, the Senator from Connecticut has consulted every one of them——

Mr. LODGE. Every single file?

Mr. McMAHON. Every single file.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator from Connecticut ought to tell the Senator from Maryland about that, because the Senator from Maryland did not know that.

Mr. McMAHON. That is all right. He can get it out of today's RECORD.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Maryland said:

> The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McMAHON] and I think our colleague, the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], shared the work a little, and took each other's word, when we got to a file, for certain parts of it.

That is what the Senator from Maryland said yesterday. When the Senator tells us that, I believe him, of course.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course, the Senator appreciates the fact that when he is criticizing the extent of the investigations, reports of which he found in the files, he is criticizing the work of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, which was charged with developing all the factual evidence after word was given to them to conduct a full field investigation.

Mr. LODGE. I do not admit that, I will say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. Very well. That speaks for itself. At any rate, the FBI got the order to make the investigation. They made it. And with respect to what they found, contrary to the statement which was given to the press and to the world, the files were complete, and their complete investigation was in the files.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. McMAHON. The Federal Bureau of Investigation does not stop its investigation of any person whom it is charged with investigating until it is satisfied that it has developed all of the facts capable of being developed. If they have not done their job and the Senator is criticizing it, he is welcome to do it, but I will disagree with him.

Mr. LODGE. No; the Senator from Connecticut, I think, unwittingly is creating a false impression. There were many files in which there was no full field investigation by the FBI whatever. Of course, a full field FBI investigation, as we have been told hundreds of times, is a summary of information they have obtained, and is not an evaluation. They never evaluate the information. They never make a recommendation. So there can be no question as to whether one agrees or whether one disagrees with the opinion of the FBI, because the FBI does not express an opinion. That is one point I want to make. The second point is this——

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. Let me complete my answer to the Senator from Connecticut, and then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

The second point is this: The files contain rumors and reports from the FBI in addition, in some of the files, to the results of field investigations. There were admittedly rumors and reports. Now, of course, the FBI is not going to vouch for every single rumor and report. No investigative agency is going to do that. So, when I say that a rumor about a man is neither proved or disproved in the file, that is no criticism of the FBI at all. That is no criticism of anybody. It simply means that that file is not sufficiently complete to enable one to reach a conclusion. That is all there is to that.

I now yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if it is not true that it was developed by the Ferguson committee in connection with its investigation of the failure of the Department of Justice to investigate and prosecute the Kansas City vote fraud perpetrators, that there are several types of investigation conducted by the FBI. That there is a so-called full investigation. There is a so-called limited investigation. Then there is an investigation in which the FBI is directed to ascertain certain facts only and then report back to the Department of Justice.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I understand that to be true. I should like to say, before I leave this subject and go on to my next point, that I would be very much surprised if Mr. J. Edgar Hoover would ever make a statement underwriting these 81 files. I doubt very much if Mr. J. Edgar Hoover would ever be prevailed upon to say that these files, in their present state, are sufficiently well developed and sufficiently complete to make it possible for somebody to read the files, and not do anything else, and reach a conclusion.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course, the subjects who were investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation were thoroughly investigated, in the opinion of the Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. I know that is true, because if he did not think all investigative efforts had been made which would develop the facts the investigation would have been carried further.

I should like further to say to the Senator from Massachusetts that, of course, he totally loses sight of the fact that in many of the cases witnesses were heard before the loyalty boards and looked in the eye. Of course, the Senator has made reference to the fact that in one of the cases witnesses whom he knew personally, on whom he placed great reliance, made certain statements upon which he placed great reliance. I believe the Senator said there were three witnesses, whom he did not know, who gave a different view. That is something which occurs in every courtroom in the land on every trial day, where there are more witnesses on one side than on the other. That is why findings of facts by trial courts are binding upon the appellate court, because the facts have been determined after witnesses have been seen and heard. There may be one witness or two witnesses, such as those who testified favorably to Phil Jessup, and then there may be hundreds of witnesses who may tell of rumors and bring in innuendoes against Phil Jessup absolutely contradicting the statements of General Eisenhower and of General Marshall. Yet I will take the word of a Senator in this body on the other side of the aisle, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], who referred to Jessup and his magnificent performance in combating Vishinsky and Molotov before the Foreign Relations Committee. That is in the record of the Foreign Relations Committee. That is the kind of American Phil Jessup is.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I shall be glad to answer the questions of the Senator from Connecticut, but I do not like him to make three assertions and then not allow me in my own time to reply to the assertions. That is a little unreasonable. I think the Senator was not here when I spoke about Mr. Jessup, so I will repeat what I said, which is that I am delighted to take, and do take, the word of General Eisenhower and of General Marshall that Mr. Jessup is a fine, loyal American. I will go one step further, and say that if we should investigate Mr. Jessup and were to find anything bad about him I would be tremendously surprised. I will say that I think the job Mr. Jessup has done in the United Nations has been wonderful. But I will not say that we have investigated Mr. Jessup when we have not. The Senator will never get me to say that, never. We did not investigate him. Why try to say we investigated him when we did not, except for a desire to be clever and try to put people on the spot?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. I will not yield to the Senator from Washington until I respond to the statement the Senator from Connecticut made. Then I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Washington.

Furthermore, there is no use in trying to create the impression that I am critical of the FBI or of the loyalty boards. I am not critical of the FBI or of the loyalty boards. I have just as much admiration for the FBI as has the Senator from Connecticut. However, I think it is a great pity—and I believe the Senator from Connecticut will agree with me on this—that these 81 persons were not cleared by the Loyalty Board before they were taken in by the State Department. I think all of them should have been cleared first by the Loyalty Board. In my opinion, that would have been much better, rather than to hurriedly at the last minute, order an investigation of their loyalty simply because the investigation was begun in the Senate.

The FBI is a wonderful tool; but I think the administration should use it with foresight and with intelligence.

The Senator from Connecticut made three points, Mr. President, and I am answering them. Then I shall yield for interruptions.

In my opinion the personnel of the loyalty boards is good; I have confidence in them. However, I still say that the file, as it stands, with the leads not followed up and the evidence not developed and the allegations neither proved nor disproved, makes it very difficult to reach a final conclusion.

Mr. KEM and Mr. MAGNUSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LODGE. I yield first to the Senator from Missouri, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who, I know, shares with me admiration for the FBI and for its Director—and I think all Americans have that feeling—if it is not true that the statute which created the FBI places it under the jurisdiction and control of the Department of Justice, and if at every step in an investigation the activity and the work of the FBI and its Director are under the control of the Attorney General.

Mr. LODGE. I think there can be no doubt about that. The FBI is under a politically appointed Attorney General, just as the Navy is under a politically appointed Secretary of the Navy, in, roughly, the same sense.

So it was that when I was at the White House, I tried to have the FBI man sit in with us there and help us interpret some of the notations, but I had to go through Mr. Peyton Ford, the Assistant to the Attorney General, and he turned down the request. He had the power to say whether the FBI could go there and help a United States Senator or whether it could not do so.

Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. First, let me state that I am leaving Washington at 8 o'clock this evening to go back to my home State — for obvious reasons. [Laughter.]

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what they are, but I am sure they are good ones.

Mr. MAGNUSON. All this discussion has been very interesting. I have read the report——

Mr. LODGE. Which report?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I have read both reports—both the minority views of the Senator from Massachusetts and the majority report.

When I reach home tomorrow morning, I shall be asked a question by the people of the State of Washington, and I think perhaps the Senator from Massachusetts can answer it for me now; at least, I should like to take his answer back with me. It is a very simple question: Did the Senator from Massachusetts in his investigation find any Communists in the State Department?

Mr. LODGE. No; I did not.

Mr. MAGNUSON. That is the answer.

Mr. LODGE. No; I did not.

I should like to go a little further.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I appreciate the Senator's position, in that he does not think the inquiry is complete.

Mr. LODGE. Let me answer the Senator's question in a little more detail, please.

I did not find any Communists in the State Department, but I went to all the lengths to which I think any man could go, in that I personally interviewed the State Department agents and special agents covering a large part of the United States, Europe, Africa, and the Middle East, and I asked every one of them whether they knew of any Communists in the State Department. All of them said they did not.

As I said yesterday, I think the great error of judgment and the great laxity occurred in 1945 and 1946. I have made that very clear. The officials of the State Department who testified before us, and who are nonpolitical, all make that same statement. I do not know why we do not admit that a great mistake was made in 1945 and 1946, and that since then a sincere effort has been made to correct it.

I believe the State Department has the basis of a good security system, but, in my judgment, it can be invigorated and improved along the lines of the report which was signed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] and myself. Let me say that it is the only feature of this whole wretched, miserable business on which there has been any bipartisan agreement in regard to what should be done to improve and strengthen the State Department set-up. I think that is encouraging.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his reply.

Mr. LEHMAN and other Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from New York, who was first on his feet, I believe.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding to me. I wonder whether the Senator from Massachusetts recognizes the implications of his refusal to clear Philip Jessup. Nothing, absolutely nothing has been proved against Mr. Jessup. No sound basis for any charge has been found. Nevertheless the Senator from Massachusetts is not willing to clear him.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; the Senator from New York misunderstands me. I said I was not willing to say I had investigated Mr. Philip Jessup when I had not. The Senator from New York was not here when I made the statement, I believe.

I said that I fully accept General Marshall's and General Eisenhower's opinion that Philip Jessup is a good American; but I said I could not say that I had investigated him when I had not. The Senator would not want me to say I had investigated him if I had not done so.

Mr. LEHMAN. Of course not. However, the Senator from Massachusetts certainly seemed to imply or left the impression that there should still be some doubt in the minds of the American people in regard to the loyalty of Philip Jessup.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no; that is in error.

Mr. LEHMAN. I am glad to have that assurance from the able Senator from Massachusetts, but that was certainly the impression I received.

Mr. LODGE. Then the Senator from New York certainly received the wrong impression, because nothing I have said or done would warrant such an impression. I am delighted that the Senator from New York has asked the question, so that I can correct the misapprehension.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me to make a brief statement at this point, let me say that I deeply regret the dangerous iniquitous and intolerable position in which individuals in Government service have been placed by the sweeping, unsupported, and completely unproven and unprovable charges made on the floor of the Senate and in other places by the junior Senator from Wisconsin. Until the junior Senator from Wisconsin reflected on the loyalty of Philip Jessup, no one had ever raised a question about his patriotism or integrity and in the months since the junior Senator from Wisconsin first leveled his charges against Philip Jessup, I have heard not a single responsible person support those charges.

On the other hand, we have had the testimony of four Secretaries of State and the testimony of General Eisenhower in regard to Philip Jessup's loyalty and responsibility and Members of this body, one Senator after another, to the number of four or five, rose on this floor and testified to their confidence in Philip Jessup.

Yet the fact that the junior Senator from Wisconsin has reflected on Mr. Jessup's loyalty has gone through the country and has raised doubts in the minds of many Americans regarding his loyalty and his value as a public servant.

I think this proves the iniquity, the danger, and the unjustifiable nature of the accusations which have been made, but have not been proved, judging by the report of the Tydings committee.

It is incomprehensible to me that anyone would even question the loyalty of a man like Philip Jessup.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I am glad to say to the Senator from New York that I have never questioned Mr. Jessup's loyalty, and I accept what General Eisenhower and General Marshall and the Senator from New York say about him. I would be very much surprised if anything reflecting on Mr. Jessup's loyalty were revealed. I admire his public record. However, I am not going to say that I have investigated him, when I have not.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. THYE. I should like to ask the Senator whether the Department of Justice furnished any explanation or was of any assistance in clarifying any of the questions which may have come to the Senator's mind when he was examining the files?

Mr. LODGE. The Assistant Attorney General, Mr. Ford, was of assistance, yes. He was there.

Mr. THYE. Did he offer explanations?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. I want to be absolutely fair to him. He put in much of his time and went to a good deal of trouble. He is a very agreeable man. He undertook to furnish answers to questions which arose. But, of course, what I wanted there was not that. I did not want somebody at the Cabinet level. I wanted somebody from the FBI who was a career man. If we are having an investigation into submarines, we do not want the Secretary of the Navy; we want an Annapolis man who has spent his life in the submarine category. I wanted trained FBI men there.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. THYE. Would it not have been more helpful and more assuring to the general public if the Senator could have reported to the Senate today that the FBI had answered every question asked by the Senator concerning the files, and if the Senator could have reported to us that the President had said, "I will send the files to you. You, as a United States Senator, elected by the people, sworn to defend the Constitution, have just as much right to examine a file as a file clerk would have." If the President had taken that attitude, we could have had greater assurance in making our report to the people that the investigation had been thorough and that the facts had been obtained.

Mr. LODGE. I think that is true. It is always much better to be generous and candid and open about these matters. Yesterday I referred to the remark made by former Senator Wheeler, of Montana, in connection with the oil scandals under the Harding administration. Senators may recall that he, Senator Walsh, of Montana, and others conducted a vigorous investigation which resulted in a number of people going to jail. Senator Wheeler said—and I quoted him yesterday—that President Coolidge simply opened up all the files of the Department of Justice, and there they were, open to inspection by members of the opposition party. He let them look at everything. The country had confidence in the result. I may add, it did not hurt President Coolidge one bit.

Mr. ANDERSON and Mr. McMAHON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Mexico was on his feet first. I yield to him. I shall next, yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts will understand that the questions I am about to ask are based upon a desire to get some information, and that I retain the highest esteem for him, both as a citizen and as a Senator.

Mr. LODGE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ANDERSON. The Senator has made a remark or two about the fact that the committee did not investigate Jessup. I want to say that the replies made by the Senator to the earlier questions about Jessup were completely satisfactory to me, and I would not be inclined to cast any reflections upon them. The Senator stated his faith in Mr. Jessup. But did the Senator or anyone else in the committee ask for any further justification of Jessup, after the testimony of General Eisenhower and General Marshall?

Mr. LODGE. That, I do not recall. That occurred during a time when I was absent because of a tragic accident which smote my family, when a young man who was close to us was drowned near our home. I was not present on the day when the Jessup investigation took place, so I cannot answer the question from personal knowledge.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator not feel that if there was any question of the thoroughness of the investigation, it should have been raised while the committee was at work?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, I think so. I think that almost all the questions I now raise were raised by me while the committee was at work. If the stenographic report of the committee is ever printed in full—and I hope it will not be printed unless it is printed in full—the Senator from New Mexico will see a great long list of questions raised by me, and they were raised while the committee was at work. I think that is quite right.

Mr. ANDERSON. In his statement, the Senator from Massachusetts said he believed that Lattimore had never held a major office in the State Department. Did the investigation show that Lattimore had ever held a minor office in the Department?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. There was testimony on that point. He was a reparations commissioner to Japan, I think, in 1945, which I would say was a minor State Department office. Would not the Senator say that?

Mr. ANDERSON. I question whether he was ever a State Department employee. No one else was able to find that testimony.

Mr. LODGE. I think the statement was that he was on a reparations commission to Japan.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, would the Senator like my assistance on that question? I happen to know the facts.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; I should be glad to know that, because, as I recall, there never got into the record a factual statement from the State Department as to exactly the status of Lattimore and the facts of Lattimore's connection. I wanted to get such a statement, but never got it.

Mr. McMAHON. I think it is in the record. I think I can find it in the record.

Mr. LODGE. If it is, I shall be glad to be shown where it is, because I have not been able to find it.

Mr. McMAHON. Perhaps I can refresh the Senators' recollection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut, that he may enlighten me and may elucidate this point.

Mr. McMAHON. The facts and the history of Lattimore's mission to Japan were that Edwin Pauley, who was the head of that commission, had him assigned to him as one of his experts. It was quite a large mission. As a matter of fact, he was paid by the State Department, but it was an independent mission working out of the White House. I do not believe there was any other connection with the State Department per se, other than the fact that he was paid by the State Department.

Mr. LODGE. I have found the information, which is the most that I have been able to find in the record. The State Department describes Lattimore as being "associated with a mission outside the United States" for a period of 4 months in 1945. I am quite sure that that is all the record says on that point.

I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. I was very much interested in the Senator's statement that the FBI does not express an opinion. I want to say that I was connected with an investigation of this same type in the House of Representatives, and it was a matter of deep concern to me that there was no one able to express an opinion on behalf of the FBI. Does the Senator from Massachusetts not feel that we must some day develop machinery so that, after the FBI has gathered its information, someone connected with an official agency can speak out and say, "Yes; we think this man is or is not a dangerous person for the Government to employ"?

Mr. LODGE. I share the feeling of the Senator from New Mexico as to the sort of hopeless sensation which comes over one when he reads all the statements which have come to him, second- and third-hand, and then nobody reaches any kind of conclusion. The Senator, who has been Secretary of Agriculture, has had to confront that problem from an administrative standpoint, and he has had much more experience with it than I have. I certainly should be glad to join with him and to work with him to try to establish a system which would be a little tighter, and under which responsibility would be fixed a little more definitely in the hands of those who have the greatest knowledge.

Mr. ANDERSON. Does the Senator recall that early in the period of the war the Congress of the United States voted approximately $700,000 to be appropriated to the FBI to make an investigation of the loyalty of people and report to the Congress? Does he recall that the report to the Congress does not mention a soul as disloyal—not one—because of the very fact that the FBI does not express an opinion?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to say to the Senator that I questioned Director Hoover on that a great deal in connection with the loyalty investigation in which I was engaged as a member of the House of Representatives Appropriations Committee. His answer was precisely what the Senator from Massachusetts has just now given, that the FBI does not express an opinion; it collects facts. It is not a jury.

Mr. LODGE. That is correct.

Mr. ANDERSON. I recognize the probable correctness of what the Director has said, but it seems a shame that $700,000 was spent and not one person could be identified as in any way disloyal, of all those who were investigated.

Mr. LODGE. It is very disconcerting to a great many Department officials in Washington who have talked to me about it, and it certainly is very disconcerting to a Senator who is charged with the responsibility of investigating and reaching a conclusion.

Mr. CAPEHART and Mr. TAFT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LODGE. I yield first to the Senator from Indiana, and after that I shall yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is it not a fact that Supreme Court Justice Frankfurter and Supreme Court Justice Reed, Mr. Foster Dulles, and, I think, Mr. Acheson testified in good faith as to the character of Alger Hiss, prior to the time he was convicted?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. I had no connection with that case, and I do not know.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I was interested in the Senator's example No. 1, a file which contains conflicting statements about one of the men who were being investigated by the subcommittee. I assume that those statements were read by the Senator from Connecticut as well as by the Senator from Massachusetts, since he has stated that he read these files. What I want to ask is this: Here is an employee whose file showed that two persons said that they had confidence in him. Were those two persons then called by the committee to ascertain upon what they based their opinion?

Mr. LODGE. Oh, no, no.

Mr. TAFT. Was the FBI man who made the investigation called by the committee to testify as to what he found?

Mr. LODGE. No; not at all.

Mr. TAFT. It was stated that a Communist who was well known to the FBI said that a certain man was a Communist. Was that Communist called before the committee to ascertain the basis of his opinion that this man was a Communist?

Mr. LODGE. No. The conditions under which we saw the files would have made such a procedure impossible.

Mr. TAFT. Were those names given in the files?

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but we saw the files on a completely confidential basis, so it would have been impossible to have called anyone.

Mr. TAFT. Was not the sole purpose of seeing the files to get leads which the committee could follow up?

Mr. LODGE. That was what I thought, and that has been my contention right along. I approached it with a perfectly open mind, because I had never done that kind of work before. Allegations were left hanging. The common sense thing to do was to send for the people, have them appear before the committee, and ask whether the statement was true.

Mr. TAFT. There is a reference to a man working in a well-known newspaper office who was stated to be a Communist. Was he ever called before the committee?

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. TAFT. The thing which impresses me is that the committee was trying to find out, presumably, whether Subject No. 1 was a Communist. How could it find out without calling persons and asking them the reasons for their opinions or views?

Mr. LODGE. I do not think it is possible to say that a thorough and conscientious job could be done unless that condition were fulfilled. But the conditions under which we were allowed to see the files, which were conditions of complete confidence—and we were not allowed to make any notes and were bound in honor not to reveal any names—I promised not to reveal any names—those conditions made it impossible to have that kind of a follow-through. If we establish a bipartisan trained commission, for which so many of us voted yesterday, whereby all witnesses and persons with pertinent information could be called, the leads could be run down.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I assume that the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes. I assume the Senator does not wish to leave any implication in the RECORD which might have been raised by the comment of the Senator from Missouri with reference to the way in which the Federal Bureau of Investigation performs its duties——

Mr. LODGE. That question is not clear to me.

Mr. McMAHON. The insinuation, as I got it, was that the Attorney General had general supervision over the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and that, therefore, there was a possibility, in fact, a probability, that the FBI and the Attorney General were in cahoots not to make a full and complete investigation. The Senator does not want to leave any such implication, does he?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I am not interested in the Senator from Missouri; I am interested in the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I have the floor, and I obtained it for the purpose of rectifying inaccuracies which were uttered with reference to myself yesterday. I stated my views concerning the FBI. I have the highest regard for those men, who are career men, like the men in the Army and the Navy. Obviously the Cabinet level and the political level stand between them.

Mr. McMAHON. But the Senator would agree, would he not, that the job which was given to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, namely, the investigation of these persons, was performed?

Mr. LODGE. I would not agree that those people had been investigated by the Department of Justice before they were given their jobs.

Mr. McMAHON. I did not ask that question.

Mr. LODGE. Oh. Pardon me.

Mr. McMAHON. I asked whether the files from the Bureau of Investigation indicated, in the Senator's opinion, that the FBI had done what it was ordered to do, namely, to investigate.

Mr. LODGE. The files were not from the FBI; they were loyalty files from the State Department.

Mr. McMAHON. Does not the Senator realize that the bulk of the files had been sent to the State Department by the FBI, and there was a report of their investigation?

Mr. LODGE. I think that in those files there was some material from the FBI. There were hearings and proceedings before the State Department Loyalty Board, and letters and memorandums from persons working in the State Department. I do not think it is accurate to say or to try to create the impression that those loyalty files were mostly the work of the FBI, because many of them were not. I am sure the Senator cannot find Mr. J. Edgar Hoover accepting responsibility for the development of those files.

Mr. McMAHON. I wish to point out only that the investigative functions of the Government in loyalty matters rests with the FBI. What was developed in the cases is in the State Department files. It was after the investigations by the FBI and their statement of the facts which had been developed, that hearings were had before the Loyalty Board of the State Department.

Mr. LODGE. I do not agree with that statement. There were several cases in the 12 files which I read in which the loyalty board held hearings, although a full FBI field investigation had not yet been made. I can remember one case. I can remember the man's name. I shall not give the name, because I promised not to give it.

Mr. McMAHON. Will the Senator tell me the name off the floor?

Mr. LODGE. I shall tell the Senator off the floor. There was a loyalty board proceeding, and a full field investigation had not yet been made in May. There are many cases in which a field investigation has only recently been ordered because of these charges.

Mr. McMAHON. If it is a definite statement of fact it is one which we can directly prove. But I wish to submit to the Senator that I think he will find that 90 percent of the investigations were ordered in the regular course of business, before the junior Senator from Wisconsin, at Wheeling, W. Va., said there were 205 card-carrying Communists in the State Department known to the Secretary of State. With that statement I know the Senator from Massachusetts does not agree.

Mr. LODGE. My view about the undeveloped and incomplete state of those files is not a reflection on anyone particularly. Certainly it is not a reflection on the FBI. I am sure the FBI will never accept any responsibility for the condition of those files. Of that I am positive. I admire the FBI, and I do not think any criticism I have made here could in any way be inferred as being directed to the FBI. Nor do I think I should apologize for having read only 12 files. I think 12 out of 81 is a representative cross section. I reached my opinion that the files were in such an unfinished state as to make it impossible to reach a conclusion, after I had read six or seven. I then decided I would be absolutely sure, and I pulled out files at random until I had read 12. I am morally certain that if I had neglected all my other duties as a United States Senator and had read all the 81 files, I would not have been any wiser than I was after I had read 12.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Connecticut. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me to say, for the information of the Senator from Connecticut, that I did not insinuate that the Department of Justice has certain limited investigations by the FBI in which the hands of the FBI are tied. I state that as a fact, as developed by the testimony before the Ferguson committee, which was charged by the Senate with the responsibility of investigating the failure of the Department of Justice to investigate and prosecute the Kansas City vote frauds.

Perhaps the Senator from Connecticut does not remember the facts developed in the case. In that case, the then Attorney General of the United States advised me officially as a Senator from Missouri that a full and complete investigation of the Kansas City vote fraud had been made by the FBI. Later, when the Ferguson committee undertook to investigate the matter the Director of the FBI, Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, appeared before the committee, and it developed through the testimony of Mr. Hoover that in certain cases, which were, generally speaking, cases having political implications, the FBI were not given a free hand in making the investigation. In such cases they were permitted to investigate only upon the express permission and direction of the Department of Justice. In such instances they were directed to make certain limited investigations, that is, to interview certain witnesses and report back to the Attorney General. I may say in passing that it was unlikely that any of those witnesses would know anything about the facts which were really relevant to the investigation. What the Attorney General in his letter to me had represented to be a full and complete investigation was in fact a limited investigation, in which the FBI was directed to interview certain specified witnesses only and then report back to the Department of Justice. It further developed that when that limited investigation was made and the report made to the Department of Justice, the Attorney General directed the FBI to close its files.

I want to say to the Senator from Connecticut that I have told him the facts in language which is as clear and as explicit as I can make it. So let us have done with any talk about insinuation. Those are the facts for anyone who wants the facts.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator insinuate——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to say——

Mr. McMAHON. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LODGE. I would appreciate it if the interruptions could be kept on the basis of questions related to this matter. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to say to the Senator from Missouri that I hope in what he said there was no insinuation about there having been any limited investigation ordered in any of these loyalty cases, because knowing nothing of the files, knowing nothing of the facts, and not having seen the files, I assume he would not want to leave that implication.

Mr. LODGE. I have given my understanding of the condition of the files.

Mr. McMAHON. I should like to ask the Senator about his statement that no FBI man was present in the Cabinet room at the White House for consultation on these files. Does the Senator recollect the statement made by the Senator from Connecticut and the assurance which the Senator from Connecticut gave him, that having been the Assistant Attorney General in charge of the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice and having had occasion to deal with perhaps thousands of these files, if any hieroglyphics or Egyptian symbols were written on the files—and I have seen no such symbols—that perhaps they would be familiar to me and I could enlighten the Senator with regard to them and that if I could not do so the deputy Attorney General who has the administrative duties under his jurisdiction perhaps could answer the Senator's question? I would like to ask further——

Mr. LODGE. I should like to answer one question at a time. I remember something like that. Of course I was surprised that the Senator should even bring it up, because, while I have a great liking for the Senator from Connecticut and have great confidence in his integrity, and although I also found Mr. Peyton Ford a thoroughly charming man and good American, it was obvious to me that no work we could do would command any confidence if we got opinions from people who are politically involved—the way all Senators are involved in politics—and that the only way an investigation of this kind could command any confidence would be by obtaining the independent judgment of career men in the service of the FBI. That fact was so obvious to me then and it is so obvious to me today that I am surprised the Senator from Connecticut does not see it the way I do.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator and I are talking about quite different things. I thought it was the Senator's contention, which he made earlier, that there may be in the files certain symbols and figures of a code nature which he could not understand. I assume the Senator did not want an FBI man present to make an adjudication for him. I did not hear the Senator ask a single question of either Mr. Ford or anyone else present concerning any statement or any symbol in the files which the Senator did not understand.

Mr. LODGE. I make it clear that Mr. Ford was not a satisfactory mentor so far as I was concerned, and that I would not accept him as a mentor. I think he is a thoroughly charming man, with whom I should be delighted to spend an evening socially. However, I did not think I would be doing the job properly by having Mr. Ford in that position. I was not interested merely in hieroglyphics, but in meanings. I was not merely putting the microscope on the files.

Mr. McMAHON. They are all written in English.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; but there are words that have special meanings, as I have subsequently discovered.

Mr. McMAHON. That is absurd.

Mr. LODGE. It is what?

Mr. McMAHON. It is absurd.

Mr. LODGE. I am sorry that the Senator from Connecticut should use such unbridled words. I shall not do the same.

Mr. McMAHON. I shall when I believe them justified.

Mr. LODGE. I do not doubt it. There is one thing I should like to do in this discussion, and that is to keep a reasonable tone. I think we should get some of the pus and some of the poison out of this thing. If we start throwing adjectives at each other, it will not do any of us any good.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Oregon considers one question to have great weight in evaluating this entire McCarthy issue. The Senator from Massachusetts may have answered it when the Senator from Oregon was off the floor. If he did, I am sure he will not object to repeating his answer for the enlightenment of the Senator from Oregon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would appreciate it if the Senator from Oregon would voice his question a little louder for the benefit of Senators who cannot hear the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. In the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts did the Senator from Wisconsin submit to the committee any evidence which substantiates any of his charges against a single one of the persons whom he accused of being Communists?

Mr. LODGE. As I stated before the Senator from Oregon came into the Chamber, there were only two individual cases which the committee investigated. One was the Lattimore case, and the other was the Service case. I have already stated that the charge that Lattimore was Communist was not substantiated either by the Senator who made the charge or by the committee. I also think that the committee's investigation was inadequate and fragmentary.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator permit me to repeat my question and point it from a slightly different angle? I should like to satisfy myself as to the merits of McCarthy's charges and the proof he offered in support of them before I reach a final conclusion on this very serious matter. Am I correct in my understanding that, so far as the presentation of evidence to the committee by the Senator from Wisconsin is concerned, he failed to present any evidence which supported his accusation of communism against a single person whom he charged with communism?

Mr. LODGE. The committee did not investigate all the charges. The only two individual cases which were investigated were the Lattimore and Service cases. I have given my statement on Lattimore. So far as Service is concerned, it is my conclusion that the case was not proved that he was disloyal. I think that the evidence with respect to the Amerasia case showed him to be a man who was gullible, indiscreet, and lacking in a sense of the realities of the situation. However, the evidence does not show him to be disloyal.

Mr. MORSE. Did the committee make itself available to the Senator from Wisconsin to submit any and all evidence which the Senator from Wisconsin might have had that would have substantiated his charges as to any of those he accused, if he had the evidence?

Mr. LODGE. The committee did not investigate any individual case except the two I have referred to.

Mr. MORSE. My question is not whether the committee investigated, but whether or not the committee supplied the Senator from Wisconsin with a forum for the establishment of his proof if he had proof to offer. After all, the Senator from Wisconsin had the burden of proof, so far as his charges were concerned, and I want to know if he sustained it in a single case.

Mr. LODGE. The committee gave the Senator from Wisconsin an opportunity to be heard; yes, they did; and that is well known.

Mr. MORSE. So far as the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts goes, the Senator from Wisconsin did not submit to the committee any evidence that would cause the Senator from Massachusetts, as a member of the committee, on any evidence he submitted, to reach the conclusion that the Senator from Wisconsin had proved his charges against a single person accused?

Mr. LODGE. That is not quite what I said. I say that he did not provide evidence to sustain the charges against Lattimore and against Service. I think the Service investigation was a complete investigation. I think the Lattimore investigation was not complete, and there were certain questions which have not yet been answered.

Mr. MORSE. I want the Senator from Massachusetts to know, as I am sure he does know, that I am merely seeking a basis for forming a final judgment as to whether or not the procedure in this case has been adequate, so far as providing the Senator from Wisconsin with a full opportunity to present proof in support of the charges he made on the floor of the Senate is concerned. The investigation is a twofold one. I think the committee had its own initiative duties to perform in regard to the investigation, and I believe the Senator from Wisconsin had a clear responsibility to present to the committee any proof he had that would substantiate the charges he made on the floor of the Senate. So my query goes to the question of whether or not he did or did not submit that proof, and whether or not, on the basis of such proof he did submit, the Senator from Massachusetts reached the conclusion that he had or had not proved his charges.

Mr. LODGE. I have already indicated to the Senator my conclusions about Lattimore and Service. As to whether the Senator from Wisconsin had an adequate opportunity or not I think is a question the Senator from Oregon might ask him some time. He certainly had a chance to appear in public. My recollection is he was not accorded the opportunity, which is usually accorded Senators, to attend the private sessions of the committee. That is my recollection.

Mr. MORSE. Did the committee at any time refuse to receive any exhibits, evidence, or documents which the Senator from Wisconsin at any time offered to the committee for its perusal?

Mr. LODGE. I do not recall anything along that line.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. On the floor of the Senate yesterday the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], as appears at page 10712, in referring to Lattimore, said:

> My Republican colleague, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], in his minority views—I do not quote him verbatim—says the charges against Lattimore have not been proved.

Mr. President, I observe what I assume the Senator from Maryland had in mind, namely, that in the separate views of the Senator from Massachusetts is this language:

> In these circumstances, the only possible conclusion is that the investigation which the subcommittee conducted—and which was, as has been set forth above, definitely limited in its character—not only failed to prove the allegation that Mr. Lattimore was a Communist; it also clearly failed to prove the charges that he was either "the architect of our far-eastern policy" or "one of the top Communist agents in this country."

I desire to ask the Senator whether or not I correctly understood him a few minutes ago in two separate statements to say, in substance, that the investigation made by the committee of Mr. Owen Lattimore in the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts, was inadequate, fragmentary, and not complete.

Mr. LODGE. That is my view.

Mr. DONNELL. I ask the Senator whether or not he has this afternoon, while the Senator from Missouri perhaps was off the floor, quoted from the record the language of the report of the Senator from Massachusetts showing the fragmentary, inadequate, and incomplete character of the investigation.

Mr. LODGE. I think the RECORD will make that clear.

Mr. DONNELL. Would the Senator have any objection if I should read at this point, so as to have it in black and white in the RECORD, the statement appearing in the Senator's separate views at page 331?

Mr. LODGE. Not at all.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I shall then read it. This, I may say, is under the heading "Owen Lattimore," and appears at page 331 of the section devoted to Mr. Lattimore. I read:

> The subcommittee, however, was denied access to the so-called raw FBI file for reasons which are to me understandable, but it did see a summary. We also were denied the benefit of cross-examination in this case conducted by counsel representing the minority, and the opportunity to question in private Mr. Lattimore, J. Edgar Hoover, and those who had presided over the China desk in the State Department and had been United States Ambassadors to China during the period when it was asserted that Mr. Lattimore was the "top architect" of United States foreign policy in the Far East.
> Whatever conclusions are to be announced in this case, therefore, must be based both on hearsay evidence and on incomplete investigation, and are inescapably tentative. This is regrettable both from the standpoint of Mr. Lattimore and from the standpoint of the country.

I ask the Senator whether or not he agrees with me that the statement made by the Senator from Maryland yesterday that the Senator from Massachusetts had said that the charges against Lattimore had not been proved, cannot be correctly evaluated and cannot be complete unless the additional facts which I have read from page 331 are also set forth, to show the inadequacy, the fragmentary nature and the incompleteness of the investigation made.

Mr. LODGE. I think the Senator is entirely correct.

Mr. President, if there are no more questions——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. On page 210 of the report of the subcommittee, which was filed in the Senate yesterday, appears what I call to the attention of the Senator, so that I may ask him a question in relation to it. I read:

> On October 6, 7, and 8, 1949, Mr. Lattimore, following preliminary correspondence with the Department of State, was one of a group of 25 private individuals participating in a round-table discussion arranged by the Office of Public Affairs for the purpose of exchanging views on United States foreign policy toward China.

Is that the same meeting mentioned on page 684 of the hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations this year, 1950, in considering the 1951 appropriations, under the heading, "Conference on United States policy payments"?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know.

Mr. FERGUSON. It reads:

> The Office of Public Affairs, on behalf of the Secretary of State, has called together experts representing various points of view to consult with Department of State officers on major policy questions.

Under that it is stated:

> Conference on Problems of the United States Policy in China—October 6, 7, 8, 1949.
> Cost: Travel and per diems payments of consultants, $2,539.17 (estimated).

Mr. Owen Lattimore, director of the Walter Hines Page School on International Relations, is listed as one being present. Is that round table the same as the consultation on major policy questions?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know, I am sorry to say to the Senator. I am not informed on that point. I would have to go back to my records and study that in order to make an authoritative answer. I would not wish to make a guess.

Mr. FERGUSON. Was there any testimony before the committee that those who attended this meeting, as indicated on page 684 of the hearings before the Senate Committee on Appropriations, were paid on a per diem basis for consultation?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know. I yield the floor.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts yields to the Senator from North Dakota for a question.

Mr. LANGER. I am very much interested in the four affidavits which were filed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin alleging that there was a project whereby the files of the State Department were thoroughly examined in 1945, and everything detrimental to employees was removed. Was any investigation made of that by the Senator's subcommittee?

Mr. LODGE. No; that came along just as we were finishing. The investigation was sort of petering out when that came along. We did not go into that.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. MUNDT. Before the Senator yields the floor will he not be good enough to give us a concise statement, particularized as well as he can, within the boundaries of the confidential nature of his consultation with the reports and files, as to the exact nature of the reports which he and the other members of the investigative committee were permitted to see? I ask that for this reason: At least the junior Senator from South Dakota finds himself wholly confused as a consequence of the colloquy which took place this afternoon. It occurred to me that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] would give the impression that the members of the subcommittee had had an opportunity to see the raw files and the full field reports made by the FBI as it investigated the characters listed in the 81 cases. On the other hand, the Senator from South Dakota recalls hearing the testimony of Attorney General McGrath and J. Edgar Hoover before the subcommittee in which they said that they would not, and they could not, and they did not believe it advisable to present that kind of evidence to the Senator's subcommittee. I think the country has at least a right to know whether a change of policy ensued, and whether members of the subcommittee were permitted to see the full field reports and the raw files, or whether in the final analysis the members of the subcommittee saw only simple fragmentary reports sent to the State Department by the FBI.

Mr. LODGE. The question of what is and what is not a raw file is an FBI technical question. I do not know whether we saw the raw file or not. We saw files in which there would be a slip of paper with a report about the man in them, and then there would be a letter from somebody, and there would be a State Department memorandum, and a whole lot of data. Whether that was all the data on the man, or whether the FBI had other things that were not in there I do not know. We did see those files, and I am perfectly prepared to believe that they contained all there was as to a given man. But I do not know whether the FBI would say that that constituted the raw file or not. We saw full field reports in some cases. But there were other cases where such reports had not been made.

Mr. MUNDT. In some of the 81 cases it was obvious, was it not, from the FBI—that the FBI had not concluded its investigation?

Mr. LODGE. Yes. Of course, I do not think one could say that this constituted a complete departure from previous administration policy, because while it was something new to let us see the files, we saw them under such stringent limitations that we really could not follow up all the leads and take the file as a lead on which to base an investigation, which is, of course really why we want to have a full investigation, which could not possibly be made when we were seeing them under a seal of confidence.

Mr. MUNDT. How was it possible for a Senate investigative committee to arrive at a conclusion and make a report to the American people that there was no evidence of disloyalty, on the basis of files and investigations which were not completed by the FBI?

Mr. LODGE. That is what I cannot understand.

Mr. MUNDT. It appears the committee has not seen the full evidence. How can it make a report either pro or con on that basis?

Mr. LODGE. That is precisely my point; and on that note of interrogation I will yield the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, since the matter we are discussing is of such profound importance and since there seems to be some misunderstanding with regard to certain matters connected with it, as a Member of the Senate and especially as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I feel there is a duty to be performed in making perfectly clear some of the aspects of this report.

I regret exceedingly, more than I can express, that on certain votes yesterday the Senate divided on strictly partisan lines. We are dealing with a subject that should not be in the field of partisan politics, and yet almost inevitably it has gotten there. I do not believe, from following this thing through, and from talking with persons familiar with the subject, that it is possible for us to deal with a matter of this kind with the type of congressional committee which was set up. So, before I proceed further, I want to identify myself with the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. ANDERSON], in the recent discussions on the floor, that the only way we can deal with such questions is to have an objective, nonpartisan, committee of the highest caliber of men who will not be in any way tempted in the slightest, no matter what the conditions may be, to permit any political considerations to enter into their work.

Earlier this year, when this matter first came up, I made the suggestion, and I repeat it now, that what we need is a commission of that sort, headed by men of the caliber of former President Hoover, Barney Baruch, and General Eisenhower. That is the only way we can bring to the American people a sense of security in such a controversy as this.

In spite of everything that has happened, no matter how the report which was filed yesterday is received the people of the United States are still left, as I find from telegrams and mail addressed to me, with a feeling of uncertainty. Their attitude is, "Why can we not get at the truth of the charges or rumors which are going around, and if they are true, why cannot, we once and for all put an end to such conditions?"

So I feel, unfortunate as it is that this debate has to go on while other matters of the utmost importance are pressing for consideration. We should clear in our own minds what the issues are. So, I am going to address myself for a few moments to one or two questions which came up yesterday and which gave me, as a member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, great concern.

After a preliminary discussion, Mr. President, as to whether or not the report submitted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] yesterday was a report of the Foreign Relations Committee or simply the transmission of a report of a subcommittee, the Vice President ruled:

> The Senator from Maryland has submitted the report as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

I immediately rose and stated:

> Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, I rise to take issue with the statement just made by the Senator from Maryland and say that the report is not a report of the Foreign Relations Committee.

I stress this only because I am advised, after making inquiry, that the report that came in yesterday will now be printed and circulated to the country as a report of the Foreign Relations Committee. If that be the case, and if it is not perfectly clear that this report is merely the report of the subcommittee, and of three members of the subcommittee at that, the country is going to be misled into thinking that the report represents the complete coverage of this vitally important matter.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, to permit me to make an inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. If the report is made as a report of the Foreign Relations Committee, would it be proper to characterize it—in the language which was used here yesterday—as a fraud and a hoax?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's question. If the report is labeled "Report of the Foreign Relations Committee," I think it would mislead the American people. I do not wish to identify myself with the charges which were made yesterday, when various persons, especially some Members of the Senate, were charged with engaging in a fraud and a hoax. I think it is most unfortunate that such language was used.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Is it the opinion of the Senator from New Jersey, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, that the report will not represent the true fact to the American people if it is issued as a report of the full committee?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Definitely so.

Mr. CAPEHART. In other words, the Senator from New Jersey thinks, does he, that the report, if issued as a report of the full Foreign Relations Committee, will definitely mislead the American people and will misrepresent the fact?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yes. Therefore, before the report is printed and before it is circulated all over the country, I think it should be made very clear, as the report indicates, that it is a report of only three members of a subcommittee of the Foreign Relations Committee, not a report of the entire Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. First of all, Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from New Jersey is a distinguished member of the Foreign Relations Committee——

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, let me say that I am a member of the committee; I do not express an opinion as to whether I am a distinguished member.

Mr. DONNELL. I did not ask that question of the Senator, for of course it would be embarrassing to him.

Does the distinguished Senator from New Jersey know whether the full Foreign Relations Committee has directed that the title page of the report which was filed yesterday be removed? I refer to the title page reading in part "Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations Pursuant to Senate Resolution 231"? Has any authority been granted by the full committee to remove that title page?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Not so far as I know; and I hope that title page will not be removed, because it designates just what the report is.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Has any authority been granted by the Committee on Foreign Relations, so far as the Senator from New Jersey knows, to remove, following the word "Contents," appearing on page III, the words "Report of the subcommittee"?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Not so far as I know. I do not know that the committee has acted in any of those matters at all.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Without going through the entire report of the subcommittee, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether the Committee on Foreign Relations has authorized any deletion from the subcommittee's report, on page 4, of the words:

> We, as members of the subcommittee—

Or has the full committee authorized the deletion of the words, on page 29 of the report:

> The conclusions of this subcommittee in regard to each allegation made by Senator McCarthy are as follows—

Or has the full committee authorized the deletion, on page 170 of the report of the subcommittee, of the following:

> Respectfully submitted.
> Millard E. Tydings, Chairman.
> Theodore Francis Green.
> Brien McMahon.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. No; I think no such action has been taken.

As I said before, I hope no such action will be taken, because the passages the Senator from Missouri has just read properly designate what the report is. I am glad the Senator from Missouri has brought up these points, because they are the same points that I am making.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further inquiry?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Yesterday the Senator from New Jersey referred to the fact that there is some sort of understanding in the Committee on Foreign Relations that the records of its proceedings will not be referred to or quoted on the floor of the Senate. Did I correctly understand the Senator from New Jersey in regard to that matter?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yes; and I am about to speak on that point at this time.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator be so kind, when he discusses that point, to discuss it in view of the fact that the Reorganization Act, which was passed in the Seventy-ninth Congress, being Public Law 601, generally known as the LaFollette-Monroney Act, provides as follows, in section 133 (b):

> Each such committee shall keep a complete record of all committee action. Such record shall include a record of the votes on any question on which a record vote is demanded.

When the Senator from New Jersey discusses this question, will he discuss the question of how any committee record kept pursuant to the LaFollette-Monroney Act can be of the slightest assistance to the Senate unless the Senate has an opportunity to see the record—a record which, according to that law, must be kept.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad the Senator from Missouri has brought up that point.

The rule we have in the committee does not prevent any Senator from seeing the records of the meetings of the committee; but the rule we have simply prohibits members of the committee from quoting hither and yon from the minutes of the committee's meetings, less there be quotations out of context. I was not present when that rule was adopted; but on at least one occasion a quotation was given out of context, and it did not give the correct impression.

So we agreed, and quite properly so, that we would not quote from the committee's records; but we did indicate, as I think it was correct for us to do, that we could refer to what the committee's records contained.

Yesterday, Mr. President, I referred to the vote which was taken in the Foreign Relations Committee, first on the question of receiving the report of the subcommittee, and then on the question of discharging the subcommittee from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 231.

Then the question arose as to how the full committee should handle the report of the subcommittee.

My recollection of the language of the motion made at that time was that the committee should transmit—not report, but transmit—the report of the subcommittee to the Senate, without recommendation.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Does such action by the full committee comply with the terms of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. That is a question. We discussed it in the full committee at great length.

Of course it could be argued that we would be complying with the resolution by saying, "We have examined the report of the subcommittee, and it is our report."

We have discussed that matter quite fully in the full committee.

I have gone through the record of the committee's meeting, to see whether there was approval of that position, or whether there was a decision that the committee take a vote on the merits of that question, and whether there was approval of this, that or the other position.

To follow up the questions asked me a few moments by the Senator from Missouri, let me say that I assume that every Member of the Senate is entitled to inspect the records of any committee, unless a matter of security is involved; for instance, a matter which the Armed Services Committee would not wish to have generally inspected. But, generally speaking, I have assumed—without asking the question—that any Member of the Senate could examine the records of the committee.

So, Mr. President, for the benefit of my colleagues, and to save their time, I shall read now the pages of the committee's minutes which show any action on the question of approval or disapproval of the report of the subcommittee or on the question of whether the subcommittee should be discharged from further service under the terms of Senate Resolution 231, either with approval or or with disapproval, or in regard to whether the report of the subcommittee should be accepted by the full committee as its report; and I shall state the pages separately. Those matters were discussed in the committee; and it was agreed by all of us in the full committee that we were not passing on the report in any way, shape, or manner.

It was admitted, as the committee's records show, that the members of the committee had not read the report, except possibly the chairman of the subcommittee; that at least the two minority members of the subcommittee had not even had the report submitted to them for their consideration, but that the report was simply submitted by the three majority members of the subcommittee as the report of the subcommittee, on the assumption that the minority members would not agree to it, and that therefore there was no use in consulting them about it.

So the report came in as the report and the conclusions of the three majority members of the subcommittee. I am not arguing now whether the report is or is not a correct one; but I simply point out that the other members of the Foreign Relations Committee, who had not had an opportunity to read the report, could not accept the report or could not pass on its merits.

So, Mr. President, after discussion in the full committee, it was simply decided that the report of the subcommittee should be transmitted to the Senate, without recommendation.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I hold in my left hand a copy of what was filed yesterday, which has on the outside of it, "Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations, pursuant to Senate Resolution 231." I hold in my right hand a booklet which was just handed to me a moment ago, entitled "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, pursuant to Senate Resolution 231." I ask the Senator whether any authority has been given by the Committee on Foreign relations so far as he knows to change the document which was filed yesterday, and of which I have a copy in my left hand, so as to read differently in the copy which is now being printed for public distribution throughout the United States. Was any such authority granted?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I will say to the Senator that no such authority was given. The same report has just been handed to me. It surprised me, because I had hoped I might make my point here before the final printing of the report was made.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that in my left hand I have a table of contents appearing on page III, which reads "Contents—1. Report of the Subcommittee."

I hold in my right hand a booklet—the booklet which was just handed to me—which has eliminated the words "Report of the Subcommittee." Does the Senator know of any authority that the Senate has given or that the Committee on Foreign Relations or anybody has given for the deletion from the document that was filed yesterday of the words which I have referred to, and which were the subject of controversy yesterday on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. No; I know of none. I may say that I should like to finish my statement. The point I was making——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Let me finish this statement, please, and then I shall be glad to yield. I want to make my statement complete as to what was troubling me in this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey declines to yield.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I decline to yield for a moment until I finish this statement. Last night and this morning I went through the transcript of the committee record. I tried to note the pages and the very place where these questions came up for approval or disapproval, where, for instance, the questions came up of whether we were reporting for the committee or were reporting for the subcommittee. It was definitely set forth that the report of the subcommittee would be transmitted to the Senate without remarks of any kind, without comment. The pages where these references appear, in case Senators want to read the transcript, are pages 8, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 30, 31, 32, 33, 39, 41, 42, 43, 44, 48, 54, 57, 58, 66, 67, and 69. I have included reference to the pages showing the motions which were made and agreed to in regard to these issues. The discussion is quite full. There is a constant repetition of this question of whether we were simply transmitting—and the word "transmit" was used advisedly—the report of the subcommittee or whether it was to be a committee report.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I will yield in a moment. I think we are justified in presenting this matter as a very important issue because I am sure that no member of the Foreign Relations Committee would want to mislead the public as to what was being put out by the committee. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to ask the Senator a question. He says there was a motion about "transmitting," and so on. What was the question that was voted on in the committee? The Senator knows what was in the transcript.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. If the Senator will let me waive the rule and read from the transcript, I will read the motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the Senator has been giving his memory of these matters. What is the Senator's memory about this?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. On which vote?

Mr. CONNALLY. On the final vote on this matter.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The final vote was to transmit the report of the subcommittee to the Senate without recommendation.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator is absolutely in error, as he will ascertain if he will consult the transcript which he has in his hand—the original transcript. The motion was that the committee report to the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator is correct. I apologize.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well. That is what I wanted to bring out.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator moved that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee report to the Senate, through the chairman, or through someone designated by him, without comment.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. But let me remark that that is the first place where the word "report" was used because throughout these particular proceedings, when the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] was discussing the question, he used the word "transmit."

Mr. CONNALLY. The committee did not vote on what the Senator from Florida said. They voted on the question stated by the chairman.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It was the difference between the words "transmit" and "report"—that is, to "transmit" or "report" to the Senate the report of the subcommittee without comment. I will not argue with the Senator about the words. Either way, it means the same thing. Everyone understood it. It was understood that we were transmitting the report of the subcommittee, and that the committee itself was taking no action on it because the members of the committee admitted that they had not read the report. So how could they make a report they had not read?

Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Did the Foreign Relations Committee have any meeting between yesterday noon, when the report was submitted to the Senate, and the present time?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. No; that is, I have no knowledge of any meeting during that time.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Michigan has just been handed——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a second? I should like in a moment to propound a question. I observe that the Senator from Texas is leaving the Chamber. I should like him to know that I am going to ask a question in a minute which will indirectly, at least, be addressed to the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I do not answer questions unless they are addressed to me.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield that I may ask a question which I will address to the Senator from Texas, if I may have unanimous consent so to do?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from Missouri for the purpose of asking a question of the Senator from Texas, on condition that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the question I desire to aks the Senator from Texas is this: Will he, at this point in the proceedings, permit the record to be brought to the Senate, particularly the pages which have been referred to and identified by the Senator from New Jersey, in order that there may be in the RECORD now what those pages show? I ask the Senator whether he will permit that?

Mr. CONNALLY. What is the Senator talking about? What pages?

Mr. DONNELL. The pages from the transcript of the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no authority to do that, under the rule, which is well established. That rule was adopted a long time ago. It is to the effect that minutes of the committee, in executive session, cannot be used on the floor. I did not make the rule. But it was made, and that is the rule of the Foreign Relations Committee. I cannot break it, even under the persuasive oratory of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to ask one other question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am happy to yield for that purpose, on the same condition.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas whether the record of the Foreign Relations Committee is available to any Member of the Senate, in the office of the Foreign Relations Committee, and if so, whether I may have his leave, as chairman of the committee, to make a personal examination of the contents, copy the contents, and bring them to the floor of the Senate, either this afternoon or tomorrow?

Mr. CONNALLY. No. The Senator may consult them, but when he asks that he be permitted to make copies and bring them to the Senate floor, my answer is that that would be a violation of the rule. I have no objection to the Senator's going to the committee room and reading the record and finding out all it contains.

Now, listen. Here is what happened in the committee, some time in 1949. There was colloquy in the committee. Mr. President, it is suggested to me that even this is a transcript of proceedings in an executive session of the committee. But I can state that what I have indicated is the rule of the committee. It was a rule adopted by action of the committee, not by me.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey permit me to address a further inquiry to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield again, on the same condition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and consent is given accordingly.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, do I not have a voice in whether I shall yield or not?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Texas to yield. I know his courtesy is such that he can always be depended upon to yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Go ahead. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas, Will the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations and the record to which I referred be open to any Senator, including myself, this afternoon and tomorrow? Before the Senator answers the question, I desire to say that if I go there, I am going to take a paper and pencil and copy what I read. With that notice, I ask the Senator whether the records will be open to me for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. They will be open to the Senator if he desires to go to the committee room, but I am not going to make any agreement or promise about what the effect of his going there may be. If the Senator wishes to take with him paper and pencil, that is his responsibility, not mine. Inviting someone into the office of the committee is like inviting him into one's house. I simply invite a person into my house; I do not have to question him as to whether he is going to steal the silver. [Laughter.]

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I shall be glad to yield if the Senator assures me that he will not steal the silver.

Mr. DONNELL. I promise the Senator from New Jersey that I shall not steal the silver.

The delightful humor of the Senator from Texas is always appreciated. We all admire and regard with great esteem our distinguished colleague from Texas. His delightful humor is one of the rarest spots in senatorial experience——

Mr. CONNALLY. Period. Stop right there.

Mr. DONNELL. To my mind, Mr. President, this is not a case in which we should be dissuaded from duty, and I know the Senator does not attempt to dissuade any of us from duty by the mere humor of the situation nor by an illustration which obviously is not seriously intended. We are here as Members of the United States Senate to find out the facts, to find whether this document which is about to be circulated throughout the Nation is the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations, although, yesterday, when it was filed, it had on its title sheet the words "Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations." We are here to find out whether the fact is that the records of the committee show that this is a report of the committee. It cannot be considered that I would be guilty of stealing the silver or anything else if I should go to the committee and impress on a piece of paper what I find in order that it might remain at least partially in my memory. It is my expectation, intention, and promise to the Senate that I shall go to the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, request permission to see the files, and while I am there I expect to copy a portion of the files which refer to this subject matter and to report what I find.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, answering the Senator's question, I am not the guardian of the conduct or personal actions of the Senator from Missouri. He says he is going to the office of the committee to read what transpired in the Committee on Foreign Relations. I request that he read page 69.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall read it.

Mr. CONNALLY. Read page 69 and note the question which was put to the committee by the chairman, and then note what follows as to the vote. What the Senator does is his responsibility and not mine; but if he is going to do any reading, I hope he will read that page, instead of reaching around somewhere else and ducking the main question. Read page 69. Will the Senator agree to do that?

Mr. DONNELL. I shall read it with the utmost care and shall report to the Senate every word that is in it.

May I say, also, that I do not believe any Member of the Senate, including my good friend from Texas, thinks I am going to duck around and try to evade the issue. I am going to the committee to find out, if I can, what the action of the Committee on Foreign Relations was, with respect to this report, and to bring to the Senate information as to what the action was.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Let me say to the Senator from Missouri that I think it will be a fine service which he will render, because if I have in any way misinterpreted the language of the transcript, I want it called to my attention, and I shall be glad to admit any mistake I may have made. Page 69 was one of the points I wanted to deal with.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. The junior Senator from Michigan read from the original report which was filed yesterday, having taken it from the desk. The title page read as follows:

Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations pursuant to Senate Resolution 231.

Within the past 5 or 10 minutes a page has delivered to the junior Senator from Michigan a report, No. 2108, which has on the title page the following:

State Department Employee Loyalty Investigation—Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations Pursuant to Senate Resolution 231.

In other words, it now appears as being a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Does the Senator from New Jersey know whether there has been a meeting of the committee to authorize the change in the wording which has been read to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. As I said to the Senator from Missouri, who asked the same question, there has been no meeting that I know of. The very thing I have been trying to bring before the Senate is that this change of title is not, in fact, the committee's action. When I opened my remarks I endeavored to bring to the attention of the Senate the fact that the hearings show it was the purpose of the committee to do nothing except to transmit to the Senate the report of the subcommittee. That was the purpose of my earlier statement.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator have before him a copy of Report No. 2108, which has been handed to us within the past few minutes?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator be kind enough to turn to page 4 and note the third paragraph on that page? Does he note there that while on the title page are the words "Report of a Subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations," on page 4, at the beginning of the third paragraph, it says:

> We, as members of the subcommittee.

Does the Senator observe that?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I observe it, now that the Senator has called my attention to it.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator also observe that at page 170 of Report No. 2108 there appear these words and names:

> Respectfully submitted.
> MILLARD E. TYDINGS, chairman.
> THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN.
> BRIEN MCMAHON.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I note that. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DONNELL. Were those Senators members of the subcommittee which has been referred to in the colloquy?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. They were the majority members. The other members were the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], who did not sign this report.

Mr. DONNELL. Has the Committee on Foreign Relations had witnesses before it in this investigation, or have those witnesses come before the subcommittee?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. They have come before the subcommittee, entirely, so far as I know.

Mr. DONNELL. I should like to ask, without burdening the Senator with all the detail of it, if he will be kind enough to turn to page 5 of the report, under the heading "Initial phases of the inquiry," and state whether the first sentence reads as follows:

> The first witness to appear before us was Senator MCCARTHY.

I emphasize the word "us." Does the Senator see that?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I see that; and obviously it is the subcommittee's report.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator cast his eye down to the last paragraph on that page, which begins as follows:

> We requested the loyalty files concerning these individuals—

And so forth. Does the Senator observe that?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I observe that.

Mr. DONNELL. And the "we" refers to the subcommittee?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. It must refer to the subcommittee, because, so far as I know, the full committee never requested any files. I invite the Senator's attention to the table of contents on page III, in which, in the second line, are the words "Conception of the subcommittee's duty." It then refers to page 4. That is corroborative of what the Senator from Missouri is trying to bring out, namely, that this document, although it is the report of the subcommittee, has been titled so as to appear to be the report of the whole committee.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator turn to page 47, which I have chanced to turn to—similarly to the manner in which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] made his examination of the 12 or 15 files of the 81 files involved—and glance at the section headed "Conclusion"? I notice the following language:

> The evidence before this subcommittee—

And I underscore with my voice the word "subcommittee"—

> The evidence before this subcommittee—

And so forth. I call attention also to the beginning of the next paragraph:

> In consideration of the charges made against Miss Kenyon, this subcommittee—

The Senator sees those words, does he?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I see the same words.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the Senator agree with me that all of that illustrates the fact that the title page has been changed by the omission of the words "Report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations," which appeared on the document which was received yesterday and ordered filed by the Vice President? Does not the conclusion follow irresistibly that this document is mislabeled when it is marked "Report of the Committee on Foreign Relations," and that the document, to quote the Vice President yesterday, distinctly speaks for itself, although he ruled that the document filed was the report of the full committee? Does not the conclusion follow irresistibly that the document is the report of the subcommittee, and that if it is handed out to the public as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations it is not a correct representation to the public? Does not the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am in accord with the Senator's statement, and I thank him for helping to build up the point I wanted to make in opening my statement. In other words, I feared it would be a misrepresentation to the public if we did not clear up this vitally important question, namely, "Was the Foreign Relations Committee instructed by committee vote to transmit a copy of the subcommittee's report, or was it adopting it as its own report?"

The Foreign Relations Committee never examined the report, and never had anything to do with it. It simply transmitted it to the Senate. As the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] pointed out, the words "report" and "transmit" were used interchangeably, but the motion of the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] called for the transmission of the report to the Senate. There was no discussion of the meaning of the words. They meant exactly the same thing to us.

Mr. BREWSTER. May I ask a question at that point?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Maine addressed the Chair, the Chair did not hear the Senator.

Mr. BREWSTER. I did not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator from New Jersey yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I am sure the Senator from New Jersey would not suggest that the investigation of this matter by our subcommittee was not within the contemplation of the Senate resolution. A reading of the resolution itself discloses the following:

> Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation—

And so on. So the resolution adopted by the Senate specifically authorized the inquiry to be made by a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the concurrence or by the direction of the committee itself, designated the distinguished subcommittee, consisting of five members, and named as its chairman the eminent Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS]. The subcommittee discharged its duties, made its report to the full committee, and the full committee transmitted the report by unanimous vote to the Senate itself. Therefore, how can the Senator suggest that the resolution has not been thoroughly complied with?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. In answer to what the Senator has said, of course we all know that the work could be done by a subcommittee. There is no question about that. The Senator from Florida must remember that lengthy discussion was had on the whole question.

Mr. PEPPER. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator from Florida used the word "transmit" all through the discussion. The understanding was that the report would be sent to the Senate for whatever it might be worth. It was admitted that no one had read the report except the Senator from Maryland. I do not think the Senator from Florida would say that he had read the report or that he was prepared to pass on the merits of the report.

Mr. PEPPER. I read it as an individual. No one is claiming that the investigation was made by the Committee on Foreign Relations as a whole committee. The investigation was made by a subcommittee consisting of five members of the whole committee, who were named by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was the subcommittee that made the report to the full committee, and the full committee sent the report to the Senate. So I do not see how anyone can suggest any irregularity.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. There is no irregularity involved in the subcommittee's making its report to the full committee, even though I did object to the report being released to the press before anyone had seen it. I was told that the press had it last Friday, and I did not see it until Monday, but I will pass that over. I am not objecting to the fact that the subcommittee made its report to the full committee. I am objecting strenuously to the implication that the full committee ever acted on the report, or ever took a vote on it, or did anything else except to transmit it.

That was brought out throughout the discussion. The Senator from Maryland used the word "transmit." He stated he did not care to have approval or disapproval of the report. He merely wanted it transmitted to the Senate. It is now being printed as a report of the whole committee. I want to make it perfectly clear that I cannot be a party to this being done, and I do not want my name to appear on it as subscribing to its being a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I object to that being done. As a member of the full committe I have a right to object.

Mr. PEPPER and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. DONNELL. Will the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has yielded to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Has the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee ever suggested that the full committee made the inquiry and that the full committee was making any recommendation to the Senate? No one has ever made any such claim. To my knowledge, the matter is here exactly as it actually transpired. The Senate adopted a resolution. I read from it again:

> Resolved, That the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation—

The subcommittee named by the full committee made the investigation, as authorized to do by the Senate. It made the investigation and submitted its report to the full committee. The full committee transmitted the report to the Senate. The report is here before the Senate. An authorized agency of the Senate, a subcommitte, has made the investigation.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yielded to the Senator for a question. If he wants to answer his own question in his own time, I have no objection.

Mr. PEPPER. I add the words: "Is that not so?"

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. The Senator has met the technicality.

No, it is not so, because the committee did not pass on the report. Therefore, to have it printed as a report of the Committee on Foreign Relations is misleading the entire American public. I merely desire to state that, so far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee, I had not had time to read the report when I received it. I was called to a meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee before I had time to read it. It was sent to me the night before, and I could not read it because I was busy. I went to the meeting. It was presented in a few words by the chairman. I did not sign the report. None of us were asked to sign it. The question was raised whether we ought to approve it or disapprove it. The chairman of the subcommittee said that he did not want a vote on approving it or disapproving it. All he wanted was to transmit it to the Senate, so it could be printed. That is all that came up in the committee at any time. Now, to have it printed as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations is misleading to the American public. It is something that we should not be doing in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. PEPPER subsequently said: Mr. President, a moment ago I stated that the vote in the Foreign Relations Committee with respect to the report of the subcommittee concerning the loyalty inquiry was 11 to 0. I inadvertently made an error. The vote was 9 to 2. It was 11 to 0 to receive the report and discharge the subcommittee. Then the vote was 9 to 2 to report the report of the subcommittee to the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. I understood the Senator to say that he objects to this report going out as the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations with his name attached to it.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I am.

Mr. DONNELL. Am I correct in understanding that the Senator does not consider that this report, No. 2108, is the report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations. Is it not correct that the Senator considers, instead, that it is merely the report of the subcommittee? Am I correct in my understanding?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I agree with what the Senator has said. That is the point I have tried to make. I think it is vitally important.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, in view of the fact that we have had the words "fraud" and "hoax" bandied around this Chamber in connection with this report, and with the allegations that there is Communist infiltration into the Government; and in view of the further fact that the Senator from New Jersey has told us candidly that if this document goes out as a report of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, as the new jacket on the report now indicates, it will not be an accurate designation; and in view of the fact that he has told us, further, that the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has never authorized such a report or the issue of such a jacket, numbered deceptively as "Report No. 2108," it seems to me that such a misrepresentation must be a fraud and such a misrepresentation must be a hoax on the American public.

It occurs to me that that is what the chairman of the subcommittee [Mr. TYDINGS] had in mind when he was using the words "fraud" and "hoax" in connection with the problem before us, and I ask the Senator from New Jersey if he does not agree that if we are to maintain the authority of the United States Senate it is imperative that our documents mean what they say and say what they mean, that if they are reports of committees they should so indicate? Certainly it is not just or honest or fair to the American public to permit a document to go out under the label of the Committee on Foreign Relations which the committee's own minutes indicate never has been approved, which is a total misrepresentation and not a committee report at all.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, that is the point of my bringing this matter up this afternoon. I did not know this jacket had been prepared. I anticipated it, because I had heard something about it, and it seemed to me that it was proper to bring to the attention of the whole Senate what this is, and my desire to make vigorous protest against it.

Mr. MUNDT. I hope the Senator from Missouri will carry out his public-service suggestion, as he has indicated he would, and that he will get the minutes of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and make them available to the Senate and to the public, so that this kind of "hoax" and this type of "fraud" may not be perpetrated on the American public under the authority of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the United States Senate.

Mr. FLANDERS and Mr. DONNELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield; and, if so, to whom?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield first to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. I desired to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he would ask unanimous consent that he might yield only while I made a motion without his losing the floor.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Does the Senator desire me to yield so that he may make a motion?

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I will ask the ruling of the Chair as to whether the Senator from New Jersey can yield the floor while the Senator from Vermont makes a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey may not do so without asking unanimous consent.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent that I may yield the floor temporarily while the Senator from Vermont makes a motion, as he has requested, and that I do not lose the floor.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I would have to know the nature of the motion. Otherwise, I would have to object.

Mr. FLANDERS. I will make the motion, so that the Senator——

Mr. McFARLAND. No; I am not going to wait for the motion to be made.

Mr. FLANDERS. I cannot explain the motion without making it.

Mr. McFARLAND. The Senator may explain it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has asked unanimous consent to yield for a purpose stated, and the Senator from Arizona objects.

Mr. FLANDERS. Then I will explain the nature of the motion.

Mr. McFARLAND. Very well.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senator from Vermont, will the Senator yield to me before he yields the floor?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from South Dakota expressed the hope that the information as to what is in the minutes of the Committee on Foreign Relations be brought in. I desire to assure him, and every other Member of the Senate, that I shall make every effort to procure that information. I shall go in person to the office of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and if I am able to obtain the information, as I assume I will be, I shall bring it to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield the floor.

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I have asked Mr. Trice to notify the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] that I intend to reply to his remarks of yesterday.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. JENNER. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I wish to announce at this time to the Senators present that as soon as the Senator from Indiana has concluded his remarks, or other Senators who wish to speak on the matter now under discussion have concluded their remarks, I intend to move the consideration of a piece of emergency legislation involving the Maritime Service as it relates to our war effort.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield to me so I may make a brief explanation, requiring about 2 minutes?

Mr. JENNER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin on the condition that I do not lose the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator from Indiana yielding to the Senator from Wisconsin without losing the floor? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I sat in the Senate all day yesterday and listened to the discussion which occurred on the floor, and I have heard considerable of the discussion today as to what took place in the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee on Tuesday last. Unfortunately, I was not present at that meeting. I was called by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] to attend a meeting of the Judiciary Committee. I arrived at my office from Wisconsin about 10 o'clock in the morning and at 10:10, as I recall, I went to the Committee on the Judiciary committee room and remained there all morning, uninformed of proceedings in the Foreign Relations Committee. My information as to what took place in the meeting of the Foreign Relations Committee came to me later. As soon as I could, Tuesday afternoon, after hearing of the session of the Foreign Relations Committee, I did consult with the clerk of the committee and was briefed on the subject. I have since looked at the minutes briefly.

In the motion which was made by the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] in committee the word "transmit" was used. However, when the motion was stated by the chairman of the committee the word "report" was used. In the meanwhile there had been a discussion in committee as to whether or not the committee would approve the report. As I recall, from a very brief analysis, and from what was told me, it was the consensus of those present that there could be no acceptance or approval of the report until the report had been studied.

That is about all I know of what went on in the Foreign Relations Committee meeting. Of course, not being present, I personally did not accept or approve the report, nor could I, if I had been present without having at least studied the record; and, in view of the discussion which has been held here by those who constitute the investigatory subcommittee, it would appear to me to be very difficult for any one of us to arrive at any decision until we had an opportunity to go over the testimony. In other words, it seems to me that those of us here, sitting as we do in the nature of a review court, have got to examine the evidence and see if the evidence sustains the general findings and if the issue raised by the Senate resolution has been answered. However, I must say that with three members or four members of said subcommittee agreeing in relation to certain individuals mentioned, the issue provided by the resolution still remains unanswered. That issue is whether or not there are or have been any disloyal persons in Government.

I shall have something to say later, but I believe in view of the general discussion here as to whether or not this is the report of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, it is important that I at least express my own views on the report. The intent seems plain. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee meant to transmit the report but not approve the same.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JENNER. I shall not yield until I finish my remarks, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. President, never has the Senate been reduced to such a spectacle as was presented on this Senate floor yesterday afternoon.

Certainly, never before have I ever seen a man go to such desperate lengths to defend his right to be wrong.

The fact that the Senator from Maryland saw fit to attack me personally in his tirade as an accomplice of Stalin is relatively unimportant.

All trained seals have to stoop to pick up the ball when they drop it, and the attack of the Senator from Maryland on me is only an indication of how low he is willing to stoop to pick up the administration's ball, no matter how rotten the filth it has rolled through.

Certainly in this hour of crisis the personal political future of anyone of us, including my own, is utterly insignificant and I have learned that since a man has to live with his own conscience, it matters not what even the majority thinks of him so long as his conscience is clear.

For myself, I am far more interested in what my fellow Americans will say of me 25, 50, 100 years from now than I am of what they are saying today or may say tomorrow.

I have also learned when one's personal integrity is attacked in the gutter of ward politics, one only covers himself with another's slime when one joins in the fight on that level.

But there is one more thing I have learned, Mr. President, and that is, when in such a time of crisis as this, men, in order to save their own miserable political hides or to cover their own bloody tracks of blunders and betrayals, drag the future of America down into the muck and mire of gutter politics, they can count me in because where my country is at stake I will get down there and wallow around with the worst of them.

The Senator from Maryland has now presented a spectacle which has transformed the majority of the United States Senate into an instrument of mob rule with which the masterminds of this administration can ride rough shod over facts, legitimate evidence, the truth itself, the sincere concern of a unanimous minority, and even flout the deepening fears and misgivings of the American people who are asked now to sacrifice, suffer, and die to cover up the bloody tracks of treason.

By his actions the Senator from Maryland has dismissed any doubt I may ever have entertained concerning my own convictions, concerning the kind of an America I believe in, and concerning the kind of constitutional government and way of life I want to preserve to the future.

The Senator from Maryland has charged that the position I hold faithfully reflects the Communist Party line; and he would have the American people believe that he has been defending and continues to defend America's most vital interests, principles, and security.

Well, Mr. President, I just cannot let this challenge go unanswered.

The Senator from Maryland has presented and defended a position and a thesis which proves we are poles apart, at opposite extremes. The issue he has raised is this: Who has been playing the Communist Party line, the Senator from Maryland or the Senator from Indiana?

Let us examine the record and see.

I know of no better way of bringing this issue to a head than by putting the facts on the table, naming names, citing chapter and verse.

I am sure the Senator from Maryland is far too clever to expect anyone to be fooled by his flattery of my importance or influence in the United States Senate.

I am only a freshman Senator who has served 3½ years in this body. I am a member of the Judiciary Committee and the Committee on Rules and Administration. More often than not, Mr. President, I have stood with a small minority within the minority party.

What is the position that I have consistently defended? I believe that the eruption of war in Korea is the final proof that this administration's pro-Soviet propagandists, both at home and abroad, have been leading the American people, for the past 18 years, from one lie to another, from one sell-out to another, from one catastrophe to another, and from one war to another, behind false slogans, false panaceas, false programs, and false promises.

I have consistently sought to restore traditional American principles to our foreign policies, to repudiate the betrayals of the past, and to guarantee against their repetition in the future.

I have consistently opposed the squandering of American resources and manpower down the rat holes of Europe and Asia, in a determined effort to do everything within my power to keep America sound, strong, and free.

As the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] said recently in the Senate—and I suppose he will be called a Communist, too, following the line—when will we learn that we cannot buy friends with money? We have sent to the South Koreans $360,000,000 in economic aid, since the end of the war; and there has been available to them $100,000,000 for their defense; and when our Army was taken out of South Korea, we left there another $100,000,000 worth of equipment for them—a majority of which now is in the hands of the Communists, and is being turned against American boys.

Mr. President, Senators must wake up. When will we learn that we cannot buy friendship?

I have continually raised my voice in warning against the folly of pursuing a policy that played directly into Stalin's hands by enabling him to force America to spend herself into bankruptcy.

Certainly no one in his right mind could ever charge that for the past 18 years this position of mine has represented anything but the minority view.

What is the position that the Senator from Maryland has held during these past 18 years, which he now asks us to embrace permanently in the future? How has this position advanced America's interests and the cause of peace?

Mr. President, 5 days before the Korean war, Mr. Truman said, "We are nearer peace than at any time in the last 5 years."

Mr. President, let us see about that. Let us look at the record and see who is following the Communist line.

Let us see whether the position the Senator from Maryland has held during the last 18 years has advanced the cause of peace or has helped to stop the march of communism.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland should know, for one thing he cannot plead is ignorance of what has taken place.

Of all the men in public office in America today, the Senator from Maryland is the one man who knows just what has happened during the past 18 years. He has been on the ground floor since 1933, in the formulation of the most crucial policies in American history. It is he who holds the dubious distinction of having first recommended Dean Acheson for service in the Government; and from that time to this, the Senator from Maryland has been "in the know."

Of course, Mr. President, we almost had a disc jockey in the Senate yesterday, but if the disc jockey ever comes into being and ever passes out cards, I shall wish to know the color of the cards of admission to the party, and I hope the disc jockey, if we ever have one in the Senate will, when he thinks of the fact that he is the one who has been responsible for bringing Dean Acheson into the Government, add to his repertoire the song, O, I've Gotta Wash That Man Right Out of My Hair. [Laughter.]

Yes, Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland has been consulted on the basic policies which have been formulated; he has helped formulate the overall strategy; he has lent his weight, his support, his prestige, and his power to the furtherance of these same policies.

If the truth were known, the Senator from Maryland has helped to mastermind the destiny of these United States throughout this tragic period, and his influence and power have grown until today he is a member of the three most important committees in the United States Senate, namely, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Armed Services Committee, of which he is chairman, and the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

With all the political and oratorical tricks at his command, he not only defends, without the slightest apology, the consequences of the past 18 years, but he has effrontery to insult our intelligence by asking us to believe that throughout this tragic period of 18 years our destiny has been in the hands of competent, patriotic, loyal Americans, and that we should be proud of this leadership.

Again I say, if any man ever knew what he was doing, the Senator from Maryland is that man, for he has even openly boasted on the Senate floor that he had access to information that was denied to others. The Senator from Maryland was telling the truth, for during the past 18 years he has been an intimate member of what have turned out to be political and family circles which have been pulling the strings of American foreign policy behind the scenes.

The political circle of which he has been a member is responsible for the recognition of Russia by these United States and is the originator of the vicious, treasonable propaganda that Russia was a God-fearing, law-abiding nation, dedicated to the sacredness of human personalities and committed to the cause of peace.

As a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Maryland would have us believe that the outrageous secret agreements during and since the war, have advanced the cause of peace and America's vital interests and security. He would even have us believe that those who were a party to those suicidal agreements were patriotic and loyal Americans, while those of us, such as the junior Senator from Indiana, who have condemned those secret sell-outs as treasonable, are supposed to be playing the Russian line.

It certainly is not difficult to call the hand of the Senator from Maryland, for the cards he is hiding are so red with the blood of treachery.

The following facts will prove that the Senator from Maryland is asking the American people to believe that anyone who seeks to correct these criminal betrayals or to expose their perpetrators in our midst is following the Communist line.

The Senator from Maryland certainly has a low opinion of the native intelligence of the American people, Mr. President; for although this administration's propagandists have thus far succeeded in hiding the staggering extent of America's sell-out to Stalin that has been engineered by our own so-called statesmen, truth will not remain forever on the scaffold and falsehood forever on the throne.

Can it be that the Senator from Maryland does not know that at Tehran, by the single stroke of a pen, an American President, moved by his behind-the-scene advisers, carved Europe in two, sold 100,000,000 people in eastern Europe into the bloody and tyrannical hands of Russia, and paralyzed the European economy?

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that at Yalta, under the influence of Alger Hiss, a dying American President sold Asia down the river, partitioned Korea at the thirty-eighth parallel, sold out China and Manchuria to Stalin and turned communism loose around one-half of the world?

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that the debacle in the Far East was made certain by the Potsdam Agreement, which was designed to destroy Germany and Japan, the only two powers in the world which have been able to stop the threatened aggression of Russia's oriental hordes?

With these criminal betrayals still on the diplomatic books, when has the Senator from Maryland ever raised his voice against them? Who is following the commie line?

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that for 500 years what Russia has been seeking to gain in a vicious struggle of power politics is, namely, salt-water ports in the Orient, and in the Mediterranean and in the North Sea, and that these have been handed to her on a silver platter in these three deals?

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that so far as the Orient is concerned, the Korean war is the inevitable consequence of the most completely documented conspiracy against the United States in history?

Does the Senator from Maryland honestly believe that the American people will accept his arguments that these things have just happened by coincidence?

Has the Senator from Maryland forgotten that no one yet knows who pushed a dying President into accepting Russia's offer to enter war in the Far East 1 week before Japan surrendered, when Admiral Zacharias, himself, admits that for 6 months our own State Department knew of the existence of a Japanese offer to surrender? Has anybody advised the Senator from Maryland, in the investigation that he has just gone through, who told Dean Acheson to take our troops out of Korea? Did the Senator from Maryland find that out in his very complete and thorough investigation which he has just completed and reported to the Senate? Who advised Dean Acheson and our State Department that he would not lift our hand to defend Formosa? Let us see who is following the "commie" line.

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that the Dean Acheson, Alger Hiss, Owen Lattimore, John Carter Vincent, and John Stewart Service, who engineered the sell-out of the Orient, really took over with Japan's surrender, and that our most highly trained and most competent experienced Far Eastern personnel were shoved out of the State Department, including Stanley Hornbeck, George Dooman, Joseph Ballantine, and Joseph Grew? That is when it took place, and they are practically all in the Department today.

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that when this crowd of master conspirators took over, their first official act was to slap General MacArthur in the face, to try to order him to execute the Emperor, and to issue the infamous document FEC-230 for the communization of the Japanese economy? Let us see who is following the "commie" line.

Ah, is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that the same pattern was repeated in China, where behind the propaganda line the Chinese Communists were "agrarian reformers"—just "agrarian reformers"?

Even General Marshall, himself, was made a stooge of these conspirators and was directed to force Chiang Kai-shek to take the Chinese Communists into his Government, along with their armies.

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that during these negotiations aid authorized by the United States Senate was deliberately withheld from Nationalist China until it arrived too late to prevent the Communists taking advantage of this lack of arms for almost 15 months, although the Congress had appropriated the money? Somebody, some little boy, some place, said, "Let them alone—let them rot."

Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that throughout this whole period this same crowd of conspirators peddled the vicious line to the American people and the world that was designed to betray our wartime ally, who for 8 years had heroically fought the Japanese, and further designed to advance the cause of communism in Asia?

Is the Senator from Maryland also ignorant of the fact that this identical pattern was extended to Korea, where, I am informed, Lt. Gen. John R. Hodges, commanding general of South Korea, also was ordered by the State Department to take the Communists into the South Korean Army?

And is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that John Foster Dulles stated to a group of Senators here on Capitol Hill just a few days ago, prior to the attack in Korea, that the State Department line was advocating that a good dose of communism would be good for the Asiatics? Wake up, Senators. Let us see who is following the commie line.

And is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the frightening success this State Department conspiracy has had in selling not only China but also America down the river until whereas, in 1945, Russia dominated 180,000,000 people, today she has enslaved over 800,000,000?

Does the Senator from Maryland think there would have been any need for the outrageous State Department white paper on China unless there was a criminal conspiracy to cover up?

Surely the Senator from Maryland has seen the document which I hold in my hand, which contains the charges presented by the Chinese Nationalist Government to the Security Council of the United Nations against Russia, with facts and figures and such authentic documents that the Russians have never answered these charges?

Certainly, even while this white paper was being issued, Secretary Acheson and his cohorts knew every single item in this Chinese Nationalist document to be true.

This is only part of the story. For this conspiracy not only was determined to sell China down the river, but Korea as well.

It was only a few days ago that Owen Lattimore advised the United States Government "to let Korea fall, but not to make it look as if we pushed it."

The sad thing about it, Mr. President, is that those who are being pushed now in Korea are the sons of the mothers of America.

It was not so long ago that the State Department issued a secret document announcing it was its intention to let even Formosa go.

In other words, these traitors were pushing Formosa along with China and Korea down the throat of the Russian bear.

Let us see who is playing the "Commie" line.

Think of it, Mr. President. These State Department conspirators have done their deadly work so well that, in spite of the fact that Ambassador Jessup had just returned from a 20,000-mile tour of the Orient, including Korea—in spite of the fact the Joint Chiefs of Staff had only recently toured all of the Pacific—in spite of the fact that John Foster Dulles, himself, had spoken in Seoul just a short time prior to the Korean outbreak, and Ambassador Muccio had been on the scene, together with the United Nations Commission for the last 2 years, and in spite of the fact the intelligence reports available through the different branches of the armed services were pouring into Washington, we were caught flat-footed in a Korean Pearl Harbor. How many times can that happen? How long can we stand it? Who is playing the "commie" line?

All the time our supreme commander in the Far East, General MacArthur, was barred from any jurisdiction, whatever, in the Korean theater. The State Department boys were running that. There are Senators who shed crocodile tears because our boys are being killed because of a conspiracy which has been perpetrated deliberately and criminally in our Government. Is the Senator from Maryland ignorant of the fact that the same group responsible for this debacle are in the State Department at this very moment with his official blessing? Does the Senator from Maryland honestly expect us to believe these things are just a coincidence; that they have not been deliberately engineered? Or does the Senator from Maryland just hope, along with the late Harry Hopkins, that the American people are "just too damned dumb" ever to catch on?

The issue then is, who is best serving Stalin's interest in the United States—the Senator from Maryland, who insists that these things have just happened, or the junior Senator from Indiana who knows these things could not just have happened, and who is determined to continue his fight to ferret out the master minds of this criminal conspiracy along with their criminal accomplices and clean them out of government?

What does the Senator from Maryland have to say in answer to the following proof that someone master-minded these betrayals?

I quote from Cordell Hull's memoirs:

> In general, I was not a social intimate of the President.
>
> I was not invited to White House dinners, except on official occasions, or to week-end excursions on Mr. Roosevelt's yacht or to Hyde Park.
>
> Moreover, I was frankly glad not to be invited into the White House groups where so often the "liberal" game was played on an extreme basis.
>
> I was known not to be an extreme liberal or semiradical, as were some of those who were close about the President, and my presence in their gatherings would have been as embarrassing to me as to them.
>
> The President's Cabinet filled, in general, a very minor role in the formulation of foreign policy.
>
> It was also natural that there should develop a so-called inside kitchen cabinet composed of a few persons.

Mr. President, I quote further from Cordell Hull:

> The President did not take me with him to Casablanca, Cairo, or Tehran Conferences

* * * nor did I take part in his military discussions with Prime Minister Churchill in Washington, some of which had widespread diplomatic repercussions.

I learned from other sources than the President what had occurred at the Casablanca, Cairo, and Tehran Conferences.

Mr. President, what happened at the Quebec Conference September 11, 1944, where the future of Germany was decided?

Again, our Secretary of State was not invited.

He was too American and too conservative for this gang of cut-throat conspirators the Senator from Maryland is busy defending.

Again I quote from Cordell Hull's diary:

Four days after the Conference began I was astonished to receive from the President a memorandum addressed to me, dated September 15, 1944, which indicated that he and Churchill had largely embraced Morgenthau's ideas * * *. The memorandum * * * stated:

"It was felt that the two districts should be put under somebody under the world organization (the UN, where Russia was to get the veto until every demand she made was gratified)."

Mr. President, Secretary Hull goes on to say:

In fact, the President did not seem to realize the devastating nature of the memorandum of September 15 to which he had put his "O. K.—F. D. R."

The President's memorandum also showed plainly that he had not understood the meaning of what he had agreed to at Quebec.

Note that.

At about this time Secretary Stimson had a talk with the President, from which Stimson drew the same conclusion.

Stimson informed me that the President was frankly staggered at hearing these sentences, and said that he had no idea how he could have initialed the memorandum, and that he had evidently done so without much thought.

Now, Mr. President, who is playing the "Commie line"? Who engineered the Yalta sell-out?

Again quoting Cordell Hull:

I should state at this point that I was not consulted by the President or anyone else on policy issues prior to or during the Yalta Conference.

This is our Secretary of State speaking in a time of great crisis.

He continues:

Nor was I informed beforehand of the purposes of this Government at any other important conference subsequently.

Then who was running the show?

According to Adolph Berle, one of Woodrow Wilson's and Franklin Roosevelt's trusted advisers:

In the fall of 1944 there was a difference of opinion in the State Department.

I felt that the Russians were not going to be sympathetic and cooperative.

The opposite group was largely Acheson's group, with Alger Hiss as his principal assistant.

The Senator from Maryland brought Dean Acheson into the Government and is proud of him. Who is playing the "Commie" line?

It is a matter of record, Mr. President, that in 1943 Dean Acheson, then Assistant Secretary of State, headed a group of State Department experts assigned to planning the size and duties of a world organization to prevent war.

And now Alger Hiss, on whom Dean Acheson will not turn his back, on whom the Senator from Maryland will not turn his back, stands as a convicted liar and perjurer, whose interdepartmental memos are still locked up in this administration's deep freezes, and the secret of his fellow conspirators along with them.

Who is playing the "Commie" line? Let us find out. No wonder the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] would not sign such a report. They want an honest report. They want the American people to know the facts and the truth as to what is going on in this beloved country of ours.

These are the known facts, to which the Senator from Maryland would have us forever close our eyes.

Who is following the "Commie" line? Is it the Senator from Maryland, who has conducted the most scandalous and brazen whitewash of treasonable conspiracy in our history, who would continue to cover up these termites and vermin, who, even while I speak, are gnawing at the foundations of our freedom, or is it the junior Senator from Indiana, who would ferret out these rats and fumigate their State Department haven?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I make a point of order. The Senator from Indiana is out of order in his remarks about the Senator from Maryland, and I invoke rule XIX of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana will take his seat.

(Mr. JENNER took his seat.)

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move that the Senator from Indiana be allowed to proceed in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nebraska. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it and the Senator from Indiana may proceed in order.

Mr. JENNER. The Senator from Maryland has charged that I have opposed this administration's 35 international hand-out schemes, in which we have squandered $35,000,000,000 in foreign hand-outs since the war.

This is true.

But he goes on to charge that this is playing Stalin's game, while he, who has supported these hand-outs has been fighting Communists.

What are the facts, Mr. President?

Which of us is doing more to advance or oppose the cause of communism by our stand?

Mr. President, I have consistently opposed the squandering of American resources abroad because I believe we were merely preparing the table for Stalin, as we did in Korea. We gave the Koreans $360,000,000. We appropriated $100,000,000 for military equipment for Southern Korea, and today it is all gone and practically all of it in the hands of the North Korean Reds. We keep pouring money into Europe. Why? Of course, I stand, as I said before, for the extension of the Monroe Doctrine to wherever the security of this Nation demands its extension. Why should we keep pouring money into France, for example, where they change their government about as often as the moon changes, where one-third of the population is Communist, and where one of the largest single political parties is Communist? The picture is about the same in Italy. Oh, let us wake up before it is everlastingly too late.

I continue to be determined to husband our resources and to give priority to our own staggering needs to meet even the minimum requirements for an impregnable national defense.

Mr. President, it is not so long ago that I found myself joined by such distinguished Americans as Mr. William Clayton, Mr. John Foster Dulles, General Bradley, Harold Stassen, and many others, who warned that we really were losing the cold war, and preparing the table for Stalin.

I have never posed as a military expert, Mr. President, but I still refuse to believe that when I took the oath of office as a Senator of the United States I was obligated to squander our substance in a suicidal attempt to underwrite everybody else's interest and security but our own.

This is my position, which the Senator from Maryland says directy reflects "the Commie line."

What is happening, Mr. President, to America when the Senator from Maryland charges that anyone who is determined to keep America sound, strong, and free is playing Stalin's game?

Only men who are desperate would so twist the truth into such an ugly shape.

But what of the Senator from Maryland?

He is a great authority on military affairs by his own admission, for he is chairman of the Armed Services Committee of the Senate, and he once attended a military conference in Brussels to discuss plans for a North Atlantic Pact, which did not even exist, and does not even exist today, except on paper.

Who has been most useful to the Communist cause?

Has it been the junior Senator from Indiana, or the Senator from Maryland, who advocates the squandering of America's billions to rearm so-called allies, who have neither the means nor the will to defend themselves, and who defends an administration which has presided over the spending of $89,000,000,000 for national defense during the past five peacetime years, and who now cries crocodile tears that even this gigantic sum has been so maladministered that American GI's have been dying in Korea trying to stop 60-ton Russian tanks with peashooters? Eighty-nine billion dollars have been spent in the past 5 years for the defense of this country. The distinguished Senator from Maryland is chairman of the Armed Services Committee, and our boys are dying trying to stop 60-ton tanks with peashooters. Who is playing the Commie line?

General Bradley, himself, has admitted that in spite of the enormous expenditure for national defense since the end of the war we cannot win a war, keep the peace, or defend ourselves.

The Senator from Maryland on February 6, 16, and 23 of this year actually advanced the proposition for general disarmament on top of the frightful neglect of our own national defense.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland is also a member of the Senate Committee on Atomic Energy, and certainly he cannot be ignorant of what has been going on in this field.

Again I ask, Mr. President, who is rendering the greatest service to communism—the junior Senator from Indiana, who knows just from reading the newspapers that the English spy, Dr. Klaus Fuchs, deliberately betrayed our atomic secrets into the hands of Russia, as a member of a gigantic atomic spy ring which the FBI has already started to round up, right under our noses, and who wants to help the FBI finish the job, or, is it the Senator from Maryland whose logic has become so twisted that he can see no relation between the American atomic spy ring, now being rounded up, and the Mackenzie King report on the Canadian spy trials, which no Member of Congress has ever seen, because it links this spy ring with officials who have either served or are still serving in the State Department?

No wonder we did not get an investigation, Mr. President. No wonder we got a "whitewash" report.

Surely the facts I have recounted are known to the Senator from Maryland and it is hard to see by what rhyme or reason the Senator expects us to believe he is ignorant of them, for any ignorance in these matters which the Senator may possess is deliberate ignorance.

I have never heard a more blasphemous perversion of the truth than the outburst of the Senator from Maryland yesterday giving a clean bill of health to the entire personnel of the State Department, when in addition to all the foregoing facts, he knows that the FBI at this moment has 21,104 cases of subversion it has never started to prosecute, when the Senator from Maryland knows also of the army of sexual perverts who are engaged in the filthy immorality of blackmail and degradation, and when the Senator from Maryland knows that J. Edgar Hoover has warned us of 55,000 known Communists who are becoming more numerous, more tricky, and more active than ever.

Mr. President, the frightening fact is that a Senator, of all people, who knows at least these sordid, terrifying facts to be true, would go to such staggering lengths to cover them up, along with whatever there may be of their rotten, slimy, treasonable implications.

A man must be really desperate when he will organize a conspiracy within his own political family circle to help cover up such a hideous perversion and betrayal of the public trust.

Is it not true, Senator TYDINGS, that you sponsored and continue to sponsor Dean Acheson?

Is it not true, Senator TYDINGS, that it is your own father-in-law, Mr. Davies, who, as our Ambassador to Russia, wrote as foul a piece of pro-Soviet propaganda as was ever designed to corrupt the minds of the American people?

Is it not true that Mr. Seth Richardson, who is chairman of the President's Loyalty Review Board, is a law partner of your father-in-law?

Is it not true that the counsel you hired to do your work on this subcommittee, Mr. Morgan, was associated with Mr. Richardson and Mr. Hiss' pal, Mr. Kaufman, during the Pearl Harbor hearings, which applied an even more outrageous whitewash to the past?

Is it not also true, Senator TYDINGS, that after Ambassador Hurley was sabotaged by the State Department's pro-Communist clique, Mr. J. Leighton Stuart was appointed Ambassador to China as a direct slap in the face to the Nationalist Government, and that the whole of this story has not yet been told?

Mr. President, the issues I have discussed rise far beyond any conflict of politics or personality, for never before in our history did our own people need more truth and more light. Certainly never has there ever been such a frightening need for a restoration of their faith in their political leadership.

I still believe that only the truth can make and keep men free. The Senator from Maryland believes that the truth belongs only to a select inner circle of a new political aristocracy that has emerged on the American scene during the past 18 years, which, in the name of progress, prosperity, and peace, has succeeded only in selling us down the river, and leading us into three frightful wars in one generation.

I want to conclude my remarks by advising the Senator from Maryland that in my humble opinion everything he has been a party to in this mess, and his attempts to defend it, fly right in the face of the lessons of history.

I believe that the result of the spectacle to which the United States Senate has been reduced will be to arouse the American people to the fact that they dare no longer entrust the future to those who have betrayed the past.

And the day of reckoning is coming.

Mr. President, I desire to say that I have no medals, such as the distinguished Senator from Maryland told us yesterday he has. I did not know the distinguished Senator from Maryland was such a brave and heroic man until he told us from his own itsy-bitsy lips yesterday, but I do know that there is another medal which will probably come to him. It will be very large, and emblazoned with a single name:

"Thanks, from good old Joe, for a job well done."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES—EXTENSION OF ENLISTMENTS IN THE ARMED FORCES

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Armed Services I report two bills, which have been unanimously approved by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received.

The bills reported by Mr. TYDINGS, from the Committee on Armed Services, are as follows:

S. 3939. A bill to suspend restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 2116); and

S. 3937. A bill to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States; without amendment (Rept. No. 2117).

Mr. TYDINGS. The first bill (S. 3939) is to suspend restrictions on the authorized personnel strength of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes; the second bill is to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

Believing that the second bill (S. 3937) is imperative to the defenses of the country, as enlistments are expiring every day in the fighting forces, and that no debate will be entailed by the consideration of the second bill, I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration, coming, as it does, from the Armed Services Committee with a "must" attached to it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I also understood the request to be for immediate consideration.

Mr. TYDINGS. For the one bill (S. 3937). There are approximately 300,000 men in the Army, Navy, and Air Force whose enlistments will expire in the next calendar year. Under normal conditions these men would reenlist on a percentage basis of about 50 percent. These are trained men who cannot be replaced. It is not easy for the recruits to fill the shoes of these trained men.

Since men are dropping out of the armed services every day, the purpose of the bill for which I ask immediate consideration is to extend their enlistments until we can secure replacements to take the places vacated by the men who drop out.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I understand the distinguished Senator to say that the bill was reported from the Armed Services Committee unanimously.

Mr. TYDINGS. It was, and with an imperative plea from the Defense Department, and in line with the President's message, that we take quick action thereon.

Mr. WHERRY. No one wants to prevent quick action being taken. The Senator, however, has not even spoken to me about taking up the bill this afternoon. I wondered if there could be—no, Mr. President, I have no objection.

Mr. TYDINGS. Consideration of the bill will take only 5 minutes, in my opinion. If it takes longer I shall withdraw it.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland to give us in as much detail as he can the purpose of the bill. Are copies of the bill now available to Members of the Senate? Are they on the desks of Senators?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland has reported two bills, and has asked for present consideration of one of them, which the clerk will state by title.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Is the bill printed?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes, it is printed.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it available for distribution?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; it is available. I do not know where copies of it are, but the bill has been printed, and we have had it in our committee for some time.

Mr. WHERRY. I wonder if we cannot have a discussion of the bill until we find whether copies are available.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is a short bill, and I can read it in 2 minutes. Does the Senator want me to read it, or does he wish to have the clerk read it?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk says it is a short bill and that he can read it in 2 minutes.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Nebraska has no objection to the present consideration of the bill. If there are other Members on this side of the aisle who wish to object, I feel they should be given an opportunity to do so.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, this is a measure with which I am familiar——

Mr. MAGNUSON. No; I will say to the Senator that this is not our measure.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I wish to make one statement and then I shall be glad to yield. All the bill does is to extend the enlistment of men who are now in the Army, for 1 year, to prevent the loss of trained personnel, until we can supply the vacancies, 300,000 of which will be created, with men who in the meantime have been trained to take their places.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. We did the same thing in World War II, did we not?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; we did.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I did not quite understand the Senator. As I understood, he said that the bill had been reported from the Armed Services Committee unanimously.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Was the minority represented with respect to the measure?

Mr. TYDINGS. The minority members were all present except one, as I recall; and we were unanimous, not only in reporting the measure, but in realizing the seriousness of the situation, and the need for quick action upon it.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the Senator explain the measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the bill by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3937) to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the Armed Forces of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that Senate bill 3937 be given present consideration. Is there objection?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I shall not object, but could we have the bill read? The Senator said it would take only 2 minutes to read it.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The legislative clerk read the bill (S. 3937), as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That until July 9, 1951, the President shall be authorized to extend all enlistments in any component of the Army of the United States, the United States Navy, and the United States Marine Corps, including the Naval Reserve and the Marine Corps Reserve, and in any component of the Air Force of the United States for a period of not to exceed 12 months: Provided, That all persons whose terms of enlistments are extended in accordance with the provisions of this act shall continue during such extensions to be subject in all respects to the laws and regulations for the government of their respective service.

SEC. 2. Personnel of the uniformed services entitled to benefits under section 515 of the Career Compensation Act of 1949 (63 Stat. 831) shall not suffer any reduction in total compensation by reason of any extended service performed under the terms of this act.

SEC 3. That portion of section 1422 of the Revised Statutes (18 Stat. 484) which reads as follows: "All persons who shall be so detained beyond their terms of enlistment or who shall, after the termination of their enlistment, voluntarily reenter to serve until the return to an Atlantic of Pacific port of the vessel to which they belong, and their regular discharge therefrom, shall receive for the time during which they are so detained, or shall so serve beyond their original terms of enlistment, an addition of one-fourth of their former pay:", shall be suspended with respect to enlistments extended in accordance with this act.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I should like to say that all the bill does is what we have done heretofore in periods of imminent danger, such as that which confronts the Nation now. Just before World War II broke out, in 1941, we extended the enlistments and made other provisions to take care of a similar emergency. Enactment of the bill is vitally needed to keep the defenses of our country up to standard, until the intermediate measures which will come along from now on will overtake this situation and make it no longer necessary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. In World War I and in World War II was similar action taken before war was declared?

Mr. TYDINGS. Yes; in World War II at any rate. I do not know about World War I.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TYDINGS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Will the Senator explain the last section? Does it provide for an increase of 25 percent in pay if the men are kept beyond the period of enlistment?

Mr. TYDINGS. I did not quite understand the Senator.

Mr. AIKEN. What is the meaning of the last provision of the bill? As it was read it would seem to me that there would be an increase of 25 percent in pay. Is that what it means, or what does it mean?

Mr. TYDINGS. That section has been suspended, because it provides for keeping men on particular ships. We do not want to keep men on particular ships. That is a peacetime measure.

Mr. AIKEN. I see.

Mr. TYDINGS. And it was necessary to suspend that language along with the other provisions with respect to the Navy.

Mr. AIKEN. Unfortunately the Senator from Vermont did not hear the quotation marks in the reading.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, since the matter came up, two questions have arisen which a Senator who is not on the floor would like to ask. I wonder if the Senator from Maryland would withhold his request for immediate consideration until the other bill is discussed, and by the time action is taken on that I think we will have the Senator in question present.

Mr. TYDINGS. I shall be glad to withhold my request. I should like to add that I appreciate the courtesy of those in charge of the unfinished business for permitting it to be laid aside temporarily. The bill I have reported is an important piece of legislation, and I certainly trust that before we adjourn or recess today we may have the bill considered and enacted into law.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, this bill was taken up in the Armed Services Committee this morning with the following Republicans present: BRIDGES, GURNEY, SALTONSTALL, and MORSE. As a result of some suggestions made by Members on the Republican side of the aisle, particularly suggestions made by the able Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY], the bill was modified in certain particulars, and comes to the Senate with the unanimous recommendation of the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. What were the modifications? That is one of the things I want to know.

Mr. TYDINGS. I believe the Senator from Oregon has the other bill in mind, if he will allow me to correct him. The bill we are now discussing is the one extending the period of enlistment. There was a companion bill discussed.

Mr. MORSE. What the Senator from Oregon had in mind was not the modification of the language of the bill, but the understanding we reached that if and when legislation was passed in regard to family allotments, they should automatically be extended to these men whose service would be extended under the bill now being discussed.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is correct, although that does not appear in the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I withdraw any objection.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I ask for immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maryland asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that Senate bill 3937 be immediately considered. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 3937) to authorize the President to extend enlistments in the armed forces of the United States was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONTROL OF ANCHORAGE AND MOVEMENT OF FOREIGN-FLAG VESSELS IN WATERS OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce I report Senate bill 3859, and I submit a report (No. 2118) thereon. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A bill (S. 3859) to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON]?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like an opportunity to address the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will say to the Senator from Missouri that he was advised there were certain matters which needed to be considered immediately. The Chair has the Senator from Missouri in mind to be recognized in his own right as soon as it is proper to do so.

Mr. KEM. That is entirely satisfactory.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Michigan is also anxious to be recognized. The Chair will recognize Senators as he can.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I wish to say that I should like very much to be recognized when this bill is passed. I have a particular reason for wishing to be recognized, namely, I wish to make a statement in the nature of a reply to the attack made yesterday by the eminent Senator from Maryland on those who have voted for a reduction in funds for the Marshall plan. I should like to have an opportunity to say what I have to say while the distinguished Senator from Maryland is on the floor. I know he has manifold duties and many demands on his time and on his attention; but, as I have told him personally before this time, I should like very much to say what I have to say on this matter while he is present in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Washington has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Let me inquire for what purpose the Senator from Missouri wishes me to remain.

Mr. KEM. So that the Senator from Maryland may be advised personally of what I have to say in reply to what I consider to have been an entirely unwarranted attack on Senators who in good faith have supported a reduction in Marshall plan aid.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall deny myself that pleasure, but perhaps I shall later reply to the Senator in my own time.

However, I do not care to remain on the floor of the Senate to listen to speeches to which I do not care to listen, because I can tell what they will be without hearing them.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I hope we shall act promptly on this bill. It is an emergency matter.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I withdraw my objection, with the expression of the hope that I shall be recognized when the bill is passed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that I shall not object unless consideration of the bill takes an undue amount of time. If it does, then I shall have to ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of the bill be suspended, if the Senator will cooperate in that respect.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I shall be glad to cooperate.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, let me say that I shall not object if it is understood that when the bill is passed or otherwise disposed of I shall be recognized by the Chair. Otherwise, I shall object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the rules, the recognition of Senators is in the discretion of the Chair.

Earlier today the Chair was handed by the Senator from Nebraska a list of Senators on the minority side who desired to speak. The Chair understands that all of them have spoken now except the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Michigan.

It is immaterial to the Chair which of those two distinguished Senators is recognized first. However, if it is agreeable to the Senator from Michigan, the Chair is willing to recognize the Senator from Missouri first, and is willing to make that statement now, so that the bill can be disposed of.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I simply wish to say that I think a poor precedent would be established if any Senator were to demand that he be recognized as a condition of giving consent for the consideration by the Senate of an important measure.

I am willing to have the distinguished Senator from Missouri have the floor following the consideration of this bill; but I hope he will not make such a request. I hope he will be willing to trust to the good judgment of the President of the Senate, and will recognize that the request he has made would, if granted, establish a poor precedent for the Senate to follow.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I understood the distinguished occupant of the Chair to say that he would recognize the Senator from Missouri if there was no objection on the part of the Senator from Michigan.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is correct.

As Senators know, the Chair does not keep a list of Senators whom he has privately agreed to recognize. The Chair has never thought such a practice was proper.

However, the Chair has publicly stated that when this bill is out of the way, the Chair will recognize the Senator from Missouri, if that is agreeable to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON].

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President——

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Oregon will permit me to explain the bill first.

Mr. President, this is a bill of an emergency nature. The bill would authorize the President to control the anchorage and movements of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered. The bill would apply to all the harbors of the United States and its Territories.

Under the present situation, the President would have to declare a complete emergency in order to be able to take care of this problem, which is vital to the security of the Nation. The enactment of this measure will allow the President to declare a limited emergency, as applicable to the area around the waterfronts.

There is now no existing law which would prohibit a foreign vessel, flying a foreign flag, from entering the harbors of our country, which usually are surrounded by great cities, even if such vessel were at the time carrying any type of weapon—whether an atomic bomb or bacteria or anything else—and thus could do a great deal of damage and harm in a sneak attack on our country. The purpose of the bill is to prevent such a thing happening.

Furthermore, the bill will allow the President to invoke security measures on the waterfronts—that is to say, around the docks. In my opinion, the bill will have the dual effect of helping clean out whatever subversive influences may exist around the waterfronts and of protecting the country from sneak attacks of the sort I have mentioned. Some of the last strongholds of the Communists in this country exist in some of the waterfront unions, despite the efforts of patriotic maritime labor leaders to clean out some of those unions.

Under the provisions of this bill, the President could, and probably would, call on the Coast Guard, the FBI, or such other Government agencies as he might wish to use, to give us such waterfront security.

So, Mr. President, the prompt enactment of this measure is vital.

Of course we know that if enemy airplanes were to fly over our country, they might do considerable harm to our country or to some of our cities. However, at the present time there is no way to check on what might be shipped aboard a foreign vessel entering a port of the United States. The customs officials are not particularly trained in regard to such matters, for they simply go to the skippers of incoming vessels and ask, "What do you have on board?"

The reply perhaps would be, "10,000 bushels of wheat."

The inspector would look into the hold of the ship, but that is about as far as his inspection would go.

Today we still trade with Russia; Russian ships are entering our ports without any security investigation.

This measure will give the President the authority to invoke the same kind of security measures which were invoked in World War I and in World War II.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me inquire whether it is a fact that all the defense authorities, including the Coast Guard, the Attorney General, the Army, and the Navy, ask for the enactment of this measure.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. I appreciate the suggestion the Senator has made.

Mr. President, the Department of Defense, the Attorney General, the Treasury Department—which at the present time is in charge of the Coast Guard—and the Department of Labor, are all interested in the matter of subversives around the waterfronts; and all those Government agencies not only have endorsed this measure, but they say it is important as it relates to a great emergency, and they say the bill should be enacted immediately.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I wish to endorse most heartily what the Senator from Washington has said, and I do so in behalf of the minority members of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

This situation illustrates the wisdom of the advice given by Bernard Baruch, namely, that we should have on the statute books, as statute law, appropriate measures to enable the President, under direction of the Congress, to take proper action under such circumstances.

So I hope this measure will be enacted promptly.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD the latest discussion of this matter by Mr. Bernard Baruch. I refer to excerpts from an address delivered by Mr. Baruch at Columbia University on May 18.

There being no objection, the excerpts from the address were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the New York Herald Tribune of July 16, 1950]

MR. BARUCH ON TOTAL MOBILIZATION—A PROGRAM FOR ALL-OUT DEFENSE OF THE UNITED STATES PREPARED BEFORE THE KOREAN CRISIS

In World War I we sailed an uncharted sea. We had to find our way by trial and error. When we were finished, we had wrung Hindenburg's admission, "Her brilliant, if pitiless, war industry had entered the service of patriotism and had not failed it. * * * They understood war." But when World War II began, those in command threw away the charts we had left. Repeating the mistakes of the past, they eventually drifted back to what had been recommended originally. The war was won, but only after a terrible cost in the needless prolongation of the struggle and a needless toll of blood and treasure.

I would not bring up this record of the past except for two reasons. First, one object of this seminar is to see that these mistakes are not repeated again in event of another war—which all of us hope can be prevented. Then there is grave doubt whether the mobilization lessons of both world wars have actually been learned.

Only recently, for example, it was proposed that a selective-service law be enacted on a stand-by basis, to go into effect on proclamation of the President and the Congress. Nothing was said about putting other mobilization measures into law on a stand-by basis as well. The draft of our young men was to be put on the statute books by itself.

Nowhere have I heard a voice raised in protest against the shocking immorality of this proposal. Our youth would be put on notice that they may be called into service, their education and careers interrupted, but none of the propertied interests would be put on call.

Are profits, prices, wages, and other segments of society more sacred?

I cannot imagine that that is the feeling of Congress. I can only conclude that the lesson of the last two wars, which was so costly, has been forgotten. Were another war to come we would have to mobilize not only our young men but the entire Nation, our whole economic and industrial power—men, money, farms, factories, mines—all our resources, spiritual as well as material. I believe we need a stand-by selective-service law, to be ready for any emergency, but it must be part of a total program of mobilization readiness. It cannot stand alone.

Without such a total mobilization program on the statute books, ready to be put into operation overnight, the risks and costs of war are greatly and needlessly increased.

What prevents the outbreak of another war? It is not primarily American possession of atomic weapons, although that is important. The greatest single deterrent to war is the memory of the crushing military might this country mobilized and transported to every part of the world in the last war. At the height of that conflict we produced nearly as many tanks, airplanes, ships, and other munitions as the rest of the world combined. We can be sure that will not be forgotten by any potential enemy plotting aggression. But we can also be sure no potential warmaker will forget that it took roughly 2½ years to convert our energies from peace to all-out war production.

There is only one war plan any aggressor can have—to seek to overwhelm us during that "too little and too late" period while our military power is still "on order." The longer the time lag in our mobilization that the enemy can count on, the more inviting a target for attack we become—the greater the danger that we may not reach our allies in time, should they be attacked.

Of course, this time gap cannot be closed completely. Because of that we must maintain a military force capable of instant retaliation and of holding a safe line of defense until we have time to mobilize. To the degree that we narrow the time lag in our mobilization our military forces can be safely reduced.

At least a year could be cut off that time lag by enacting into law now a stand-by mobilization program. Were that done our security and that of all free peoples would be appreciably strengthened. Nor would this action require any additional defense expenditures. All that it requires is the courage to put into law now what we know would have to be done in event of war.

Hitler gambled on our delay in mobilization and almost won. With ever-quickened weapons of destruction—airplanes of supersonic speed, atomic weapons, rockets—a repetition of the delays of the past could prove fatal. To wait until bombs are falling before we begin to legislate may cause the loss of the war. It tempts the aggressor into gambling on overwhelming us with some blitz attack before we are able to mobilize.

As all of you know, preparation for a modern war begins many years before the actual start of hostilities. The modern aggressor regiments his economy long before there is any actual shooting. He stockpiles weapons, stores raw materials, converts his factories—while there still is so-called peace.

In the case of mobilization, our procrastination is all the more tragic, since nothing is to be gained by a failure to act. What should be done is so evident. We do not have to wait for someone to devise a "perfect" plan. Let us write into law now, on a stand-by basis, all the measures which were proven necessary in the last war. That is the minimum we should get on the statute books at once. Then were war to come, we should start from where we left off, instead of repeating the old mistakes.

With this minimum in law, the National Security Resources Board could work steadily to improve the mobilization program. Studies to implement mobilization legislation are fine. What I oppose is making so-called studies merely to avoid action, as a cover for a lack of political courage.

I respect the abilities and courage of Stuart Symington, the new Chairman of the National Security Resources Board. I hope he can at last take the Board off the "dead center" of inaction on which it has been for so long, a dead center so perilous to our security. The first necessity is to get a sound mobilization program on the law books. That is the real test of how effective the Security Resources Board will be permitted to become.

The issue is a simple one—are we going to stop talking and take action?

Specifically a sound mobilization program requires, among other things:

An impartial selective service law, with a work-or-fight clause;

A readied civilian defense;

The elimination of profiteering;

An over-all ceiling on all prices, rents, wages, and other costs to prevent the inflation that could wreck any mobilization;

Higher taxes;

Power to curtail less essential production to give priority to military and essential civilian needs;

Organization of manpower to direct it where most needed, with an index of all essential skills and training facilities;

Rationing of scarce essentials;

A comprehensive system of economic defense controlling all imports and exports.

This stand-by mobilization program would not specify the weapons to be produced nor the size of the armed forces to be raised. The objective would be to provide the organization so that in case of emergency all our resources can be pooled and tapped with a minimum of delay, whatever the weapons to be manufactured, whatever the size Army, Navy, or Air Force. The military should be able to get what it needs, when needed, with the least dislocation to the civilian economy.

And, as I have emphasized, all these measures must go together as part of one whole.

One alibi often put forward for neglecting our mobilization readiness is that it "will militarize the country." This is like opposing the installation of a fire-alarm system on grounds that it will cause fire. The mobilization program I have proposed is not intended to take effect immediately. These laws would be placed on the statute books, ready to be put into operation in an emergency upon joint proclamation of the President and Congress—not the President alone, but the President and Congress acting together. Like the fire department, these laws would be ready for action if the alarm went off.

There will always be some who counsel, "let's wait until war comes and see whether these controls are necessary." There will always be some who try to weaken whatever mobilization controls are suggested to exempt their own interests, to leave profits untouched, wages free, prices uncontrolled, taxes too low. The test of a sound mobilization program is that it disciplines all pressure groups and all selfish interests for the sake of the national interest.

To prevent war is our first objective. Our second objective must be to win any war forced upon us. Both these objectives are served by enacting a standby mobilization law now. Both these objectives are needlessly weakened by not doing so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Senate bill 3859? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3859) to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with amendments.

The first amendment of the committee will be stated.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, first let me state that on page 2 there are two new committee amendments, striking out certain words which the committee has unanimously agreed should be stricken out.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, let me inquire whether the Senator polled the committee in regard to the bill?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. Did the Senator also poll the committee in regard to the amendments?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes. The Senator from Maine will agree with me as to that, I am sure.

Mr. BREWSTER. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, the first two committee amendments are merely technical in character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first committee amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, in line 6, after the word "necessary", it is proposed to strike out "in his opinion."

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

The VICE PRESIDENT. At this time there is no right to object, for the bill is before the Senate, and the clerk has read the first committee amendment.

Mr. CORDON. However, Mr. President, some time ago I attempted to catch the eye and ear of the Vice President, in order to state that I reserved the right to object to the request to lay aside the unfinished business and proceed to consider this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear or see the Senator do so. The Chair asked whether there was objection to the request that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of this bill. The Chair heard no objection.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I spoke to the senior Senator from Washington in regard to an objection I had; and he requested me to withhold it until he could make a statement.

I thought I had reserved the right to object or an opportunity to reserve that right and to object. Certainly I wish to reserve the right to object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not hear the Senator, nor see him on his feet, but if he says he was trying to get recognition, the Chair will nullify what has happened, and give the Senator the right to be heard.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. CORDON. I want to know whether I have a right to object. I have not heard the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has been given the right to object.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, I have just had an opportunity to glance over the proposed legislation. In my opinion, it should be corrected in one respect. It provides that whatever may be done in the way of security measures is to be done by regulation of the President or other agencies under his direction. The law is merely notice to the people of the country that there is authority to do something, the people know not what; and they can only know what when the regulations are made. It is a legal maxim that everyone is presumed to know the law. That presumption has been held also to apply to regulations made pursuant to law. In this instance, then, there would be a presumption that everybody on the waterfront knew what these regulations were, and if anyone violated one of them, when in fact he did not even know there was such a regulation in existence, he would still be subject to the criminal penalty provided in the bill. If it stands as it is, I shall object to a consideration of the bill. I understand that the Senator from Washington is willing to accept an amendment to the bill to include the word "knowingly" with reference to any violation of an order. If that be the case, that would protect an innocent person who, wholly innocently and ignorantly, may have committed a violation of some of the regulations.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President I think the Senator from Oregon has made a good suggestion. The Attorney General drew this bill very hastily. If the Senator from Oregon will offer an amendment to include the word "knowingly" at such places as he thinks proper, I shall be glad to accept the amendment.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, in one moment I shall withdraw my objection, but before I do I should like to express the hope that those who have charge of legislation having to do with the emergency with which this Nation now finds itself faced will, as far as humanly possible, not request unanimous-consent consideration of proposed legislation they bring to the floor which may often be well meant, but which may contain some defect or something vicious which was not intended and which a reasonably careful inspection might avoid. There may be provisions in it which could be improved to the interest of the country. So I hope that Senators having charge of such measures will, so far as possible, allow them to remain on the desk at least for a day, until those who may be interested in sound legislation have an opportunity at least to know what they are voting for. There will be some cases, I know, where that cannot be done. I hope that it will be done whenever possible. I withdraw my objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Oregon still wish the floor?

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, if it is in order, I wish to move an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order until the bill is before the Senate. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3859) to authorize the President to control the anchorage and movement of foreign-flag vessels in waters of the United States when the national security of the United States is endangered, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce with amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the first committee amendment.

The first amendment was on page 2, line 6, after the word "necessary", to strike out "in his opinion."

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I desire to ask the reason for striking out those words. Let me state the point that occurs to me. If I am in error, I am readily susceptible to correction; but I should like to state the point. As I see it, the effect of striking out the words "in his opinion" is to leave it as a question of fact as to whether it is in fact necessary, in order to secure the vessels, that the action may be taken; whereas, if the words "in his opinion" are retained, it leaves it to the President's opinion to determine whether it is necessary. I am wondering whether the committee thinks it advisable to make the amendment—whether the committee thinks it should be narrow, confined to the question of whether there is actual necessity, or whether the committee thinks it better to leave it to the President's own opinion. That is the inquiry I should like to address to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I may say to the Senator from Missouri that the Senator from Maine was somewhat concerned, not about giving the President the authority, but that a subversive might be picked up on the waterfront who might go into court and even subpena the President, for the purpose of determining whether the facts supported his opinion that he should declare a waterfront emergency. The Senator from Maine and I agree that the bill would not be damaged in any way by striking out those words, and that it might make clear what we really intended.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. This restriction appears both in line 6 and in line 13, where it reads "not especially authorized by him." I raised the question in both instances, because it is quite obvious that the President of the United States would be a little too busy to have an opinion about this ship or about protecting people who go abroad. Therefore, it is another example of the tendency in recent years to repose all power in the President, understanding that he must necessarily delegate the authority. The tradition of America is to delegate it to the responsible authority, a Cabinet officer or some other official of the Government, and it is contemplated that the President, in his rules and regulations, will determine who shall exercise the authority. I believe that when this bill goes to conference, appropriate language will then emerge which will be a provision that it shall be determined by competent, recognized, or duly created authority; which is the way I think it should be.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I very much appreciate the explanation. I think it would be rather unfortunate to require as a condition precedent to the right of the President to take this action that there must be demonstrated and established as a matter of fact the existence of the necessity.

Mr. BREWSTER. I quite agree.

Mr. DONNELL. It seems to me it should be left, if not to the President, at least to a responsible official to use his opinion in determining whether the necessity exists. I am reassured by the assurance by both Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 2, in line 14, to strike out "by him."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 18, after the word "States", to strike out "and in Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands" and insert "the Canal Zone, and all territory and water, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, in line 1, after the word "available", to strike out "for the national defense" and insert "to the executive departments."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 3, to insert a new section:

SEC. 2. Section 4 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 194), is amended to read as follows:

"The President may employ such departments, agencies, officers, or instrumentalities of the United States as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this title."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The next amendment was, on line 10, to insert a new section:

SEC. 3. Section 2 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 192), as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(a) If any other person fails to comply with any regulation or rule issued or order given under the provisions of this title, or obstructs or interferes with the exercise of any power conferred by this title, he shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years and may, at the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, with reference to the amendment on line 10, I am not certain as to whether the shortened reading by the clerk included all of that section. If it did, then I want to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk advises the Chair that he read all of it. Is it an amendment to the committee amendment which the Senator wishes to offer?

Mr. CORDON. I desire to offer an amendment to the committee amendment inserting a new section, No. 3.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment having been agreed to, it will first be necessary to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to. Without objection, that will be done. The Senator may now offer his amendment.

Mr. CORDON. I desire to offer an amendment to section 3, on page 3, line 14, after the word "person", to insert "knowingly"; and, in line 16, before the word "obstructs", to insert "knowingly."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 14, after the word "person" insert "knowingly"; and in line 16, before the word "obstructs" insert the word "knowingly."

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to. Without objection, the committee amendment, as amended, is agreed to.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, if I may address an inquiry, by unanimous consent, to the distinguished Senator from Washington, I desire to say first that I appreciate the fact that action was taken a moment ago on the amendment on page 3, line 1. I am asking, however, to revert to that for the purpose of my inquiry. It states, as amended, "Any appropriation available to the executive departments shall be available to carry out the provisions of this paragraph." It occurs to me, from a very hasty glance at it, that we may be making a mistake there. I do not know whether there is any appropriation that is available to all executive departments. Would it not be better if it should read "any appropriation available to any of the executive departments?"

Mr. MAGNUSON. That would serve the same purpose. The Coast Guard, as the Senator knows, is under the Treasury Department. The main responsibility for inspection would be in the Coast Guard. The Coast Guard is not under the Department of National Defense. I have always advocated that it should have stayed there, but it went back to the Treasury Department.

Mr. DONNELL. It might be that we would have to find an appropriation available to all executive departments, and there might be none such.

Mr. President, I respectfully move that the Senate reconsider the action by which the amendment was agreed to, and that the amendment shall read "to any of the executive departments."

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I shall be glad to accept that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the action of the Senate in agreeing to the amendment will be reconsidered.

The clerk will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 1, after the word "to", it is proposed to insert "any of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment, as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The clerk will state the next amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, line 20, it is proposed to strike out the words "on or", and in line 21, to strike out "earlier."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 217; U. S. C., title 50, section 191), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"Whenever the President finds that the security of the United States is endangered by reason of actual or threatened war, or invasion, or of disturbances or threatened disturbances of the international relations of the United States, the President is authorized to institute such measures and issue such rules and regulations—

"(a) to govern the anchorage and movement of any foreign-flag vessels in the territorial waters of the United States, to inspect such vessels at any time, to place guards thereon, and, if necessary in order to secure such vessels from damage or injury, or to prevent damage or injury to any harbor or waters of the United States, or to secure the observance of rights and obligations to the United States, may take for such purposes full possession and control of such vessels and remove therefrom the officers and crew thereof, and all other persons not especially authorized to go or remain on board thereof;

"(b) to safeguard against destruction, loss, or injury from sabotage or other subversive acts, accidents, or other causes of similar nature, vessels, harbors, ports, and waterfront facilities in the United States, the Canal Zone, and all territory and water, continental or insular, subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

Any appropriation available to any of the Executive Departments shall be available to carry out the provisions of this paragraph."

SEC. 2. Section 4 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, section 194), is amended to read as follows:

"The President may employ such departments, agencies, officers, or instrumentalities of the United States as he may deem necessary to carry out the purpose of this title."

SEC. 3. Section 2 of title II of the act of June 15, 1917 (40 Stat. 220; U. S. C., title 50, sec. 192), as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(a) If any other person knowingly fails to comply with any regulation or rule issued or order given under the provisions of this title, or knowingly obstructs or interferes with the exercise of any power conferred by this title, he shall be punished by imprisonment for not more than 10 years and may, at the discretion of the court, be fined not more than $10,000."

SEC. 4. The provisions of this act shall expire on such date as may be specified by concurrent resolution of the two Houses of Congress.

GENERAL APPROPRIATIONS, 1951

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7786) making appropriations for the support of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1951, and for other purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, with reference to the appropriation bill, I have two amendments on the desk. If on Monday or Tuesday of next week the section of the bill to which my amendments relate should be agreed to, I hope I may be permitted to discuss them after that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the amendments are to the text of the bill, it would not be in order to consider them until all committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I am quite satisfied that the bill will not be passed before next Tuesday. I have no objection to the Senator's request.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MAGNUSON. I yield.

Mr. McFARLAND. I doubt that the bill will pass by that time, but I hope the Senator will help to expedite its passage.

Mr. WHERRY. I am satisfied that if the Senator from Washington will withdraw his request there will not be any difficulty about it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I can ask unanimous consent upon my return.

Mr. President, I withdraw my request.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I submit the following resolution and ask that it be received and lie on the table.

Whereas Report No. 2108, entitled "State Department Employee Loyalty Investigation," as printed and distributed on July 21 differs from the report submitted to the Senate on July 20 in certain important respects, particularly in being called on the cover sheet a "Report of the Committee"; and

Whereas it does not appear that the Foreign Relations Committee has adopted the report; and

Whereas a false impression of the status of this report will be spread abroad by the cover which has been substituted since it was received by this body: Therefore be it

Resolved, That said Report No. 2108 be at once withdrawn from distribution until the cover be replaced to agree with that covering the report as submitted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the resolution will be received.

The resolution (S. Res. 316) submitted by Mr. FLANDERS, was received and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I am sorry that the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] has seen fit to absent himself from the Chamber. I have always understood that the free State of Maryland prided itself on its tolerance. As I understand, tolerance means an attitude of forbearance toward the views, opinions, and actions of others, even though one finds oneself not entirely in accord with them. I am sorry, too, that the Senator from Maryland is not here because I wanted to pay my tribute to the magnificent histrionic performance which he afforded us yesterday afternoon. I have always enjoyed the theater, Mr. President. I think I know a good show when I see one, and the Senator's performance was good theater from beginning to end.

The decision of the Senator from Maryland to enter the field of statecraft deprived the stage of a shining luminary. The Senator compared the work of his committee with the performance of Macbeth. In my opinion, Mr. President, that part is not exactly suited to the Senator's superb talents. I should rather see him cast in the role of the melancholy Dane. I have, however, a further suggestion. I think the Senator from Maryland would make one of the outstanding Simon Legrees of all times. I can see him now, with a handlebar mustache, high boots, black-snake whip in hand, crossing a river of artificial ice, pursuing with inexorable fury an Uncle Tom, a Little Eva, or perhaps a JOE MCCARTHY.

George Bernard Shaw once said that it is an extremely difficult thing to put on the stage anything which runs contrary to the opinions of a large body of persons. I think we should bear that in mind in judging the performance of the Senator from Maryland. I think he must have known, when he spoke, that the show he was putting on ran contrary to the opinions of a large body of the American people. I think we should judge his art and his high skill with that in mind.

When the Senator had completed his performance yesterday I think many of us left the Chamber uncertain whether we had seen a farce, a comedy, or a tragedy. For my part, at one point, at least, the Senator, in his performance, reached high tragedy. I was sorry to see the Senator, for whom I have always had and still have a high regard, stoop to an argument unworthy of him. I refer, of course, to the argument he made that all those who in this Chamber have supported a reduction in Marshall-plan aid funds were associates of Stalin and playing the Communist line.

I want to be perfectly fair to the Senator. I shall not give any opportunity for misquotation to arise. Therefore I shall read the exact language of the Senator with reference to the argument to which I have referred. I read as follows:

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I have in my hand an editorial or statement by Mr. William Z. Foster, noted Communist, writing in Political Affairs. He advocates as the major point, it seems to me, reduction of the Marshall-plan aid, and the cutting of the arms budget for the Atlantic Pact countries, and so forth. These are issues around which the masses can be rallied. I find that when it comes to cutting the arms aid, and cutting the Marshall-plan aid, the Senator from Indiana has a wonderful record. He has voted against the Marshall-plan aid. He has voted against the North Atlantic Security Pact. He has voted against the arms implementation of it, the arms aid to the North Atlantic Pact countries, until the other day when Korea was invaded. Then he thought it was a good idea to get a few guns over there.

After an interruption by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] the Senator from Maryland continued, as follows:

While Joe Stalin was hollering "this is warmongering" and so on, and the Daily Worker was holding forth, I looked up the Senator's votes, and here they are, one after the other, always, always, always, following the same thing that Stalin is saying, that the Daily Worker is saying, and the junior Senator from Indiana is saying.

Mr. President, Senators will recall that earlier this year the authorization bill for Marshall-plan aid was before the Senate. Several amendments to reduce the amount of the bill were offered. One of them, the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] and by other Senators, was adopted by the Senate. The vote on the amendment reducing Marshall-plan aid authorization was 47 Senators in favor of the reduction and 33 against a reduction. Mr. President, I want to ask whether the time has arrived when in the opinion of the senior Senator from Maryland the Senate of the United States is dominated by associates of the Kremlin, Joe Stalin, and those who follow the Communist line? That is certainly the only inference that can be drawn from what the Senator from Maryland has said.

I hold in my hand the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 5, 1950, which records the vote on the amendment for the reduction of Marshall-plan aid. As I said, 47 Senators voted "yea," 38 voted "nay," and 16 Senators did not vote. I read: "So Mr. BRIDGES' amendment was adopted."

Mr. President, I shall not take the time of the Senate to read the entire list of the Senators who on that occasion voted for a reduction in Marshall-plan aid. The list appears in the RECORD of May 5, 1950, on page 6448. Among those who voted in favor of reduction of Marshall-plan aid appear the names of many venerable Senators who have grown gray in their Nation's service, men whose names are known, and favorably known, in every State of the Union. On that list are the names of Senators who have been returned many times to the Senate by the people of their respective States. Not only that, Mr. President, but there appears in that list of Senators who voted against the Marshall-plan aid the names of Senators who have been honored by their colleagues in this body, and who have been raised to places of highest confidence and trust within the gift of Members of the Senate.

Therefore I am prone to press the question. I am sorry the Senator from Maryland is not present. I think he said he did not think he would like my speech. What I am about to say, Mr. President, I shall say with the utmost good nature, but I feel it must be said in order to keep the RECORD clear. The Senator from Maryland accused the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] of voting the Communist line. He said he was an associate of Joe Stalin. The first charge on that count that he made against him was that the Senator from Indiana had voted to reduce the Marshall-plan aid. The question therefore arises—and it must be answered, Mr. President—is whether the Senator from Maryland is charging these honored and distinguished Senators who voted to reduce Marshall-plan aid with being associates of Joe Stalin and following the Communist line?

I do not know why the Senator from Maryland saw fit to bring Marshall-plan aid into this debate on the question of Communists in the Government. Marshall-plan aid is before the Senate in the appropriation bill. It has already been discussed, and I am sure before the bill is passed it will be discussed at much greater length. I think the Senator from Maryland, must know that at the present moment Marshall-plan aid is a tender subject with millions of Americans. It is a tender subject with the mothers of America whose sons are going out and fighting in the rice paddies of Korea, some of whom never to return.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield to the Senator from Florida for a question.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator question the assertion that the western democracies are stronger today to resist any kind of outside aggression because of the Marshall-plan aid they have enjoyed?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator has raised that question. Of course, the Senator knows that it is said that shortly before his death Lenin said, "We must overcome the Americans by causing them to spend themselves to their destruction." So each day, each month, and each year that have gone by since we have embarked on these give-away schemes all over the world we have been getting nearer to the ultimate end that Lenin had in mind.

There are two reasons, Mr. President, why Marshall-plan aid is a tender subject with the American people today. First, American boys are now fighting in Korea with insufficient, inadequate, and inferior equipment.

We do not need to do anything but to read the daily newspapers to know the facts. We know that our boys have been required to meet 60-ton tanks, far superior to any issued by our Government. We know they have been required to meet these tanks with antitank guns whose bullets have fallen from the front of them like paper pellets. We know that our boys have lain in the rice paddies of Korea with insufficient and inadequate air cover. We know all these things have happened to the soldiers of a great republic which has been sending untold sums to 16 countries of western Europe.

Mr. President, the second reason why the Marshall-plan aid is a sore subject with the mothers of America today is the fact that large quantities of war material are being funneled through the Marshall-plan countries into Russia and the countries behind the iron curtain.

I have always believed in a strong national defense. Since I have been a Member of this body I have voted without exception for every appropriation for the armed services. I think in all probability I shall continue to do so as long as the people of Missouri see fit to keep me here. But I have done that with one guiding purpose in mind. I wanted to see America build a national defense so strong that no nation in the world would have the slightest temptation to attack us.

When the 70-group Air Force bill was before the Senate we put the cart before the horse. We have made these prodigious gifts for economic aid in the countries of western Europe, and then we have considered what we may do to arm ourselves.

Shortly after the Marshall-plan bill was first passed in the Senate, we had under consideration the 70-group Air Force bill. One question was whether we could afford it, and it is an interesting coincidence that only 5 days before President Truman gave the order to start shooting in Korea the President at a press conference at the White House said we could not pay for a 70-group Air Force.

Mr. President, we need a 70-group Air Force. We need adequate air cover for the boys in Korea, and it seems to me unthinkable that we should be spending our money for economic assistance in 16 countries of western Europe, and at the same time send our boys into battle with inadequate arms, insufficient matériel, and inefficient equipment. Do we seek to justify it on the ground that we cannot pay for better?

Mr. President, I said a few minutes ago that it is a tender subject to the mothers of America why the countries of western Europe should be furnishing war materials to Russia, and the countries behind the iron curtain, at the same time our economic aid is going to these same countries. It may be asked how I know that is a tender subject with the mothers of America. I have received many letters from mothers of sons who have gone and have had to go, and they wonder how in the name of common sense this thing can be taking place—that our boys are being sent into battle inadequately prepared.

Mr. President, I am not going to burden the Senate at this time with a discussion of the details.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. I might say that I have received petitions which corroborate the very statement the Senator has just made relative to receiving letters from women all over America. I have received them also from men and from entire families who signed the petitions.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I am ready to believe, from conversations I have had with other Senators, that perhaps there are few Members of this body who have not received from their constituents similar communications.

I made a speech in the Senate on this subject on July 17, 1950. If the statements had not been true we might expect a denial from the administration. But from that day to this I have not heard or seen a single word by way of denial.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. WHERRY. I recall that the distinguished Senator from Missouri made the speech on July 17 to which he has referred, and he not only spoke about the dollars provided for ECA but he called attention to the fact that they could be spent in the purchase of materials which were sent into Red Korea to be used against our soldiers.

I do not know whether it is true or not, but I heard it said on the radio last night by a news commentator that the Department of Commerce was giving greater consideration to the issuing of export licenses because it did not want to grant licenses for the shipment of strategic materials to the Red Communists in China. If that is to be the attitude of the administration, that is exactly what the Senator from Missouri is asking, and certainly for Senators to stand on the floor of the Senate and criticize a Senator who has voted to cut the ECA appropriation, and against scattering around the world strategic materials which we now need, which I think is voting as an American should, and to state that one who follows that course is associated with Joe Stalin, is not only inept, but the statement is simply not the truth.

Mr. KEM. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for his statement. The Senator from Nebraska has directed the attention of the Senate particularly to the fact that large quantities of petroleum and petroleum products have been shipped by the United Kingdom to Red Communist China. It redounds to the credit of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska that he brought this to the attention of the administration and the Congress. I notice in the press that the British have announced that they are going to stop such shipments. What I am discussing now are shipments of other war material that is just as important and just as necessary to our war effort as petroleum.

On page 10366 of the RECORD of July 17 there is set out a partial list of exports from the United Kingdom, from Belgium, Luxemburg, and France to Russia and the satellite nations during the year 1949. I ask unanimous consent that those tables be incorporated in my remarks at this point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, it may be asked, and I think it would be a fair question, since that was in the year 1949, what is going on now? I have tried to exhaust every avenue of information open to me to ascertain what is going on now. The Department of Commerce has been very cooperative. I wish to say to their credit that I have not seen the slightest indication that they wanted to conceal any information that was in their files. Two members of my staff went to the Department, and went over the records in the office of the Department of Commerce. Mr. President, as a result of that inspection of the records of the Department of Commerce some really surprising statistics developed. Here are some things they found.

During the first 4 months of this year the United Kingdom exported more than $6,800,000 worth of electrical machinery to Russia. This represents nearly a 50-percent increase over British exports of electrical machinery to Russia during the first 4 months of 1949. I asked these men if they were able to find out what was being sent by the United Kingdom to Poland and to Czechoslovakia—to Czechoslovakia where the great Skoda Works are located—and they were not able to develop that information in the time available. So the figure I give to the Senate is the figure of exports from the United Kingdom to Russia alone for the first 4 months of this year. So much for electrical machinery.

During the 4 months which ended April 30, 1950, the United Kingdom also sent to Russia more than $1,087,000 worth of machine tools. This is almost 10 times as many machine tools as were exported by the United Kingdom to Russia during the first 4 months of the corresponding year, 1949. In other words, in the first 4 months of this year the United Kingdom accelerated her shipments of machine tools to Russia 10 times over. That does not take into account shipments of machine tools which were being made during that period to Czechoslovakia, to Bulgaria, to Rumania, or any other of the satellite countries. That is to Russia alone.

Mr. President, Belgium has made shipments of war materials to Russia. During the period January through April sizable shipments of iron, steel, and tin plate have gone from Belgium to the U. S. S. R. Italy is sending steel, iron, and machinery to the U. S. S. R. Sweden's trade with Russia during January 1950 was nine times greater than it was in January 1949. And so it goes on.

I regret, Mr. President, that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] saw fit in this time of crisis to cast doubt on the loyalty of any of his fellow Senators. Such suggestions do not enhance the prestige of the Senate. I have heard the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the distinguished majority leader, say on the floor of the Senate more than once that it is time for all Americans to close ranks. I have felt that way about it. I have said so publicly. So, Mr. President, it comes as a distinct surprise to hear a man who has been honored time and time again by the people of the Free State of Maryland, and by his colleagues in the Senate, charge that certain of his fellow Members of the Senate are following the Communist line and are associates of Joe Stalin. That surely does not enhance the prestige of our Nation abroad.

Surely it must give aid and comfort to the Reds who are killing our boys in Korea to read reports that they have, according to the Senator from Maryland, associates in the United States Senate. Surely such reports must be distressing indeed to those in the front lines in Korea who have a right to expect, and, Mr. President, do expect, that they will receive 100-percent backing from the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, there is just one more subject to which the Senator from Maryland referred, to which I desire to make some reference. I shall address myself to that argument very briefly. That is the argument that since we have a Department of Justice and the FBI, no American need concern himself about Communists in the Government. The argument, as I understand it, is that since the Department of Justice and the FBI are on the job, there is no need for concern, there is no need for any work or investigation on the part of the elected representatives of the people in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. President, there are two comments I should like to make on that argument. First, under the law, United States Code, title 5, section 340, which establishes the FBI, the FBI is placed under the jurisdiction and the control of the Department of Justice, which is, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] said earlier on the floor of the Senate, a political arm of the Government. The FBI cannot investigate any case the Department of Justice does not want investigated. Let there be no mistake about that, Mr. President. The FBI cannot investigate any case the Department of Justice does not want investigated. Similarly, the Department of Justice cannot cause to be investigated by the FBI any case the President of the United States does not want investigated.

Second, in order to remove what I have to say from the field of generalities, I want to give the Senator from Maryland a specific instance of what I mean and to what I refer. This case, Mr. President, is not a hypothetical case. It is an actual case.

In May 1947, some 71 citizens of Kansas City, Mo., were under indictment for one of the foulest of all crimes, the crime of depriving their fellow citizens of their right to vote, of the right to have their votes counted as cast. The evidence in those cases, then pending in the circuit court of Jackson County, Mo., consisted of the ballots in the precincts in which the alleged fraud occurred. Those ballots were stored in the office of the Board of Election Commissioners of Jackson County, Mo., in Kansas City. In the nighttime on May 27, 1947, the courthouse was violently entered. The office of the board of election commissioners was violently entered. The safe in their office was violently blown open and those ballots, consisting of the evidence in those cases—evidently the thieves knew exactly what they had come for—were carried away. They were so voluminous that it required a truck or cart or some similar vehicle to carry it away. Mr. President, that occurred in the courthouse in Kansas City, Mo.

In the same building is the office of the sheriff of Jackson County, Mo., which is open all night, with a deputy or deputies constantly in attendance. Across the street was the office of the police department of Kansas City, Mo.—a complete police department, similar to that maintained in other metropolitan centers.

Mr. President, the strangest coincidence of all—and it is just a coincidence; I do not want anyone to think that I am inferring otherwise—was that the President of the United States was sleeping in a hotel some five blocks away; and, as I understand, on such occasions the entire business district of the city which is temporarily housing the President of the United States is under the surveillance of the Secret Service of the United States. It was under those circumstances that the ballots containing the evidence in the cases in which 71 persons were under indictment were forcibly, feloniously carried away.

The FBI was immediately called in. The Attorney General of the United States dramatically announced that there would be a complete and thoroughgoing investigation. However, from that day to this the theft of the evidence in the Kansas City vote-fraud cases remains a perfect crime. No arrests have been made; apparently no clues have been established. As the record stands, the FBI has been completely baffled.

Mr. President, I should like to know and the people of the United States would like to know just what the FBI did discover, just what some of the best agents in the employ of the FBI, who were sent to Kansas City, were able to do.

I wonder whether the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND], the acting majority leader, will join me in an effort to secure, so that they can be made public, the complete records of the FBI in regard to that case. I think the acting majority leader or the regular majority leader would perform a distinct service if one or the other of them would do that. It seems to me that the people are entitled to know the facts in that case.

So, Mr. President, when the argument is made that we can sleep at nights, that we can rest assured that there are no political Communists or fellow travelers in the employ of the State Department or in the employ of other departments of the Government of the United States, a lot of people will take that argument with a little grain of salt.

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield.

Mr. MCFARLAND. The Senator from Missouri would not want me to go there with him and try to steal the FBI files; would he?

Mr. KEM. Of course not.

Mr. MCFARLAND. That is about what the Senator from Missouri is proposing.

Mr. KEM. Of course, Mr. President, I would not want the Senator from Arizona to be guilty of a felony. However, if he would give me the political support which comes to the majority leader in this battle, I think it is very likely that the people in my State and the people in my city, who have a very natural interest in what the FBI was able to do, would obtain the information. At any rate, it would be worth a trial.

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Missouri for the compliment he has paid me in regard to any influence which I might have.

However, the present hour is too late for the junior Senator from Arizona to enter into a discussion relative to securing the files from the FBI. That matter has been discussed many, many times; and the Senator from Missouri is well aware of what has been held in that regard.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, I have not been able to find out what has been held in that regard. If the Senator from Arizona knows the facts about that matter, I am sure he will perform a very distinct service to the people of my State and to the people of the country generally if he will give us the benefit of that information.

Yesterday the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] told us that he was able to obtain from the administration information not available to other Senators or to the public generally. Now I am asking whether the acting majority leader—if the distinguished Senator from Arizona continues to act in that capacity, of course I shall be glad to have him do so—or the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the regular majority leader, will interest himself in this subject. If he will do so, I believe we shall have some results, and without further delay.

The tragedy of this matter is that under the circumstances the people of the United States are bound to have some reservations as to the political character of the Department of Justice—reservations which ought to be cleared up, and the sooner the better.

Mr. President, I wish to say in passing that most of these things occurred, not during the term of service of the present Attorney General, our honored former colleague from Rhode Island, former Senator McGrath, but during the incumbency of his predecessor as Attorney General. However, I think it is also fair to say that during the incumbency of the present Attorney General the Federal statute of limitations—a 3-year statute of limitations—ran on the prosecution of the theft of the evidence in the Kansas City vote frauds.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KEM. I am glad to yield to my distinguished colleague from Missouri.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Arizona has assigned, as I understand, as his reason for not wishing to discuss this matter, the lateness of the hour.

Let me ask the Senator if it is now as late as it generally has been in recent weeks when the Senate has ended its session for the day. In other words, it is now exactly 5:37 p. m., according to the clock in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, if the Senator from Arizona desires to discuss this matter, I shall be glad to stay here as long as he wishes, or if he will ask the Vice President to give me the privilege of the floor Monday, when the Senate convenes, I shall endeavor to answer any questions the Senator from Arizona may put to me. I would like to accommodate the Senator from Arizona if he is not prepared to discuss the matter at this time.

I think the facts should be fully discussed, in the public interest. It has never been satisfactorily developed, why the theft of the evidence in the Kansas City vote fraud indictments is a perfect crime.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 11 A. M. ON MONDAY

Mr. MCFARLAND. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] previously stated that he wished to obtain the floor to address the Senate this afternoon. However, thus far, he has not been able to obtain recognition.

Therefore, because of the lateness of the hour, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate ends its session for today, it take a recess until Monday next, at 11 a. m., and that the Senator from Michigan be given the right to speak at that time, without a quorum call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the request please be repeated?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona has requested, first, that when the Senate concludes its session for today, it take a recess until Monday next, at 11 a. m.; and, second, that at that time the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] be given the floor, without a quorum call.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

STATE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEE LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to make some observations for a few minutes, if that will be satisfactory to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. McFARLAND. Certainly.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, at the conclusion of his address yesterday, the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] asked the question: "Where do we go from here?" I am confident that anyone who heard his address and any of those who have had an opportunity to look even very casually over the report are convinced that the job of the committee of which he was chairman has not been completed. I am just as sure of that as I am sure that I am now standing on the floor of the Senate; and I am also perfectly sure that the American people are not satisfied with what has been done.

In a spirit of constructive criticism and in all sincerity, Mr. President, I wish to offer an affirmative program. I should like to discuss it in some detail some time next week, when I have an opportunity to do so.

However, at this time, toward the close of the session for today, I should like to conclude my remarks with these constructive suggestions:

First. I think the time has come when the records of the committee, not only the records of its proceedings in open session but the records of its proceedings in executive session, should be made public. It has been given to the press here, there, and other places, and I think that Senators should have the transcript of all this evidence so they can make up their minds relative to what is in the report as bearing upon the work that has been done by the committee.

Second. I think that the Senate should adopt the resolution, No. 312, which was offered, and which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the Committee on Foreign Relations made pursuant to Senate Resolution 231 (relating to an investigation of disloyalty among employees of the Government) be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations, with the following instructions:

(1) The Committee on Foreign Relations shall conduct a full and complete investigation in accordance with the provisions of Senate Resolution 231; or—

And this is the important part of it—

(2) In the event said committee decides by a majority vote that a continuation by said committee of such investigation is not in the public interest, the committee shall recommend to the Senate the establishment of a trained bipartisan commission, wholly independent of the Executive, to conduct a full, complete, and relentless search into the whole subject of foreign penetration of the Department of State and other agencies of the Government in accordance with the provisions of said Senate Resolution 231.

Mr. President, if that is done, I am satisfied that it will meet with the approval of the American people. That resolution has been offered, and it is the responsibility of the majority of the Senate to see that it is brought up for consideration. It is a constructive step which I am sure would meet with the approval of the people of the United States.

Third. The time has come, and there can be no doubt about it, that the Congress should pass the Mundt-Ferguson bill. The resolution I just quoted would take care of the difficulty within the Government. The Mundt-Ferguson bill would take care of the situation outside the Government. It is needed, and I think it is needed more than any other piece of legislation, outside the military requirements which will be presented to us by the military authorities and by the administration, with which we all agree, and which will be passed speedily after due consideration.

That is my suggestion, Mr. President. That is my answer to the question, Where do we go from here on the domestic front?

Where do we go from here on the foreign front? Certainly the time has arrived when the administration should require the resignation of Dean Acheson. In order to achieve unity in the country and to restore confidence in the State Department policy, that time has arrived. He has been repudiated by the administration in his policy in Asia, and certainly we need to revamp our policy so far as western Europe is concerned. I do not say this with animosity or personal feeling against Mr. Acheson, but if he were an official in any other country of which I know of, and a vote of confidence were had, which would have been required, to my mind he would be out of office. Why wait any longer in the United States of America?

Mr. President, if such action is taken I am satisfied it will meet with the approval of the country. What we need now is unity. And, believe me, I am for unity to accomplish the task which is at hand.

Mr. President, I should like to answer in some detail some of the observations which have been made, but I say in all sincerity, and with all respect to the Senator from Maryland, that that is the answer to his question, "Where do we go from here?" Let us clean up the situation at home, and let us do the job over there.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I merely want to state in response to the suggestion of my good friend from Missouri that I explain why the FBI files cannot be made available, that my decision not to discuss that subject this evening is made for this reason, and for this reason alone: First, I think it has been discussed many, many times. I think I fairly understand how those files are secured, and the reasons why they cannot be made available to Members of Congress. At least, I understand the position of the Attorney General. But, Mr. President, I am of the opinion that there are more important matters before the Congress today than a discussion of why the files of the FBI cannot be made available to Members of Congress.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McFARLAND. In a moment. One of those important measures is House bill 7786, which contains appropriations for the departments charged with the defense of the Nation. I think it is time that in the Senate of the United States we turn our minds to our duties in connection with providing the necessary funds for the defense of the country.

For that reason, and because I do not want to provoke further discussion on a subject which has already been thoroughly discussed, I feel that we could better devote ourselves to the discussion of the unfinished business. I now yield to the distinguished Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona whether the distinguished senior Senator from Maryland did not occupy the floor of the Senate for several hours yesterday, discussing the report of the Foreign Relations Committee on the question of Communists in the Government.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am not aiming my criticism at the Senator from Missouri or anyone else who has occupied the floor today, or the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who occupied the floor yesterday. All I am stating is that these matters have been discussed, and think the time has come for us to turn our attention to the consideration of H. R. 7786.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Arizona yield further to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. KEM. My good friend from Arizona is an eminently fair man.

Mr. McFARLAND. I thank the Senator for his compliment.

Mr. KEM. The Senator is a former superior court judge. He knows what it is to hold the scales of justice. He has had the unpleasant duty of sending men to the penitentiary—perhaps to the gallows. I know my friend from Arizona is deeply imbued with and instilled in American principles of justice and fair play. I want to ask the Senator whether he thinks it is fair for the Senator from Maryland to make this dramatic and histrionic speech in the Senate yesterday, drawing the attention of the Senate for several hours, and then to foreclose further discussion of this important question that is so near the hearts of all Americans? The question is whether there is infiltration of Communists and fellow travelers into the Government of the United States.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, let me say to my good friend from Missouri that the question as to what any Senator may think about the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Maryland is up to the individual Senator, personally, to answer for himself. Each Senator can answer that.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. May I finish? I may say that as to whether the charges have been substantiated, it is up to the people of the United States to decide. No one on the floor of the Senate, so far as I have heard, has said that any of these charges were substantiated. I do not at this time want to get into a discussion of what procedure we should follow or of what we should do. All I am saying—and I am making an honest appeal to the Senate—is that some time on Monday I hope we may resume consideration of H. R. 7786, which contains important appropriations for the defense of the Nation.

I have never tried to deprive any Senator of the opportunity to discuss any subject he pleased, and I never shall. But I hope that we can make some progress with the appropriation bill. I desire the Senator from Missouri distinctly to understand that I am not in any way criticizing him for any remark he may have seen fit to make on the floor. That was his privilege as a United States Senator. I am, in the exercise of my prerogative as a Senator, only making an appeal for that which I think is for the good of the United States, namely, to proceed with the business of the Senate, leaving it to the Senator from Missouri and any other Senator to discuss whatever they may desire to discuss.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McFARLAND. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Missouri made the statement a little while ago that he thought it was unfair for the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] to occupy the length of time he occupied yesterday, and then not to let anyone answer him. I suggest to the Senator from Missouri that we have listened for a long period today to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER] in a very bitter and voluminous speech, mostly devoted to the Senator from Maryland and what the Senator from Maryland submitted in his speech on yesterday. So I cannot see how the Senator from Missouri can conclude that we heard the Senator from Maryland and then did not permit any other Senator to discuss the question.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas——

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arizona yielded in order that I might ask a question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona has the floor.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. McFARLAND. Yes; I yield. But I do not think we can gain anything by the discussion. My only object was to invite the attention of the Senate and of the people of the United States to the importance of the Senate's proceeding with the appropriation bill as rapidly as possible. It was not for the purpose of criticizing anyone.

Mr. KEM. I agree entirely with the Senator. The Senator comes from the wide-open spaces of the West. Would he sit here in the Chamber of the Senate of the United States and hear his loyalty impugned by another Senator and not rise to his feet at the first opportunity to reply?

Mr. McFARLAND. When that time comes, the Senator from Arizona will make his decision.

Mr. KEM. I do not know how the Senator voted on the reduction of Marshall-plan-aid funds, but I know that many of his close friends and associates voted to reduce the amount. I should think the Senator from Arizona would resent an imputation on their loyalty. I should think that instead of attempting to discourage the Senator from Missouri from pointing out facts in that connection, the Senator would rise to urge that that sort of thing be not repeated on the floor of the United States Senate.

Mr. McFARLAND. I am certain that the Senator from Missouri will be able to take care of himself on any occasion.

Mr. KEM. I think the Senator from Arizona has fallen into the same error into which several Senators who have spoken have fallen, namely, assuming that the responsibility and duty of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee under Senate Resolution 231 was to investigate the charges made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY]. As was pointed out today by the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES]—I do not suppose the Senator from Arizona heard his address, because if he had I do not think he would have fallen into that error—the resolution as originally prepared by the Democratic policy committee provided for an investigation of the charges of the Senator from Wisconsin, and that resolution was amended on the floor of the Senate, and as it was adopted by the Senate, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, was authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study and investigation as to whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed in the Department of State.

So, Mr. President, it is no answer that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] has not produced any evidence. That is not ground upon which the Committee on Foreign Relations can be acquitted of any further responsibility. The question is whether it has made a full and complete investigation of whether persons who are disloyal to the United States are or have been employed by the Department of State.

Let me say, in passing, that I do not know much about the investigation. I did not attend any of the hearings, but I have read some of the subcommittee's report to some extent, not all of it—I have been intrigued by one thing which stands out, namely, why there is no mention of the name of Alger Hiss. The committee was directed to find out whether any disloyal person ever had been employed in the Department of State. That question came up yesterday, but it was turned off by the Senator from Maryland with the facetious remark that the committee had not thought it well to put Thomas Jefferson on the stand. I hope the implication was not that Thomas Jefferson was a disloyal person. As a devoted believer in the principles of Thomas Jefferson, I resent the remark. I do not see any reason whatever to have brought the name of that great American into a discussion of disloyalty in the Government of the United States.

SENATE

MONDAY, JULY 24, 1950

(Legislative day of Thursday, July 20, 1950)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Rev. Frank F. Drowota, Woodmont Christian Church, Nashville, Tenn., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray. We confess, in the words of the Psalmist, our faith in Thee O God.

O Lord, our Lord, how excellent is Thy name in all the earth.

Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God.

But dear unto us is the knowledge that Thou art our Father, and we are Thy children. We come to Thee to ask Thy blessing upon these Thy children in this grave hour. We ask that Thou wilt give them the assurance that as their days, so shall their strength be. Watch over them and keep their loved ones, Father.

We offer to Thee a special prayer for those men who have put their lives between the enemy and all the things we hold dear. Wilt Thou keep them in Thy love. We ask, Father, that the spirit of sacrifice they show may be shown in our lives, and that self-interest may be slain in us; that the ugly stains of sin, the ugly stains of selfishness may be wiped away; that in a common unity we may stand together to walk the freedom road, the road of sacrifice, the road of self-denial, even as our Lord walked it before us.

This we ask in His name and for His sake. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. MCFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 21, 1950, was dispensed with.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

On his own request, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLIKIN was excused from attendance on the session of the Senate today until 4 p. m.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSION

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on the Judiciary and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs were authorized to meet during the session of the Senate today.

On request of Mr. McFARLAND, and by unanimous consent, the Committee on Foreign Relations was authorized to sit this afternoon during the session of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement entered into on Friday, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] is entitled to the floor without the calling of a quorum.

Mr. KNOWLAND and Mr. FLANDERS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to Senators who wish to present routine matters that at the end of the address by the Senator from Michigan opportunity will be given all Senators to transact routine business.

Mr. KNOWLAND. If the Senator from Michigan does not object, I should like to make an insertion in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the two Senators who have addressed the Chair may proceed with their routine matters, with the understanding that I do not lose the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a letter which I addressed to the President of the United States dated July 13, 1950, and a copy of the President's reply dated July 14.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 13, 1950.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The time has come, I believe, when the seriousness and importance of the situation in the Far East warrants the appointment of an Ambassador to the Government of the Republic of China, now temporarily located on the island of Taiwan (Formosa) with its capital at Taipei. Since Ambassador Stuart returned last year our representative has been a consul general.

Both in Congress and throughout the country there is a growing realization that without the affirmative vote of the representative of the Republic of China the three resolutions passed by the United Nations Security Council would not have been adopted and in the case of the second resolution which India finally approved there would have been a delay of at least 24 hours when time was of the essence. Since seven votes are required for the adoption of a resolution in the Security Council and on the June 27 and July 7 resolutions there were only seven affirmative votes, it is apparent that had the Republic of China not been a member neither resolution would have been adopted.

It is also significant that of all of the members of the United Nations the only country which to date has offered ground troops in support of the United Nations' effort to stem lawless aggression and support a system of international law and order has been the Republic of China, which promptly offered three divisions amounting to approximately 30,000 men together with 20 C–46 planes.

The fact that neither the United Nations nor this Government has yet seen fit to accept this offer does not lessen the importance of this wholehearted support of the Government of the Republic of China by and on behalf of the people of free China. It is refreshingly in contrast to the inaction of certain other member nations.

What more fitting move could now be made than for the Government of the United States to announce that it was sending an Ambassador to the Republic of China? For that position may I respectfully suggest the name of Angus Ward. Mr. Ward has had a long career in the Foreign Service of the United States both in the Soviet Union and in China. His detention and later arrest by the Chinese Communists during the period when he was consul general at Mukden helped to acquaint the American people with the realities of the situation that Chinese communism is the blood brother of Soviet imperialism. Such an appointment would not only be fitting recognition to a man who has had a long and honorable career in the service of his country, but would also be a fitting reward for the hardships he suffered at the hands of the Chinese Communists.

It would also clearly demonstrate to the people of the Republic of China and to the whole free world that we had no intention of yielding to Soviet pressure relative to recognition of the Communist regime or the seating of that Soviet satellite in the Security Council of the United Nations.

With best personal regards, I remain,

Respectfully,

WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, July 14, 1950.

Hon. WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: Thanks very much for yours of the 13th. I am glad to have your views on the Nationalist China. It was kind and thoughtful of you to write me as you did.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY TRUMAN.

TEMPORARY WITHDRAWAL OF REPORT ON LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Vermont under the same conditions.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Resolution 316. It is the resolution which I submitted last Friday.

Mr. McFARLAND. Mr. President, I object. It is not in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arizona objects.

Mr. WHERRY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. The motion would be in order, would it not, if unanimous consent were obtained?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not passing on the question of its being in order.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished acting majority leader made the observation as to its not being in order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the unanimous-consent agreement the Senator from Michigan has the floor. He has been yielding to Senators to insert routine matters in the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. I understood the distinguished Senator from Michigan to ask unanimous consent that he might yield to the Senator from California and the Senator from Vermont, without his losing the floor. I should like to reserve my right to object long enough to say that——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from Michigan to yield to the two Senators to insert matters in the RECORD.

Mr. FERGUSON. I asked unanimous consent that I may be permitted to yield to the Senator from California and the Senator from Vermont without my losing the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the request I made is likewise made with the understanding that the Senator from Michigan would not lose the floor if we took up the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. McFARLAND. I object.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would say to the Senator from Michigan that to yield to a Senator to take up a legislative matter which may involve considerable debate may deprive him of his advantage of having the floor at this time.

Mr. FERGUSON. Very well. I understand that objection has been made to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Vermont.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection has been made.

STATE DEPARTMENT LOYALTY INVESTIGATION

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, there has been filed in the Senate a report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations pursuant to Senate Resolution 231. Last Thursday, after the report was filed, the Senator from Michigan attempted to ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland some questions which he believed were pertinent to the issue before the Senate. The Senator from Maryland declined to yield at that time, and the Senator from Michigan feels that there are things in the report which should be called to the attention of the Senate.

At the time of the filing of the report motions were made to table certain points presented to the Senate, in order that debate could not be had upon the filing of the report or matters contained in the report.

Mr. President, there are several subjects covered in the report on which I desire to speak today. One cannot help noticing on page 9 of the report the matter in italics, and the italics were used by the subcommittee, I assume, in order that it would be emphasized to all who might pick up the report that that was probably the most important part of the report. I desire to read that part to the Senate at this time, and then make some comments upon it:

We were thus confronted with the amazing spectacle of four different committees of the Eightieth Congress, which was controlled by Senator McCARTHY's own party, having considered the very same files and information which provided the predicate for the McCarthy charges—with none of these committees so much as regarding the situation as one meriting a report or citing a single State Department employee as disloyal.

Mr. President, I wish to emphasize the words "citing a single State Department employee as disloyal." The Senator from Maryland also said something about that, and I shall refer to his remarks in the RECORD of last Thursday, July 20, 1950, page 10715. The Senator from Maryland said:

We found the same thing that the four separate committees of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress found.

It is very significant that the Senator from Maryland used the word "Republican."

On the same page appears this language used by the Senator from Maryland:

Then I found that four separate committees of the Republican-controlled Eightieth Congress—and I say that without any reflection on them, but simply in order to show that those committees were not of the same political complexion as is the present majority of the subcommittee—had examined every one of those cases, and had not found any Communists or subversives in any of them.

It is very significant that he said that the Eightieth Congress committees, including the Senate Committee on Appropriations, about which he was talking, had not found any Communists or subversives "in any of them."

On page 10717 the Senator again referred to a "file which was examined by Republican Members in control of the Eightieth Congress and they did not say the case was proved." In all, the Senator from Maryland referred six times in his speech to the alleged fact that four committees of the Eightieth Congress had investigated these files and given clearance to them.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I would rather not yield until I get through with my remarks; then I will yield to any Senator for any question.

Mr. THYE. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Appropriations, whose responsibility it was to do some investigating into this matter—although it was not named by the Senate to make a full and complete investigation—did look into this subject back in 1947 and a part of 1948 and even in 1946. As a result, on June 10, 1947, the then Secretary of State was called before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and he was given a memorandum. I am surprised that the Senator from Maryland and his investigators did not find that memorandum in the files of the State Department, because they say that no report was made, that nothing was done, in other words, that the Senate Committee on Appropriations found nothing wrong, and gave a clean bill of health. I wish to read to the Senate that memorandum of June 10, 1947.

Mr. THYE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. THYE. It was in reference to the matter the very able Senator from Michigan has just mentioned that I wanted to comment, for the reason that I served as a member of the investigating subcommittee on the Committee on Expenditures, of which the Senator from Michigan, who now has the floor, was chairman, and I know our concern when we were denied the right to see the files on Mr. Remington and others. I do know about the committee report which had been filed in that particular investigation, and I wanted to comment about that. I am very happy that the Senator from Michigan yielded that I might make this very brief reference to the investigation made during the Eightieth Congress.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator for his comments.

As I have said, on June 10 General Marshall was called before a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations, and the subcommittee presented a memorandum to him. I have asked the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, this having been done in executive session, if I might use the executive session records on the floor of the Senate, and he has granted permission. I shall now read the memorandum, because I believe it will be very enlightening to the Senate and to the people of the United States in view of the statement of the Senator from Maryland that the Committee on Appropriations found no subversives and no Communists, and did not make a report as to what it found on this particular occasion. I quote from the memorandum:

JUNE 10, 1947.

It becomes necessary due to the gravity of the situation to call your attention to a condition that developed and still flourishes in the State Department under the administration of Dean Acheson.

It is evident that there is a deliberate, calculated program being carried out not only to protect Communist personnel in high places, but to reduce security and intelligence protection to a nullity.

Regarding the much-publicized Marzani case, the evidence brough out at his trial was well known to State Department officers, who ignored it and refused to act for a full year.

Marzani and several other Department officials, with full knowledge of the State Department, and with Government time and money, promoted a scheme called Presentations, Inc., which contracted with a Communist dominated organization to disseminate propaganda.

Security objections to these and other even more dangerous developments were rebuffed by high administrative officials; and there followed the substitution of unqualified men for these competent, highly respected personnel who theretofore held the intelligence and security assignments in the Department. The new chief of controls is a man utterly devoid of background and experience for the job, who is and at the time of his appointment was known to those who appointed him to be, a cousin and close associate of a suspected Soviet espionage agent. The next development was the refusal of the FBI, G-2, ONI, and other Federal investigative agencies to continue the wholehearted cooperation they had for years extended to the State Department.

I continue the quotation:

On the file in the Department is a copy of a preliminary report of the FBI on Soviet espionage activities in the United States, which involves a large number of State Department employees, some in high official positions. This report has been challenged and ignored by those charged with the responsibility of administering the Department with the apparent tacit approval of Mr. Acheson. Should this case break before the State Department acts, it will be a national disgrace.

The memorandum continued:

Voluminous files are on hand in the Department proving the connection of the State Department employees and officials with this Soviet espionage ring. Despite this, only two persons, one of whom is Marzani—

I am naming him because he has been already convicted. I now return to the quotation—were released under the McCarran rider because of their subversive activity—

I now leave out of the memorandum nine names mentioned in it, of persons who were at that time employees of the State Department. I am leaving them out, but later I shall read a letter from Mr. Peurifoy calling attention to what was done about some of those who were named, indicating the validity of the information contained in the memorandum.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; I cannot yield at this time.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. FERGUSON. I cannot yield for that purpose. I desire to continue reading from the memorandum. After the last name this appears:

are only a few of the hundreds now employed in varying capacities who are protected and allowed to remain despite the fact that their presence is an obvious hazard to national security. There is also the extensive employment in highly classified positions, of admitted homosexuals, who are historically known to be security risks.

I continue the quotation:

The War and Navy Departments have been thwarted for a year in their efforts to carry out the German scientist program. They are blocked by one man in the State Department, a protege of Acheson named—

I leave that name out—who is also the chief instrument in the subverting of the over-all security program.

I continue the quotation:

This deplorable condition runs all the way up and down the line. Assistant Secretary Braden also surrounded himself with men like—

I leave out a name there—and with—

And I leave out another name—

who has a notorious international reputation. The network also extends into the office of Assistant Secretary Benton.

Mr. President, that memorandum was given to the Secretary of State. That being true, how could it be said, as appears in italics in this report, that the Tydings subcommittee was confronted with the spectacle of the four committees failing to regard the situation as being of sufficient importance to merit a report, and failing to cite a single department employee as being disloyal?

The Appropriations Committee cited no less than nine of them. It called attention to an espionage report of the FBI itself which was in State Department files. It called attention to Mr. Marzani. It called attention to the fact that Marzani, with others, was doing private work on the time and with the money of the United States Government in Presentations, Inc., and he and those associated with him were using it to disseminate Communist propaganda.

Next I wish to read to the Senate Mr. Peurifoy's letter in reply to this investigation, to show whether or not the committee was doing anything. Mr. Peurifoy was Assistant Secretary of State. On June 24, 1947, Mr. Peurifoy in reply wrote to Senator Ball. Mr. President, one of the reasons why I took the floor today is that the former Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Ball, is not in the Senate now and cannot speak on the floor. He was the Senator in charge of the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations handling the State Department appropriation. It was that subcommittee which was looking into this matter. This is Mr. Peurifoy's reply:

MY DEAR SENATOR BALL: Knowing your keen interest in this problem, and as part of my undertaking to keep you and your committee posted as to our progress on the personnel security program, I believe you will be interested to know that I have taken action under the McCarran rider to terminate the employment of the following employees of the Department concerning whom derogatory information of a security character or suitability nature has been obtained by investigation.

Then Mr. Peurifoy names 10 persons he is putting out of the Department. I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that out of those 10, 5 were named in the report which was given to General Marshall, Secretary of State, on June 10, 1947, and which I have just read to the Senate. Then Mr. Peurifoy's letter continues:

In addition I expect to take action on two more cases within the next few days.

Of the remaining 55 cases of individuals employed in the Department concerning whom derogatory allegations have been made, 3 are either resigning from the Department or are being terminated by a reduction in force, and recommendations for security clearances have been made in 8 cases, which are still being considered. The remaining 44 cases will be investigated further. I have directed that such further investigation be expedited and be given priority over all other investigations in order that a determination may be made in those cases at the earliest possible date. When action has been taken on the cases now up for decision, I will communicate with you further, and I will also keep you informed from time to time of the progress being made and the decisions reached in respect to the remaining cases of employees of the Department undergoing further investigation.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. PEURIFOY,
Assistant Secretary.

In handwriting under his signature is:

Will you be good enough to inform your committee.

Then on July 1, 1947, Mr. Peurifoy wrote Senator Ball this letter:

I have discharged under the McCarran rider ———

He uses the name which I leave blank in the RECORD—effective at the close of business June 30.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN E. PEURIFOY.

On August 6, 1947, we received a report or statement from Mr. Stanley Goodrich that of the 65 cases in which there was question of disloyalty involved, 10 individuals were dismissed under the McCarran rider on July 25, 1947.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator mentions Mr. Stanley Goodrich. Will he identify him?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, I will get the identification for the RECORD. He was an employee in the State Department engaged in this particular work as deputy in the Office of Controls. He was working on security matters.

Apparently Mr. Goodrich is referring to the letter of the 24th, because he said, "dismissed under the McCarran rider on July 27, 1947." I read from the file on Mr. Stanley Goodrich's report:

Seven individuals were dropped from the rolls through a reduction in force. Three individuals resigned. One individual was removed as the result of charges preferred against him. One individual is on leave without pay for the period of 1 year. Fifteen individuals were given security approval, and 28 persons are still under investigation.

Mr. President, that indicates that the State Department officials were in touch with the committee and they were reporting that they were proceeding to allow some of these persons to leave. But this also indicates that they had several ways of getting rid of, let us call them, security risks. They had the method of allowing them to resign. They had the method of removing them for some cause. They had the method of removing them under the McCarran rider, as well as under the disloyalty program.

At this time I wish to speak of another case because it demonstrates how the officials had been working in the department to get rid of these individuals. I quote language which was used by Mr. J. Anthony Panuch, former Deputy Assistant Secretary of State, who was the security officer in charge of security asked Mr. Marzani to resign. Mr. Marzani has been in the OSS. He had been transferred to the State Department about November 1945. In 1946, as early as April, Mr. Panuch discovered that Mr. Marzani had been a Communist, and the question arose as to how they were going to get him out of the State Department. This is Mr. Panuch's language:

Could I talk Marzani into resigning?

Mr. President, Marzani had been a Communist, and later he was convicted as having been a Communist; but in the meantime he lied to the State Department about it. Panuch continues:

Suppose I could not? On the state of the available evidence, we would be in a box, for if Marzani was in fact a subversive, he would be alerted, and further development of the evidence with respect to his activities would be difficult, if not impossible. He could and would immediately and effectively cover up. They required clear and substantial evidence. To make the situation worse, more complicated, there seemed to be no other grounds on which to get rid of Marzani.

In other words, Marzani was competent in his work, so far as that was concerned; and therefore he could not be gotten rid of on the ground of inefficiency.

That shows what difficulty they had encountered in getting a Communist out of the State Department.

Then Panuch said:

I could imagine the cries of double jeopardy * * * if we had attempted to fire Marzani in 1946 on the very same disloyalty charges which the Civil Service Commission had dismissed in 1943.

Marzani had been in the OSS. A complaint came in, and he was charged with being a Communist. The Civil Service Commission gave him a trial on that charge. As Mr. Panuch says, the Civil Service Commission produced no witnesses against Marzani; the only witnesses who were produced were character witnesses for him, and then there was also his own testimony. The Civil Service Commission found that he was a loyal, patriotic citizen. Panuch was worried about the spectacle of having in the State Department, Marzani, a Communist, a man who had had a trial before the Civil Service Commission, even though no witnesses against him were produced at that time. The officials knew he was guilty of the charge of being a Communist; but the question was, What could they do about it?

Then the McCarran rider was made available.

Mr. President, at this time I wish to explain something about the McCarran rider, because it was put in an appropriation bill for the express purpose of taking care of a similar situation, so as at least to allow a Communist to be removed from the State Department. So for a moment let me refer to the time when the McCarran rider was added to the appropriation bill.

I shall never forget, and I know the other members of the Appropriations Committee will not forget, the time when, prior to July 1, 1946, question arose in the Appropriations Committee in regard to Communists or, at least, subversives or security risks in the State Department. Mr. Byrnes, who formerly had been a Member of the Senate and formerly had been a member of the Supreme Court, was then Secretary of State, and he recognized what was occurring in the State Department. He knew, as he told our committee, that if he took the cases before the Civil Service Commission, the result would be the same as that in regard to Marzani while with the OSS—without calling any witnesses, without prosecuting the cases before the Commission, but with the Commission acting in a timid, frightened manner. Frightened of whom, Mr. President? Of Communists or of subversives or of security risks?

So Mr. Byrnes said, "I cannot get rid of these people under the present civil-service rules. There is no way to do so. Sometimes we know the existence of a certain situation, but are unable to prove it."

Therefore, the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] and the other members of the Appropriations Committee proposed to the appropriations bill—and the Senate added the proposal to the bill—a rider giving the right to discharge such persons without having to go before the Civil Service Commission and without having to have a trial. That was a necessary provision.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Where is Marzani now?

Mr. FERGUSON. He is in prison in Connecticut.

Mr. McKELLAR. He is not in the State Department now; is he?

Mr. FERGUSON. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. He has not been in the State Department since 1947, has he?

Mr. FERGUSON. Not since December 20, 1947.

Mr. McKELLAR. Complaint was made by the Senator from Michigan and others, and the State Department fired him. After that, he was arrested on some other charge or charges, was he not?

Mr. FERGUSON. He was arrested on the same charges.

Mr. McKELLAR. And he is now in prison.

What else could have been done by the State Department? Has not it done everything it could to get rid of that man—the only Communist or alleged Communist or subversive or security risk the Senator has mentioned. It is admitted that Marzani was duly fired for being a Communist, and is now in prison in Connecticut. What else would the Senator from Michigan have had the State Department do? I cannot imagine what else the State Department could have done. I never heard of Marzani until this morning—although I suppose I heard of him at the time, or read of him in the newspapers.

However, someone reported him to the State Department, and the State Department fired him. What else would the Senator from Michigan have had the State Department do?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I was glad to yield to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, because I know he is vitally interested in these questions. I am discussing the Marzani case because I think it is vital in connection with the consideration of Senate Resolution 231, which required the distinguished Foreign Relations Committee to make an investigation not only of Communists or subversives or bad security risks now in the State Department, but also of all those who have been in the State Department. Further, the Marzani case illustrated the need for the so-called McCarran rider. Also, Marzani was fined under that provision. And it was the operation of the McCarran rider that took our appropriations subcommittee into this field in 1947, with the results I have described.

I well remember that on the night of February 27, 1950, as I recall the date, when Senate Resolution 231 was before the Senate, the Senator from Michigan proposed an amendment to have the investigation include not only those in the State Department but also those who had been in the State Department, because we believed it was essential once and for all to have an investigation to disclose to the public what had occurred in the State Department up to that time; and we realized that if a strict or narrow interpretation of the resoluion were to be followed, as some Senators wished to have done, it would be possible that any Communists who might have been in the State Department at that time could have gotten out the day before the resolution was adopted by the Senate, or even on the day the resolution was adopted, and then there would be nothing for the committee to investigate. However, the Senate avoided that situation by making the resolution more inclusive; the Senate unanimously decided to have the investigation include not only what was happening in the State Department, but also what had happened. I cite the Marzani case and the problems it presented to Mr. Panuch as a security officer because it is essential that we know what was going on back in 1946 and 1947 as a backdrop for what may still be going on.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Does not the Senator from Michigan also believe that at this time, when American soldiers are dying in the foxholes in Korea, if any Communists or subversives or security risks have left the State Department and are now in other branches of the Government, it is important to ascertain that fact, because they could do great damage in other departments, as well as in the State Department. In many branches of the Government, such persons could do almost equal damage to the security of the United States; or if they moved into the United Nations, they could do damage to international law and order. Therefore, does not the Senator from Michigan believe that it is important for the Senate to know of all such matters? That is the precise reason why the Senate in its judgment said the investigation under Senate Resolution 231 should include not only those connected with the State Department but also those who formerly had been connected with the State Department.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes, Mr. President; it is most vital. I think the one harm which this report on Senate Resolution 231 can do is to lull the State Department into a false sense of security. When our boys are dying, we should realize how much harm can be done by a slip of the tongue. Later I shall refer to statements in the report which include the expressions "We are constrained to hold"—imagine that, Mr. President—or "We cannot condone," and similar expressions. They are not responsive to the questions that lay behind adoption of Senate Resolution 231, and all our people today want those questions answered fully and fairly.

Mr. President, the Appropriations Committee did try to obtain the evidence. On the 10th of December 1947, former Senator Ball wrote the following letter to J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, in Washington:

DECEMBER 10, 1947.

Mr. J. EDGAR HOOVER,
Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. HOOVER: This letter will introduce Mr. H. Maurice Joyce, of the professional staff, of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

In connection with my work as chairman of the Subcommittee for State Department Appropriations, I have been very much interested in the use made of the McCarran rider. As you know, 11 persons were removed from the State Department, under the provisions of the rider, this past summer, only to be allowed the privilege of resignation without prejudice a short time ago.

Acting under my instructions and with the full approval of the committee chairman, STYLES BRIDGES, committee investigators have gathered all of the pertinent information from the State Department files on these particular individuals.

In the very near future I intend to hold open hearings on this particular matter and it is my thought that you may be inclined to lend your support by furnishing any additional material concerning the activities of the 11 individuals which is on file in your Department.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH H. BALL.

The distinguished Director of the Bureau had to decline to take such action. Under the rules of the then Attorney General, the department head was not allowed to give that information.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. McMAHON. Is it not true that that is the same type of information as that regarding which Mr. Hoover, in appearing before the committee, testified it would be prejudicial to the internal security of the United States to hand it out?

Mr. FERGUSON. I assume it is the same information, and I assume the rule is the same today as it was back in that day.

Mr. McMAHON. It was the hearing at which Mr. Hoover appeared and testified; the Senator realizes that, does he not?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the Senator was there when Mr. Hoover testified, if I am not mistaken, and heard Mr. Hoover and also the Attorney General testify.

Mr. FERGUSON. No; the Senator from Michigan did not hear the testimony of those two witnesses.

Mr. McMAHON. But the Senator is familiar, is he not, with the testimony of Mr. Hoover, in which he stated that he believed it would be prejudicial to the best interests of the security of the United States to open up the raw files of the Federal Bureau of Investigation? I am sure the Senator is familiar with Mr. Hoover's views on that matter.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am advised that those are his views on the matter.

Mr. McMAHON. I am sure the Senator agrees with those views, does he not?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; I do not agree with that.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator does not agree with that view?

Mr. FERGUSON. No.

Mr. President, I thought we were going to be given a full report from the committee conducting an investigation pursuant to Senate Resolution 231. But speaking of Mr. Hoover, I wonder why we do not have this information in the report. This committee has put some of the things in the report, but I want to read an article by Mr. Bert Andrews, of the New York Herald Tribune. It is under the byline of Mr. Andrews in the Herald Tribune for Tuesday, April 4, 1950. I wonder why the committee did not report the name of the man and the evidence discussed here by Mr. Andrews. I have every reason to believe that the events took place as reported. The article is by Bert Andrews and is headed "J. Edgar Hoover refused to clear one man accused by McCARTHY—a security risk found by FBI head among those on list submitted at secret session."

The article by Bert Andrews reads:

WASHINGTON, April 3.—This reporter learned today from sources on Capitol Hill that J. Edgar Hoover, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, told a group of Senators—

I take it that that is the subcommittee, which is shown to be true later—that he has certain reservations about one of the men accused by Senator JOSEPH R. McCARTHY, Republican, of Wisconsin, in the McCarthy-State Department feud.

The article continues, on page 16—and this is the important part——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. What is the date of the newspaper from which the Senator is reading?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am reading from the New York Herald Tribune of April 4, 1950. Beginning with the last paragraph of the article on page 1, and continuing on page 16, the article reads:

Actually, from what the Capitol Hill sources disclose, Mr. Hoover, at a secret session, gave far less than exoneration to one individual. It is understood that one Senator asked Mr. Hoover facetiously if he would hire the individual in question as an FBI agent and that Mr. Hoover snapped back a sharp "no."

It is understood that another question was whether Mr. Hoover regarded the man as a security risk and that he said he did.

It is understood that a third question was whether Mr. Hoover would approve the man as loyal, and that he replied that if he were on the man's loyalty review board the man would have many things to explain before Mr. Hoover would approve him.

There were other questions in the same vein. It could not be learned whether the line of questioning was applied to additional individuals. The best information is that it was used concerning only one.

The FBI was asked tonight to comment on the information obtained by this reporter. The answer was: "No comment."

That would indicate, Mr. President, that what the Senate now needs is a copy of the transcript of all the evidence taken in executive session and all the facts obtained in executive sessions, so that we may ascertain an answer to the question, Whom did this Senator ask about? What is said in the report about that?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Was the one man of whom Mr. Hoover spoke Marzani?

Mr. FERGUSON. No. I have no idea now who it was. I am not saying who it was.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator know that it was not Marzani?

Mr. FERGUSON. Oh, I am sure it was not Marzani, because he is not now in the State Department; he is in prison.

Mr. McKELLAR. I know. But he might have been the man referred to. This was some time ago. The Senator is telling us about something which happened some time ago.

Mr. FERGUSON. It was only in April of this year.

Mr. McKELLAR. It might have been in the testimony. Has the Senator the name of any other man to whom Mr. Hoover referred?

Mr. FERGUSON. No, I have not. I am merely reading from Mr. Andrews' article, which is a report of what happened. I have looked in the report for that information. I am unable to ascertain the names referred to in the report.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator then does not have the evidence, is that correct?

Mr. FERGUSON. No, and I think we should have a full and complete file on that.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question at that point?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Is the Senator familiar with the section of the report, on page 16, referring to the McCarran committee, which he has been discussing, beginning at the end of line 3, in the second full paragraph of the report on that page? It reads as follows:

The unique powers conferred on the Department as a result of continuous reenactment of the McCarran rider led the Department to promulgate regulations which would encompass its duties and powers both under the Executive order and under the McCarran rider. Despite the concern of the Department—

And this is what I should particularly like to call to the Senator's attention:

Despite the concern of the Department for effective screening, thorough investigation and adequate procedures under the McCarran rider, public criticism developed largely as a result of a newspaper series known as the Andrews articles—

The reference is to Bert Andrews, from whose article the Senator has been quoting, is it not?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. Continuing—

which resulted in the award of the Pulitzer prize to its author. These articles attempted to demonstrate that despite the Department's precautions, fair play in the traditional American sense was not afforded discharged employees.

I wanted to invite the Senator's attention to Mr. Andrews' views, which won him a Pulitzer prize, as to the unwonted vigor, perhaps the too great vigor, with which the Department pursued the application of the McCarran rider.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am well aware of Mr. Andrews' views and I am well aware that he won a Pulitzer prize, but I am also well aware that the United States Government must use a fair interpretation of the law and must be able to cope with the situation, within the constitutional limitations, based on the facts as they are found to be. As indicated by the letter of December 10, 1947, from Senator Ball to Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, which I have placed in the RECORD, we were at that time interested not only in the 11 dismissals under the McCarran rider which were the subject of the Pulitzer prize articles by Mr. Andrews, but in the rehiring of those people. We were thwarted in that inquiry by the fact that in 1948 loyalty and personnel files of Government employees were closed to congressional committees by Presidential order.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I prefer to proceed and to yield at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. President, on page 2 of the testimony which was taken by the Appropriations Subcommittee on June 13, 1947, former Senator Ball asked this question of Mr. Peurifoy:

Would you say that in our present situation, internationally, particularly in a Department like the State Department, dealing with foreign questions, it is essential that there be absolutely no question as to the loyalty of its employees?

Mr. PEURIFOY. Absolutely, sir.

Senator BALL. So that any doubt as to an individual's loyalty should be resolved in favor of the Government?

Mr. PEURIFOY. Any reasonable doubt should be resolved in favor of the Government. I believe it is a privilege to work for this Government, and not a right.

That testimony recalls the fact that Mr. Peurifoy himself was shocked at the testimony brought out, and that he recognized the need to give the benefit of doubt to the Government in such cases.

In connection with the hearings from which I have just quoted I can cite one particular case in which the file was examined and the evidence given in the presence of Mr. Peurifoy and the security officers, which was to the effect that a girl secretary to one of the Assistant Secretaries of State had been employed, prior to her employment in the State Department, in the Russian Embassy. She had worked in the Washington Book Shop. We know what the Attorney General's office has said about that shop before it closed. I take it that the evidence was considered by the State Department itself as being so strong in showing a security risk that they put in the file an order that she could not see top-secret information. I shall never forget that the distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who is now on the floor, and the junior Senator from Michigan called the Assistant Secretary of State concerned, to advise what the evidence showed concerning this particular girl who was a secretary in his office. He was told that she, under the order in the file, could not see top-secret information. He said "Senator, I never heard of that order in the file. Nobody told me about that order in the file. I know she is not a Communist."

We asked him how he knew she was not a Communist, and he said:

I looked her straight in the eye and asked her, "Are you a Communist?" and she said "No."

Mr. President, when we know the techniques of communism, when we know how Communists are taught to lie and to deceive, that is an astonishing statement. If we should bring a maid in from a farm and ask her some question, she would probably tell the truth. But we should not expect that to apply to anyone who has been listed as not entitled to get top-secret information.

The Senator from New Hampshire well remembers that conversation. Later, this person left the Department.

We asked in Senate Resolution 231 that the committee make public the facts so we would know what took place. It is for that reason that I feel it is my solemn duty to repeat now these things and to give this information to the United States Senate.

We must be alerted. We are now at war with communism. It is not a cold war; it is a hot war with communism. If the American people are not alerted, what will happen?

I read from page 13 of the committee report. Here is what the committee had to say about it:

At the end of the war, and indeed some months before, it became increasingly apparent that the Soviet Union did not contemplate a cooperative and friendly relation with democratic peoples and that the American Communist Party was resorting to its traditional obstructionist tactics and subservience to Soviet Russia. Those employees whose loyalty was subject to question had to be removed from the Federal service.

So, a few months prior to the end of the war, America was just awakening from her sleep. Every member of the committee knew that a few months prior to the war we were being penetrated by these very people; and then, Mr. President, we are told they were looked right in the eye and asked, "Are you a Communist?"

Do Senators remember what was asked Mr. Hiss when he was examined, and how he and Mr. Remington were examined? Mr. Remington is under indictment for lying to a grand jury in New York as to whether he ever was a Communist.

No, Mr. President; we must alert all our public officials to this thing which is happening in America for its bearing on what is now happening in Korea, as the distinguished Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] has said.

Mr. President, there is another matter which I want to bring to the attention of the Senate, which was brought out by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] in his individual views. He asked a question which I think is very pertinent. He wants to know who brought Mr. Hiss into the State Department. He wants to know who brought Mr. Wadleigh into the Department. Here is his question, on page 339 of the report:

What State Department officials were responsible for placing Hiss and Wadleigh in the State Department?

That raises the whole question of Mr. Hiss and his activities in the State Department, as also the question of the activities of Mr. Wadleigh. The Senate has never been told the facts of the Hiss case. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] can laugh about that if he wishes, but we know only what was brought out to prove that Mr. Hiss was guilty of perjury. That is all we know about. The committee was designated to tell us all about the activities of all these people in the State Department.

Mr. President, this is no laughing matter, I say to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. Not to a man who will laugh when the question is asked whether or not the Senate of the United States has been fully advised as to Mr. Hiss.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator reconsider his refusal to yield, in view of his personal attack on the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FERGUSON. No; I shall not yield now.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator refuse to yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. At this moment.

The Senate has a right to know. I am surprised, in fact I am disappointed, that the memorandum I am about to read is not incorporated in the report of the subcommittee. It is signed by Mr. J. Anthony Panuch. Mr. Panuch was the head of the Security Division of the State Department at the time the memorandum was written on March 7, 1946. It is a confidential memorandum for Mr. Russell, who was then Under Secretary of State in charge of administration under Secretary of State Byrnes. It is in reply to a proposal of March 5, 1946, which is referred to:

MARCH 7, 1946.

Confidential.

Memorandum for Mr. Russell.

Subject: Hiss plan for reorganization of the State Department.

1. I have read with mingled feelings of admiration and horror the outline of the above as revealed in—

I leave out the name of the writer—memorandum to the Secretary of State March 5, 1946. The plan's simplicity of design is admirable; its concept is grandiose. If accomplished, it will make Colonel McCormick's plans for the reorganization of the Department under the cloak of organizing "intelligence" appear provincial and myopic by comparison.

2. In examining the plan and assessing its implications in terms of control, it should be remembered that Dr. Hiss exercises Svengali-like influence over the mental process of—

I leave out the name—

the United States delegate to UNO. Through—his designee for the post of Secretary General of the United States delegation to UNO Dr. Hiss will enjoy "working control" over the flow of papers in and out of the Secretariat of the United States group. The proposed plan would establish a similar control set-up within the State Department, where Dr. Hiss already wields considerable influence with the counselor on UNO matters. This would be effected by the simple device of establishing a new Office for the United Nations Affairs, which would report directly to the Under Secretary. Under the plan the Director of this new Office (Dr. Hiss) would be the Under Secretary's Deputy for United Nations Affairs.

I leave out the name—

3. If this ambitious project should be approved, it is obvious that the operations of the new office, as the "Initiating and coordinating center within the Department" for UNO affairs will, for all practical purposes, supplant and supersede the functions of the geographic and economic offices of the Department. In such event, the question arises to what extent the de jure policy output of the Department will be diluted by the day-to-day de facto policy pro luct as established by—

I leave out the name—

Counterpart of the State Department, functioning within the UNO orbit of influence in New York. If Dr. Hiss should succeed in causing—to be designated as the UNO Assistant Secretary General for Administration, the Hiss group will have achieved infiltration in, or control of, four critically strategic points, i. e. (a)

UNO itself—

4. This power mechanism could be utilized as an effective instrumentality within UNO of our foreign policy as determined by the Secretary and the President. But if it is not so utilized, or, if it becomes susceptible to other influences, the results may be embarrassing to the Secretary, to say the least. The security hazard of such a set-up, if eventually accomplished, would seem to warrant the continuing interest of the FBI and other security intelligence agencies.

RECOMMENDATIONS

(a) The Office of United Nations Affairs, if established, has two main functions; (1) to transmit departmental policy, coordinated in the geographic and economic offices, when approved by the Secretary, to the United States delegation to UNO, and (2) to provide "headquarters services" to the delegation.

(b) The OUNA is, in essence, a political office which should be under the jurisdiction of the Assistant Secretary for Political Affairs.

(c) It seems almost self-evident that a strong Assistant Secretary for Political Affairs should be promptly designated to relieve the Secretary of some of his present tremendous burden. General Wedemyer, if available, would seem to be an outstanding possibility for this portfolio. He is an expert on Germany and related geopolitical problems. He was undoubtedly the "ace" planner of the General Staff during the war, and as such, was held in uncommon regard by Generals Marshall and Eisenhower. He is a highly civilized person possessed of consummate skill in matters of politico-military diplomacy—qualities which he demonstrated in China under trying circumstances. Because of the fear and respect in which the British hold him, his appointment could not reasonably be construed as a threatening gesture to the U. S. S. R. Such an appointment would be gratifying to the President and would not be subject to attack by Constantine Brown. I think even Drew Pearson would approve. Incidentally, the general would make an ideal United States member of the Far Eastern Commission in the event that this burden should eventually become too great for General McCoy.

J. ANTHONY PANUCH.

Mr. President, I think it is very important that comment be made on the evidence before us. Did the State Department know what Mr. Hiss was doing in the Department? If not, why did the security officer write this memorandum?

I ask these questions: Why is there not something about this business in the report? Was and is there a cell in the Department? Was what Mr. Hiss was doing known to the Department? What was he doing? Why is that not in the report, if the members of the committee were to tell us what had gone on as well as what was going on at the present time?

I read this sentence:

Dr. Hiss will enjoy working control over the flow of papers in and out of the Secretariat of the United States group.

Mr. President, Mr. Panuch said that if the plan were to go through, Mr. Hiss would enjoy working control over the flow of papers in and out of the Secretariat of the United States group. What could America have expected, Mr. President, if Mr. Hiss had working control over all the papers that went in and out of the Secretariat of the United States group?

Then Mr. Panuch in a further sentence says:

The Hiss group will have achieved infiltration—

What kind of infiltration? What was Mr. Panuch talking about? He must have known what was being done in the Department by some of the employees. Why has that not been investigated and brought to our attention?

Then he said:

The security hazard of such a set-up if eventually accomplished would seem to warrant the continuing interest of the FBI and other security intelligence agencies.

In other words, he is so frightened about it that he believes that if it is accomplished the FBI will constantly have to be employed, and the other security agencies constantly be in the State Department.

Mr. President, I cite this matter because I believe it essential that we should have been given all the facts under Senate Resolution 231, and I think we have not been given all the facts.

Mr. President, so far as the Senate Committee on Appropriations was able to do so, it investigated and reported, contrary to what the Senator from Maryland, or his subcommittee's report state. I have no knowledge that it ever had the 108 files referred to. It did have access to some of the State Department files. Whether they included any of the 108 I have no way of telling. I have now examined the report of the House Appropriations Committee and find they have listed information on some 108 files. But I am sure that was published some time after the Senate committee had gone into the matter; it was published in January 1948. As I have stated, our committee did not consider the situation as one which did not merit a report, because we did report to the Secretary of State, and we cited names. We gave no clearances, as the subcommittee report and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] inferred we did. As I have said before, we were confronted in March 1948 with the closing of all the files, and therefore it was impossible for us to look into the files any further, or continue the examination of them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. LODGE. Or would the Senator rather wait until later?

Mr. FERGUSON. I would rather wait until later.

Mr. LODGE. Very well; I shall wait.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as I indicated, the public will never be satisfied with this investigation unless all the evidence is printed. That is why I read the Bert Andrews' story. The question was, Did that happen? Who is the person they are talking about? He may even have been one of those who have been cleared in this report of the Foreign Relations subcommittee.

I am just informed on the Senate floor that what is ostensibly the testimony before the subcommittee has been printed. But the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts had asked certain questions, and some 40 pages of his questions and the answers have been left out of the printed record of the hearings. Why was that testimony left out? I say, Mr. President, that if a report quotes part of the testimony, then the public is entitled to all the testimony.

I realize that this report was given to the press before it was even delivered to the committee. The press had a day or two to read it over. The Senate had no such opportunity. It was summarized so that the committee could highlight those things they thought should be emphasized. The committee used italics in the report so that facts could be picked out, and that emphasis indicated that the Committee on Appropriation had gone over these cases, but had done nothing about them. I have indicated this not to be the fact.

Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS] is an honest, patriotic citizen. He stated on the floor of the Senate that he had found in the report; for instance, allegations against the Senator from Massachusetts which should be withdrawn. The Senator from Maryland apparently did not write the report. He is chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, and he had duties and tasks in connection with that committee. I am wondering then, who did write this report. Who is the actual author of the words of the report? I think it would be well for the Senate of the United States to know. It was handed a report, without the right of debate at the time it was submitted. But there is one thing about the Senate, there always comes a time when Senators can debate a matter. It may not be at the particular moment when the matter is first brought up, because a motion to table can keep any Senator from using his voice at that moment, but there comes a time in the Senate when a Senator can raise his voice on the floor and state what he believes to be the facts; and we should thank our God that that is true. If the time ever comes when a minority cannot rise in the Senate and speak, then America will no longer be America.

Mr. President, who drew the conclusions of this report? That is a question about which we want information. Who helped to write it? Who read it before it was actually put before the Senate?

I shall refer to just a few pages of the report. I take first page 159, and I want to make observations on certain language, there in line with my inquiry as to who wrote it. It does not appear to me to be the forthright language of the Senator from Maryland. I now read:

In consideration of the charges made against * * * this subcommittee is constrained—

I underscore the word "constrained"—to observe that it is regrettable so many who profess to be informed about communism fail to understand or, when it serves them, deliberately ignore the true nature of the Communist-front movement.

It continues:

This movement is a tactic devised by Communist strategists to bring, through deception, all liberal-minded persons into touch with Communists and ultimately under their leadership, and expresses itself either through Communist infiltration of organizations of good repute or the covert establishment of front organizations, under disguised Communist control, appealing on the basis of ostensibly worthy purposes to liberal-minded individuals.

Then they proceed to say:

To condemn indiscriminately those who are deceived by such fronts is to play directly into the hands of the Communists. On the other hand, we cannot condone the practice of permitting the indiscriminate use of one's name by organizations the nature of which is not known or investigated.

Whose language is this, Mr. President? Who is "constrained to observe"? Who is "constrained to observe that it is regrettable so many who profess to be informed about communism fail to understand or, when it serves them, deliberately ignore the true nature of the Communist-front movement." Why such weasel words as "we are constrained"?

The next sentence is correct, but, Mr. President, whose words are these?—

To condemn indiscriminately those who are deceived by such fronts is to play directly into the hands of the Communists.

If they are honestly deceived, it is said we cannot then condemn them. But I say, Mr. President, that they should have had knowledge or should have known. For centuries the law has been that a man is held to be responsible for his knowledge or for what he should have known.

Then they say, "On the other hand we cannot condone the practice." They do not condemn the practice; they only say "We cannot condone the practice of permitting the indiscriminate use of one's name." Those are contradictory statements.

Then I turn to page 73, where another individual is being discussed, and we find this language:

Perhaps—

Only "perhaps"— in many of his contacts, (he) has not exercised the discretion—

The "discretion," Mr. President; I emphasize the word "discretion"—

he has not exercised the discretion which our knowledge of communism in 1950 indicates would have been wise, but we are impelled to comment that in no instance has Mr. Blank on the evidence before us been shown to have knowingly associated with Communists. The convenient theory suggested to us that he must have known has not yet become the criterion for judging a private citizen in this country.

In other words, they are going to forgive everyone for everything he has done in connection with communism if he did it prior to 1950. 1950 is going to be the dividing line. If one was tied in in any way with communism prior to 1950, oh, that is all right. Is it all right even under their own report, as I read before from page 13:

At the end of the war, and indeed some months before, it became increasingly apparent that the Soviet Union did not contemplate a cooperative and friendly relation with democratic peoples and that the American Communist Party was resorting to its traditional obstructionist tactics and subservience to Soviet Russia. Those employees whose loyalty was subject to question had to be removed from the Federal service.

Imagine using the word "perhaps" and the words "exercise of discretion" and "the evidence before us." For what was the committee appointed if it was not to secure all the evidence? The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was absolutely correct in the statement he made on the floor of the Senate. I am glad he came to the floor and demonstrated the trouble he was up against when he wanted people to help him ferret out the evidence. I am informed by one of the counsel of the committee, and I think it was even stated on the floor of the Senate, that they had numerous witnesses to produce, but those witnesses were not brought before the committee. They were not allowed to be heard. And then the committee used the words in the report, "on the evidence." They say "on the evidence."

Mr. President, again I want to show what kind of language they are using. We should be very particular to note the language used in this report. In talking about security risks and disloyalty they use the word "indiscretion." They speak of persons who are said to be security risks, who are said to be disloyal, as being indiscreet. What is a security risk, if indiscretion is no criterion? I will give an example from page 93 of the report:

We must conclude that Blank was extremely indiscreet in his dealings with Gayn and Jaffe, a fact which he himself readily admits.

"Indiscreet." Let us read what they were talking about. This is what they were talking about:

It is not logical that he should take official copies of his reports, that had become Government property, to give Jaffe when he had carbon copies that he could freely lend without violating any law.

The idea, Mr. President. They are saying in this report about people high in the Department of State, "If you make a confidential memorandum, no matter what it is, you can keep a copy of that and you can give it to anyone, and you are not guilty of anything. But if you take the original and give it to anyone then you are guilty of a crime." That is what they are talking about when they use the word "indiscretion"; that he gave only a copy of the secret report to Mr. Jaffe. Whoever heard of any such language to advise the Secretary of State that if his employees keep copies of any reports of any secret matters they make up, they are entitled to give them to the enemy or anyone else and then they will be charged only by the people of the United States with—what? With extremely indiscreet action.

Then on the next page of the report they use this language:

Perhaps the State Department's administration process was at fault in failing to brief its employees coming into Washington on short consultations on how they should treat the press during their stay. But we cannot and do not conclude that his indiscretion in the Amerasia matter is sufficient to brand an otherwise competent and loyal employee of 17 years' service as disloyal, pro-Communist, or a security risk.

Mr. President, this "indiscretion" was in connection with 1,700—I have seen the figure as being as high as 1,800—copies of reports. Their contents were matters, we were told, that were "teacup gossip." I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] listed the character of some of these reports, 1,700 of which did not appear in the offices of the great newspapers of the United States, but in a magazine whose circulation was around 2,000 copies. They were not "teacup gossip." And now we are told that it was only an indiscretion to have given any such reports, and that possibly the State Department did not properly advise its foreign agents when they returned to Washington as to how they should conduct their press relations.

The Senator from Massachusetts has given a brief discription of the reports. I ask that that discription be inserted at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, as taken from pages 317 and 318 of the subcommittee report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

That many of these documents were of great importance is shown by the following brief descriptions of some of the documents: A top secret document dealing with targets in Japan; a top secret document on the Japanese Air Force; a top secret report on Japanese resources; a top secret document which revealed the United States breakdown and mastery of Japanese codes; a confidential Office of Naval Intelligence report on the organization of Japanese naval forces; a strictly confidential communication from Ambassador Gauss on the reorganization of the Chinese Air Force; a classified report on airplane and seaplane anchorages in Japan, Formosa, and Korea prepared by Military Intelligence; an Office of Naval Intelligence confidential report on China coast physical geography and coastwise shipping routes, bearing the penciled notation "war plans, coastal areas, inner passage, mined areas"; a very secret document containing a memorandum to the joint chiefs of staff, Washington; two secret documents of the Military Intelligence Division entitled "Changes to Order of Battle of Chinese Army"; a document marked top secret for eyes only, the very highest classification given; a confidential forecast of the Pacific war by Secretary Grew, which indicated the location of American submarines; together with other classified documents dealing with such subjects as the composition of United States forces in Manila and an operations plan for Naval Intelligence for their entire counterintelligence organization in the United States.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, there is another thing which was not investigated, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has pointed out. It was the basis of a chart reported to have been prepared by the FBI. I have no way of telling whether that is the same report which I have mentioned in connection with the memorandum handed General Marshall June 10, 1947, but mention of it has been made on the floor, as the Senator from Massachusetts has said. He has pointed out that the reported FBI chart shows the number of agents, Communists, suspects, and sympathizers in the State Department as of May 15, 1947. The tabulation shows 20 agents, 13 Communists, 14 sympathizers, and 77 suspects.

It is further stated that by July 12 the number had been reduced to the following: 11 agents, 10 Communists, 11 sympathizers, and 74 suspects.

The Senator from Massachusetts asked this question:

> Who are these Communists and agents and sympathizers and suspects? What are their names? Why are they there?

He further said:

> In the Lattimore case, there are a number of questions to which the answers were not obtained.

Then he asked very important questions dealing with the Lattimore case.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator from Michigan aware of the fact that in the printed copy of the hearings of the subcommittee on disloyalty, there are omitted, beginning at page 1488, about 35 typewritten pages of the transcript of the subcommittee meeting on June 28?

Mr. FERGUSON. I have referred to it in my remarks on the floor; I just learned of it this morning.

Mr. LODGE. Is the Senator from Michigan aware of the fact that the part which was omitted includes a long list of questions which I thought the subcommittee should ask, but which the subcommittee did not ask?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I am informed of that. I am glad the Senator from Massachusetts has brought that matter to the attention of the Senate at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to say that I shall not attempt to characterize those methods and the tactics of leaving out of the printed text parts of the testimony and proceedings? I shall not characterize such methods, because I think they speak for themselves.

However, I should like to ask the Senator whether he would object to having printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as a part of his remarks, the portions of the subcommittee transcript which have been omitted from the printed text of the hearings. Would the Senator object to that?

Mr. FERGUSON. No, Mr. President; I shall not object. I ask unanimous consent that the portion to which the Senator has referred may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, objecting just for the present, in order to make an observation, if the Senator will permit me, let me say that I am very happy that the Senator is going to permit the printing of those pages of the testimony at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because in my opinion all the testimony which was taken either in executive session or in open session should be fully printed. I say to the Senator that apparently he holds in his hand or has available to him the complete record of every word of testimony which the subcommittee received.

Mr. LODGE. It is supposed to be complete, but I have just called attention to the fact that it has been very carefully edited.

Mr. McMAHON. No; I mean I understand that the Senator has in his hand or has available to him the complete stenographic record.

So far as I know, I thought the entire stenographic record was contained in the green volume of printed hearings which the Senator has on his desk. If the printed volume does not contain all the stenographic record, I think the part the Senator mentions should not only be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD but perhaps should also be printed as a record of the hearings; perhaps we could well think about having it printed as the record of the committee hearings before a large number of copies of that record are printed.

Mr. LODGE. Having had this experience with the record, I would rather not take a chance. I would prefer to have the portion to which I have referred printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The testimony referred to appears at the conclusion of Mr. Ferguson's speech.)

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator misunderstood me. I not only want the portion to which reference has been made printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but I think it would be well to have it printed in the committee record, also.

Mr. LODGE. I think so, too. However, I do not want to let this copy out of my possession, except to the official reporters for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan for his cooperation in this matter.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for calling it to my attention.

Mr. President, that matter raises the question, How could that portion of the testimony be omitted from the printed hearings? Who is responsible for that omission? What kind of methods have been followed in making to the United States Senate a report from which very vital and important matters are omitted? This matter is the reason why, when I commenced my remarks, I said, "until all the records are printed."

Mr. President, I hope what I may say here today will indicate strongly that I believe there must be a new investigation of this entire matter.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Since the Senator has brought up the question of the completeness of the record, let me say that as soon as I learned that the record had been printed, and because of necessity I was away for several days last week, when I returned I sent one of the page boys to the Foreign Relations Committee to request a copy of this printed record for me. He was informed, and in turn he informed me, that the copy would not be available.

I sent him back again, and told him that I knew the record had been printed and that I wanted a copy.

Again he returned, and reported to me that they would have to be personally released by the Senator from Maryland, the chairman of the subcommittee.

I then went to the cloakroom and put in a personal request to the Senator from Maryland. There was momentary hesitation; but I said that as a Member of the Senate of the United States, I desired to have a copy, and I felt that a copy should be made available to me, because I think it is a matter of current importance, and some of us might want to discuss the situation, and we wanted to have a copy while the matter was current.

The Senator said he would look into the matter and would see if I could be supplied with a copy here on the floor of the Senate.

I merely want the RECORD to be complete, because this matter is of such importance that I do not think there should be a moment's hesitation in supplying each Member of the Senate with a copy of this very important document.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I am glad to yield.

Mr. LODGE. I have this one copy, which I obtained after some difficulty. I shall be glad to let the Senator from California have it, but I hope he does not let it out of his sight, because I understand that if he does, we may never see it again.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. So as to keep the RECORD straight, let me say that I was a member of the subcommittee, as was also the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who succeeded in obtaining a copy of the hearing, after some difficulty. By what method he obtained it, I do not know.

However, as a member of the subcommittee and also as a Member of the Senate, I have had the same difficulty that the Senator from California has experienced. Thus far, I have been unable to get a copy of the hearing. I am still attempting to obtain one. Before the day is over, I hope I can obtain one. In order that the Senator from California may not feel alone in this matter, I merely wish to point out that I, too, have thus far been unable to obtain a copy of the hearing.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, perhaps I was more fortunate. I saw one of the copies on Friday, for a few minutes. However, what I wanted was not in it. I was informed that the second section was not printed as yet. At any rate, I could not find what I wanted to find.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I understand that part 1 is supposed to be complete, insofar as the hearings before the committee are concerned.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. The second part deals only with the appendix.

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. So part 1, at which the Senator is now looking, purports to contain the full text of all the proceedings on June 28. However, as I have just stated, it does no such thing, because approximately 35 pages of the typewritten testimony have been omitted, and those portions deal with some very important matters.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Is it not also true that after those pages are omitted from the printed hearing, the printed hearing then resumes the typewritten transcript at the point where the statement is made that the hearings were concluded for that day, including the statement that the committee adjourned—and thus seems to indicate that that was all of the hearings, although actually a great many pages of the testimony were omitted?

Mr. LODGE. That is true. The omission of the portions to which I have referred could not have been a mistake, in the sense that by mistake the entire latter part of the proceedings was omitted, because after the omission of the large number of pages to which I have referred, in the printed copy of the hearing appear the last several sentences shown in the typewritten transcript, including the statement about the adjournment. However, the printed copy omits all the questions which I have asked to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for today.

Mr. President, I have just received another copy of part 1 of the hearings; they seem to be coming now.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I desire to state that I now have a copy of volume 1, which has just been delivered to me.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I should state that when I saw the record of the hearings I was looking for one particular matter, namely, whether the appendix contained the hearings of the Senate Appropriations Committee. As I suggested in the beginning, the entire record should be printed. That is why I read from the article by Mr. Andrews, published in the New York Herald Tribune. That was part of the proceedings of the committee.

Mr. President, I am sorry the subcommittee has been discharged. I really feel that the subcommittee, knowing what has taken place, should resume its work and undertake an investigation of its own staff, an investigation of those who prepared this volume, to determine who is responsible for omitting from the record these vital pages; to ascertain who is responsible for the wording of this report and for the portion which I cited on Friday. On page 210, in explanation of a certain individual's relations with the State Department, there is reference to a so-called round-table discussion, and it is stated that the person referred to was one of the people who came into that discussion. Contrary to that description of the affair, in the justification for that particular money for the use of the State Department, representatives of the Department appeared before the Senate Appropriations Committee, and testified that the occasion was a vital thing to the Department, that it must have certain people come in, to whom they not only pay a per diem but also expense money. The Senate appropriated money for this purpose, yet the report would indicate that these were nothing but round-table discussions, with a banquet in the evening, in order that certain matters might be casually discussed.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. MUNDT. In view of the very extraordinary manner in which the so-called committee report has been given to the Senate, by virtue of the fact that in the original instance it was labeled a "subcommittee report" and that, after the Committee on Foreign Relations had disavowed paternity of the report, it was finally printed, and, in the process of printing, the jacket was changed from "subcommittee report" to indicate that it was a report of the full committee; further, in view of the fact that what purports to be the complete hearings of the committee has been deleted, censored, and chopped up, in conformity with the evidence presented by the Senator from Massachusetts; and in view of the further fact that the chairman of the committee, himself, has spoken on the floor of the Senate, saying he did not know there were in the report some of the things which actually were found in the report, I wonder whether the Senator from Michigan will agree with the Senator from South Dakota that this whole business of a report and a censored set of hearings comes very close to being a hoax and a fraud, to use the words of the original report.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I may answer that by saying that the hoax and fraud could have been perpetrated on the subcommittee by those who drafted the report and by those who prepared the record. I am not saying that that is the case. I know the distinguished members of the committee. The Senator from Maryland stood upon this floor and was rather shocked to think that the report criticized the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts for attending only nine meetings, or some such number—indicating to the Senate that he was not responsible for that part of the report. Who put it in? Why was it put in? I want to make a few remarks upon that question.

Mr. MUNDT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield further to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield for a question.

Mr. MUNDT. The distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], also manifested considerable surprise to have found in the report language condemning the minority leader of the Senate. He said he was surprised to find it there, that he had not had time to discover it before. It would seem that the least the members of the majority party, as members of the subcommittee, could have done, was to exercise diligence enough to read the report, even though they did not prepare it themselves.

Mr. FERGUSON. I quite agree.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield, that I may ask a question of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. FERGUSON. I ask unanimous consent that, without prejudice to my rights on the floor, I may yield to the Senator from Connecticut for a question to be addressed by him to the Senator from South Dakota.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. McMAHON. Do I correctly understand that the Senator from South Dakota is indicating that the Members who signed the report did not read it? The Senator is not making that implication, is he? Is the Senator making that statement?

Mr. MUNDT. The Senator from South Dakota is profoundly confused by the fact that the chairman of the committee, if he read the report, should say on the floor of the Senate that he did not know what was in the report.

Mr. McMAHON. I cannot entirely follow the Senator. But I simply do not want him to be all-encompassing, so far as the Senator from Connecticut is concerned.

Mr. MUNDT. I ask the Senator from Connecticut whether he was aware of that.

Mr. McMAHON. I may say to the Senator that the Senator from Connecticut not only read the report but he worked on it and knows what is in it.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, it is unusual; at least, I am sure it is not the common practice of the Senate to have the majority members of a committee write reports and not show them to the minority members, in order that the reports may be discussed before being signed and printed. The Senator from Michigan has had some experience with investigating committees, as a member of the former Truman committee, and as a member of the Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, and he knows with what care the reports of those committees were prepared. They were read, they were examined, views were interchanged, and every member of the committees was given a copy of each report for discussion, so that there was no question about the rights of minorities and the rights of majorities. If the Senate is to function as a legislative body, under the two-party system, the rights of minorities must be recognized.

This brings me to the question, Why is this report so intemperate as to certain persons? Why does it go to extremes to discredit minority members of this body? In that connection, I may say that the name of the minority leader was used. Was he called as a witness to deny the statement, or was he given permission to deny the statement? Did he have witnesses who were present when the statement was supposed to have been made? I understand that was not the case.

Why is the Senator from Massachusetts specifically named and a statement given of the number of meetings he attended, while nothing is said about the number of meetings attended by Democratic members of the committee? Why does the majority go to the length of counting the number of the files read by the Senator from Massachusetts and the number of files read by the Senator from Iowa? Why do they cite the exact number of meetings attended by these two responsible Senators on the minority side of the aisle? Why do the majority members of the committee reiterate and emphasize by placing in italics an untruth about four committees of the Republican Congress, at least about what the Appropriations Committee of the Senate had done with respect to this question? Why was the report so baldly partisan that minority members of the subcommittee were not given an opportunity to see it, or to affix their signatures, or to decline to affix them?

Mr. President, is this administration so fearful of its mistakes, resulting in the loss of half the world to communism, that it cannot bear a just exposure by the opposition party?

Has vested interest in error become so set that the minority cannot function, and that the press cannot function as avenues of enlightenment any longer in America? Has this administration become so arrogant that it no longer tolerates criticism? Has this administration gone so far down the road of one-party rule that it must abuse, vilify, and discredit any man who does not follow its party line? Is this the meaning of national unity in a time of crisis?

Look at the report, Mr. President. It is intemperate and abusive. I believe it is the most intemperate and the most abusive report ever filed in the United States Senate. It pours out words to discredit Members of the Senate instead of developing the charges of communism in the Government. It quotes evidence in its favor and ignores evidence which might prove embarrassing. We have the spectacle revealed today by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, who fortunately, had knowledge, and can, therefore, speak upon the Senate floor with knowledge, that the committee left out of the report certain matters of vital interest to the people.

Oh, yes, Mr. President, the report uses soft words, escape words, to shield those who have been careless with the national security. But it uses harsh words as to witnesses who testified about the questionable conduct of persons high in the State Department.

The tactics represented by this report come dangerously close to emulating the internal propaganda tricks of totalitarian states. Its intemperate language resembles that which we might expect from Fascists, like Goebbels, or from the Communist Vishinsky. Its attacks upon Senators, instead of investigating charges, are the same turning upside down of the truth that enabled communism to make the absurd claim that the United States is the aggressor in Korea and that South Korea committed an act of aggression upon North Korea.

Mr. President, I ask again, and I shall continue to ask until I can find out, who wrote this report? Whose words are these strange words in the report? It is a strange document. It is alien and foreign to this body. It has all the earmarks of dictatorship technique.

The Senator from Maryland could not have written it, for I know him as an honest man, a man of sincerity and integrity, and I cannot believe these words to be his words. The great mystery is, whose hand is behind the report, and how could the Senators who signed it have been misled.

The profound irritation of the administration in this case indicates that the administration cannot bear criticism. Yet, criticism and questioning by the opposition party are, after all, the only safeguard which the people have to hold their Government to account. Can it be that the investigation was an investigation to end all investigations? Can it be that the invective in the report which has shocked so many persons was other than intemperate? Could it have been calculated to intimidate and to attempt to discourage well-intended inquiries and criticism in any quarter? If that be so—and it is apparent from an analysis of the report—where is this administration leading us?

(In accordance with the order of the Senate, the following is printed at this point, from pages 1488 to 1523 of typewritten transcript marked "Executive session, Senator Resolution 213, Wednesday, June 28, 1950, United States Senate, Committee on Foreign Relations, subcommittee appointed under Senate Resolution 231," Franklin A. Steinko, reporter:)

My opinion is that a lot of it will be just a waste of time.

Senator GREEN. Have we got answers to all the questions?

Mr. MORGAN. I think, Senator, that a great many of them we have the answers to. Yesterday, for example, Senator LODGE asked for certain reports, I believe, in connection with the case of John Service. The Department of Justice has advised me that they do not have any such reports bearing those dates, and they are sending a letter up concerning the whole matter, which we will have later. So I obviously don't have that.

There are some outstanding requests of the Department of State. There is an outstanding request of the Navy Department. There is, I believe, one outstanding request of the Department of Justice and perhaps another of the War Department. There will be others, but a great many of them have been answered, and, of course, that is the material which I have here today.

Senator LODGE. It seems to me that we ought to also get all the papers of the loyalty board in the Service case, and if the loyalty review board passed on it, we ought to get that. I also would like to have the opportunity to question somebody from the State Department with respect to the quality of Service's record before and after the Amerasia case. It seems to me you have got to do that before you can even pass judgment on that case. I don't know whether we will be turned down or not. The Service case was not 1 of the 81, and we may not be allowed to see any of that stuff, but I think we certainly ought to see it because we want to make a judgment on that matter.

Senator TYDINGS. We will look into that.

Senator MCMAHON. I think that somebody would come up and testify as to his competency and conduct as a State Department employee. I would be rather disappointed if they wouldn't.

Senator LODGE. I would, too.

Senator TYDINGS. I think we will get that all right, but whether we will get the record or not is another thing. I will have to explore that before I commit myself.

Mr. MORGAN. Incidentally, for the record at this point, in connection with the Service case, Mr. Peurifoy called me to advise the committee in this session, in the event the matter of Service came up, that the press stories to the effect that the loyalty and security board of the State Department has cleared Service are not accurate. The board has not rendered a decision concerning Service and does not intend to do so, according to Mr. Peurifoy, until the State Department has an opportunity to review our record in executive session, if we make it available to them. Furthermore, he advised that he specifically requested to be disqualified to pass on the Service case and that Under Secretary Webb had agreed to review the decision of the loyalty board at such time as it is formally rendered.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Incidentally, there are a couple questions, based on information that I have received just before noon today, that I would like to ask Mr. Service.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you indicate what they are, Senator?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I would prefer not to.

Senator TYDINGS. The only reason I asked was to see if we had covered any of the ground while you weren't here.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I have reviewed the questions that have been asked him, and this happens to be a question to ask him.

Senator TYDINGS. This is new matter, you mean?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It involves other individuals.

Senator TYDINGS. In the State Department?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No. It involves other individuals with whom he may have had some contact. I have received some information that he had contact with other individuals than those that our record discloses.

Senator TYDINGS. What I mean is, would it be pertinent to our inquiry?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. It would, indeed.

Senator TYDINGS. How? Would it bear on his loyalty?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, sir.

Senator TYDINGS. You don't care to tell us who they are?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Not at this time, because it is purely rumor. I have just received the information over the telephone and it happened just shortly before noon. This information may or may not be accurate at all.

Senator TYDINGS. Don't you think you ought to have a little more verification of that before we, busy as we all are, go into things of that sort? I don't want to be captious about it or anything of the sort. I am just asking for your opinion. You get a rumor. Is the man that gave the rumor willing to support it with any kind of reasonable fact which would make it worth while inquiring into? We can run rumors down from now on to the year 4006.

Senator LODGE. More than that, Mr. Chairman, we could run down perfectly legitimate questions from now to the year 4006 and still not exhaust all the questions that can be asked within the legitimate purview of Senate Resolution 231. That is the defect of this whole set-up.

Senator TYDINGS. I agree with you.

Senator LODGE. We could work ourselves to the bone, and we have worked hard on this committee, and still not scratch the surface of this subject.

Senator TYDINGS. Let me say this to you. My own thought is—and I want to be completely fair to my colleagues in this matter—that under resolution 231, we were instructed to inquire into the loyalty of State Department employees, past or present. In connection with that, we had to look into the loyalty of Mr. Larsen and Mr. Service, who are two State Department employees that were involved in Amerasia. I think that I was very liberal, in the absence of some of the other members of the committee, in letting the whole purview of Amerasia go in, as to whether the Department of Justice had done a good job, whether they had been fixed, which wasn't really what we set out to do. We personally set out to keep it within the State Department purview, and I tried to frame the questions, as the examination and cross-examination will note. It went into all phases of Amerasia, even though at times it seemed to me we were getting pretty far away from loyalty of the employees in the State Department. We went into whether Mr. Hitchcock did a good job or not. We went into whether the FBI did a good job or not. We got pretty far away from the State Department in many of our phases. However, it was all done in good faith and in order to be broad and liberal and fair about it.

Now, likewise, in the Lattimore case, Mr. Lattimore never was an employee of the State Department. Nevertheless, we had a great deal of testimony about Mr. Lattimore and his books and writings and this, that and the other thing. I have done my best and with some success. When nobody thought we were going to get the 81 loyalty files, I went down and got them. I didn't know what was in them.

Senator MCMAHON. Untampered with.

Senator TYDINGS. Untampered with. After the charge was made that they had been tampered with, I went to the FBI and said I wanted a check made of this, that if they had been tampered with, I wanted to know it. I am very hopeful that, having proceeded in that vein, we can more and more get back within the purview of the resolution and that we can conclude this hearing, because it is going to take a long while for us to make a study of this and see what report we are going to make. We probably will not agree on many phases of it. Quite frankly, I feel that we have done a good job. We have gone into it and we have all worked hard. This can be off the record.

(Off the record.)

Senator LODGE. Let me make a little statement, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. Certainly.

Senator LODGE. I agree that this committee has worked very hard. I think the staff has worked hard. I want to compliment them on the way they have worked. I know the Senators have put in a tremendous amount of time on this whole matter. However, Senate Resolution 231 is, and I think I can quote it right here, "to investigate persons who are disloyal to the United States who are or have been"—I underlined those three words, "or have been"—"employed by the Department of State."

Now, when you go into that, there are a whole lot of questions that suggest themselves to you that are without any restraint or construction at all squarely within that purview. I have just jotted down a few of them here that have been asked on the floor by Senators and that have been asked in the press, some of which would take months and years to go into.

What State Department officials were responsible for placing Hiss and Wadleigh in the State Department?

Have we investigated what person or persons were primarily responsible for sponsorship of employment of sexual perverts in the State Department?

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want all this on the record?

Senator LODGE. Yes. I think it would be a good thing for the men who wrote this Senate Resolution 231 to see, because some of them didn't understand what they were getting into.

Has an investigation been made with a view to determining whether those State Department officials who opposed United States recognition of Soviet Russia and who thereafter warned against any appeasement of the Soviet regime were in any way discriminated against or unfairly treated by the Department?

Has an investigation been made of the procedures whereby Communists gain entry into the United States upon the basis of visas obtained through our consular service abroad?

Has an investigation been made with reference to the release of the Soviet spy named Gaik Badalovich Ovakimian on July 23, 1941?

Has an investigation been made with reference to the release of the Soviet spy named Mikhala Nickolavich Goran on March 22, 1941?

Have questions been addressed to Adolf Berle with reference to his statement to the House Un-American Activities Committee that Alger Hiss belonged to the pro-Russian clique in the State Department?

Who in the State Department was responsible for obtaining the services of Frederick Schuman and Owen Lattimore as speakers for the Department's indoctrination course for Foreign Service employees? I have had many people ask me that.

Has the subcommittee investigated the charge that a State Department security officer whose decision that 10 members of the Department be discharged was subsequently reversed by higher authority?

What State Department officials were responsible for the advice given higher officials that the Soviet Government would allow free elections in Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Rumania, Bulgaria and the other satellite countries?

Has the subcommittee investigated the facts surrounding the case of Arthur Adams, an alleged Soviet atom spy, who was permitted to leave the United States in 1946?

Now, any one of those questions would be good for 6, 7 or 8 months of the year.

Senator TYDINGS. That is right.

Senator LODGE. Take the Lattimore case alone. We have got nothing in the record to show where Lattimore's precise relationship with the State Department has been set forth by an official of the State Department. I don't think the State Department has answered, for the record, whether the relationship to the State Department which Senator MCCARTHY applied to Lattimore was correct or not.

Senator TYDINGS. How about the four letters from the Secretaries of State?

Senator LODGE. Do you think that that completely clears up his relationship with the State Department?

Senator TYDINGS. I think as far as that phase of it is concerned, they said they didn't know him, that as far as they knew, he had no influence in molding foreign policy.

Senator LODGE. They said that, but did they set forth his exact place on the Reparations Commission to Japan, his exact appointment as lecturer?

Senator TYDINGS. That has all been testified to, that he was appointed at the request of Ed Pauley on the Presidential mission, not with the State Department. That is in the record.

Senator LODGE. All right, I will look it up again.

Senator TYDINGS. I remember it.

Senator LODGE. Let me ask you this: Has the subcommittee questioned all persons mentioned by Budenz as having had relations with Lattimore?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Senator LODGE. Have we all of them?

Mr. MORGAN. All persons?

Senator LODGE. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. In what sense?

Senator LODGE. Have we had them in and questioned all the persons mentioned by Budenz as having had relations with Lattimore?

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Budenz named in executive session a great many contributors to Pacific Affairs, the publication with which Lattimore at one time was associated. Of course, we have not interviewed all of them. There were some 16, as I remember.

Senator TYDINGS. Lattimore specifically answered each one of the charges that Budenz had made or that anybody had made. I remember that in his testimony. I don't recall it specifically, but I do know he took up one thing after another.

Senator LODGE. We haven't questioned them all, I don't think.

Mr. MORRIS. Lattimore hasn't been in since the second Budenz testimony.

Senator LODGE. Have we questioned those who have headed the China desk in the State Department to determine whether Lattimore gave advice on United States policy for China and whether this advice was acted upon?

Have we questioned the United States Ambassadors to China who were there during that period in order to get answers to those questions?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. In that connection, may I say that I talked to them about 4 weeks ago. I have been trying to locate their signatures so that I can present them. I talked to a Chinese representative here who told me that in discussing Chinese matters with the State Department he had been on repeated occasions sent to Owen Lattimore from the Far East Section of the State Department. They said, "Well, you see Lattimore about that."

Senator TYDINGS. Well, what of it? That doesn't make him an employee of the State Department.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No; but it goes to the question of his influence.

Senator TYDINGS. We are not trying his influence. We are investigating whether State Department employees have been disloyal, and Lattimore is not a State Department employee.

Senator LODGE. I would like to just complete this; it wouldn't take me very long.

Senator TYDINGS. Excuse me.

Senator LODGE. On the question of asking the Department of Justice whether they have had any new information respecting Lattimore since that date, I think it was March 24 that we went down and saw the summary of the file.

Senator TYDINGS. By "new information," do you mean derogatory or general information?

Senator LODGE. I understand they were conducting a surveillance of them or an examination of them or a study into them.

Mr. MORRIS. As I understand it, they had 70 FBI men working on Lattimore subsequent to that.

Senator TYDINGS. Who told you that?

Mr. MORRIS. Well, I heard that from about four or five different sources.

Senator TYDINGS. Name me one, so we can judge and measure the authenticity of what you heard.

Mr. MORRIS. One of them was a man named Nelson Frank.

Senator TYDINGS. Who is he?

Mr. MORRIS. He is a man who used to work for the Navy. He is a newspaperman. He is in New York. Apparently he is recognized by the Bureau as something of an expert on Communist literature. He gets frequent calls from the FBI.

Senator TYDINGS. What are we trying to find out about Lattimore, Mr. Morris?

Mr. MORRIS. I think the principal charge is he was the architect for our far-eastern policy.

Senator TYDINGS. How does what you told me, 70 men of the FBI looking into it, make him the architect of our far-eastern policy?

Mr. MORRIS. I am sorry, I didn't hear that question.

Senator TYDINGS. How could he be the formulator of policy if he wasn't in the State Department?

Mr. MORRIS. I can think of one thing. He was one of the principal consultants last October, when they had the conference.

Senator LODGE. The question I raised was very simple. On the question of asking the Department of Justice whether they had any new information since March 24, they can say, yes, we have and we don't want to tell you or they can say no, we don't have, or yes, we have.

Senator TYDINGS. I shall ask that question and put the letter in the record. I think it is a very proper question.

Senator LODGE. They asked us all to come down and look at this summary.

Senator TYDINGS. I think it is a very proper question.

Senator LODGE. It is just a question of bringing the thing up to date.

Senator TYDINGS. That is right.

Senator LODGE. Now, at the hearing on April 25, Budenz stated that he would furnish the subcommittee with names of Communists whom he knew to be in the State Department. Have we received that list?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes, I have got a letter from him in which he says he has been very busy and hasn't had time to get around to this yet, that sometime in the autumn he hopes to have time to devote some attention to this.

Senator LODGE. Budenz says that?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes.

Senator LODGE. Will that letter be in the record?

Senator TYDINGS. You will put it in the record.

Senator LODGE. I think it ought to be in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. I have got the letter somewhere. The reason I haven't brought it over here is that I didn't think of it, for one thing. Another thing is he says he wouldn't be able to do something until autumn. He sent a copy of it to each one. He says on the letter to me a copy to so and so and so and so. I think every member of the committee got a copy of it.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I got a copy.

Senator TYDINGS. He says that on there. That is the reason I didn't bring it up.

Senator LODGE. I think it ought to be in the record for the sake of completeness.

Mr. MORGAN. I have my copy to incorporate in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. You have got a copy. Put it in the record. That will take care of that.

Senator LODGE. Have we contacted and investigated all those whom Lattimore is supposed to have brought in to the Institute of Pacific Relations? If not, I think we ought to do something about that.

Mr. MORGAN. That, Senator, is a bridge that I think we ought to cross right here. To propose to undertake an investigation of that character, you might just as well give up all hope, with the existing facilities, and you might as well get set for an investigation that will extend over 1 year at the very least.

Senator LODGE. All right, now, I want to talk about that. I want to make my little speech about that. I have asked all these questions, and I think the questions are obviously questions that fall within the purview of this Senate resolution. However, with the congressional committee machinery, we could sit for another year or 2 years and we still couldn't get to the bottom of all those questions. In all the years I have been here, I have never been on a committee where people worked harder and where a more sincere effort was made.

Senator TYDINGS. I have had to do 3 or 4 hours on the committee in addition.

Senator LODGE. You are the chairman of the Armed Services Committee and you have a lot of other things to do. I have never been on any other committee where the members put in more time and worked harder. However, the nature of a congressional committee is such that the Senators haven't the time and, in most cases, haven't the expert background, and the tools which a congressional committee has, which are the publicity and the furnishing of facts on which public opinion is formed, are not the tools that you need to apprehend the existence of disloyalty in Government departments. What you need there are detectives and secret work, which a congressional committee does not have. So I think that if we sat from now until doomsday, this committee, with the other things it has to do, which we as Senators have got to do, which are just as important as this, could never get to the bottom of the question of who hired Alger Hiss or how about all these people that Lattimore got into the Institute of Pacific Relations. Therefore, at the proper time, I am going to renew my motion that a trained bipartisan commission of experts be set up to go into this thing, under the seal of secrecy, with a definite requirement that no report be made until well after the election, taking this whole thing out of politics, getting to the bottom of it, and let the chips fall where they may. That is the system that has been tried in other countries and they have gotten a lot of results from it.

I wanted to make that statement fully and frankly here, because I intend to make it in public later, and I don't want to have you gentlemen learn my views in public for the first time. I want you to hear it here.

Senator TYDINGS. I think there is a great deal, Senator LODGE, in what you say. I am not out of sympathy or in disagreement with any of the fundamentals you have expressed. Take my own situation first. In addition to what each other member of the committee has had to put in on this, I have had to put in probably 2 hours extra each day because of the mail coming to me, and I have carried, you can imagine, a pretty heavy load here.

Now, I think we have done a pretty thorough job. I don't say that we have explored every bay and inlet and river and rivulet or we haven't explored it. I am not passing on that. What I would like to do is to take what we have got and present it to the Senate and come to some recommendation that we might all agree upon for a further continuance of this thing. Now, I can't see where anybody can be hurt on that score. My own conscience will be clear and my sense of the discharge of the duty will be clear, because I have worked like the devil on this case.

Senator LODGE. I don't understand what you say about a continuance.

Senator TYDINGS. I say, we will take the evidence that we have now and make any conclusion we want from it, either in agreement or three different versions or five different versions, or any way we want to do it, and that incorporated in our general findings there be some provision and recommendation for a further pursuit of security under whatever mechanics we decide, either along your line or some other line.

Senator LODGE. Not necessarily by this same subcommittee?

Senator TYDINGS. We would be out. They would take it over and go ahead with it. I don't think we can do much more than we have done. I think it is like a sculptor. He takes his clay and he gets it in general shape. Now we are down to where the refinements come in, and we haven't got the time to go into all these things. My opinion is that we ought to make our findings on what we have and make a recommendation, which I am sure will be honored, that there be further pursuit of this proposition. By that, I don't mean this particular evidence. I mean anything that is in the picture at all that has to do with better security for the country. I am with it.

Senator LODGE. Off the record.

(Off the record.)

Senator TYDINGS. I haven't talked this over with my colleagues, I will tell you that in good faith. I haven't talked it over with Senator GREEN or Senator MCMAHON, but I have reached the conclusion that I want, above everything else, this country to be secure against the bad people in it, particularly in the present time. While I have done the best I could do, and I think a pretty good job was done by all of us, in getting the essentials of what brought us into being before us for some consideration, I am not content to leave the matter go without further pursuit by people who have the time and the effort and everything else that can be made to do the job.

Senator GREEN. I may say I am in entire sympathy with the general principles, but whether I would be for any particular plan will be another matter.

I ought to be excused. I talked with my office and there are people who have been waiting for some time over there to see me.

Senator TYDINGS. I would like to get some expression from you, Senator GREEN. I would like to get this from you today. I would like to have Mr. Morgan complete this record with such other information as has been requested to be furnished us in writing. Then I would like to have all of this made available and have the committee make whatever findings it wants to make and ask for such other pursuit of it as is necessary. I have no objection. I don't care. I don't want to drop it.

Senator GREEN. Somebody ought to make a tentative draft. That is the only possible way of getting at it.

Senator TYDINGS. I mean the committee ought to bring in its findings. We can say they are imperfect, if we want, or we can say that we have done the best we can.

Senator GREEN. My point is to get down to earth. Someone has got to make those findings or a draft in order that we may come to an agreement.

Senator TYDINGS. Make a motion, then, so we can get your point of view on paper.

Senator GREEN. Well, I would suggest that the counsel for the committee make a draft report for this committee that we can discuss, in the first place. When you once have that draft report and have been over that, then we can discuss the findings.

Mr. MORRIS. May I say, Senator, that the first basic request that I made in commencing this investigation was for the books and records of Frederick Vanderbilt Field, inasmuch as there was evidence that his money was the heart of the Communist cell in the Institute of Pacific Relations. I maintain that that was necessary. It was basically necessary to start that kind of an investigation.

Senator TYDINGS. There isn't anything, Mr. Morris, that isn't pertinent, and we can keep on asking for things, and there is no doubt in the world that would be a good thing to get, and you could ask for 5,000 different things, but we are pretty far away from loyalty in the State Department when we get out in the Institute of Pacific Relations with our little force. We just haven't got it.

Are you ready for a discussion?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I want to make an observation on that. I think it would be an utterly futile thing to make a draft report at this time. I consider we haven't even scratched the surface.

Senator TYDINGS. How long do you think it would take us to do it?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't know how long it will take us, but I would like to see us get into some of the ramifications of these witnesses as the only way that you can develop evidence upon which you can base any final conclusions, and I will have to oppose such a motion at this time.

Senator GREEN. It seems to me that we have done all that we need to do in connection with the job that was imposed upon us. We have examined the case of everyone who has been accused, by name or by number corresponding to the name.

Senator LODGE. If the Senator will yield, we were not directed by the resolution to do that.

Senator GREEN. No, but we have not supplied want ads in the paper to find additional ones. We have had plenty of publicity about this committee's work, and we would have had other names suggested to us if these people who are constantly writing letters to us had names to offer.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. We have 20 or 30 names that I think we ought to look into.

Senator GREEN. I say, all that have been presented to the committee, I think, we have examined.

Senator TYDINGS. I think we ought to reach a decision here today. I think we have done an exceedingly hard lot of work. This committee has worked hard and turned up all the essential facts. We have got to admit that there is a great field of endeavor here which we, as Cabot says, are not qualified to do. It would take us years, take much more money, take more investigators.

Senator GREEN. The point was to see whether there were present any cases of disloyalty in the State Department, or former employees of the State Department now in other Government departments. I think we have examined every case that comes within those two categories, and I think that was our duty. We want to make a report and file it and go on with other committees to continue the job that is considered necessary.

Senator TYDINGS. Is there any further discussion?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes. Before we vote on this matter, I would like to suggest a "for instance." I am compiling a list right now, which I will have this afternoon and you can have tomorrow afternoon, a list of a substantial number of witnesses to whom the trails in this thing lead.

Senator GREEN. Do they come under those two categories?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. Yes, indeed—associations and connections in the State Department.

Senator GREEN. I think that is going on a fishing expedition. A witness who may know of something in the State Department is one thing, but if you can give us the name of anyone in the State Department on whom there are reasonable grounds for suspecting his disloyalty will be another thing.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. For instance, I would like to make a request at this moment, that Maj. Gen. C. A. Willoughby, Assistant Chief of Staff in G-2, General Headquarters in the Far Eastern Command, under General MacArthur, furnish a review of the sort in the Smedly case, with special reference to their American associations.

Senator TYDINGS. I think, Senator HICKENLOOPER, without taking issue with you, we could sit here and probably think of a thousand pertinent sidelights, and some of them would be more than sidelights, perhaps.

Senator GREEN. Excuse me, I started to leave. I am afraid I will have to leave in the middle of this.

Senator TYDINGS. Let's have a decision, Senator GREEN. Your motion is pending. Are you ready for the question?

Senator GREEN. I would like to have a vote on it.

Senator LODGE. That is, to have the counsel prepare a report?

Senator TYDINGS. And submit it to us on the evidence up to date.

Senator MCMAHON. That doesn't commit us to anything except seeing a compendium of what we have got.

Senator TYDINGS. You are going to have to do this sometime. You might as well walk up to it now. There never will be a point where you will be finished.

Senator MCMAHON. I personally, in voting for this motion, want it understood as meaning in my mind that we are going to have an orderly presentation of the work of the committee to date. When I take a look at that report—I shouldn't call it a report; I should call it a memorandum of work that has been done—it would be very helpful to me in charting what I think should be the future course of the committee.

Senator GREEN. That is my suggestion.

Senator LODGE. Is it your thought that there should be a draft of a final report?

Senator GREEN. To date.

Senator LODGE. I don't like that word "final." I don't think the public will take it as final.

Senator GREEN. A draft to date of the work we have accomplished is what I would like to see. Can we decide we ought to fill in this gap or that gap or decide we ought to do this or follow up something else, so that we can have a definite statement of what we have done up to date?

Senator TYDINGS. My point is this, that we ought to take our hearings as of today, and we ought to have a report drafted for them to see whether we can agree to turn this over to the full committee, with our recommendations about its pursuit of this whole field of operations thereon.

Senator GREEN. We may make a great many changes in the report.

Senator TYDINGS. We wouldn't all agree. We will want this changed and that changed, but we will have to start sometime. I imagine the report will be pretty long. We have got a hundred and some people to deal with.

Senator LODGE. Let me say this. I think that I have some basic assumptions about this whole situation, which will not make it possible for me to sign this report.

Senator TYDINGS. I would suggest as an alternative that each man draw his own report and submit it and see where we can meet.

Senator LODGE. I have no objection to the staff working up any kind of a document that they desire, but I want to make it clear that as far as I am concerned, I don't think I will be able to sign it, because my basic assumptions about this whole proceeding are different.

Senator TYDINGS. That is all right. I am willing to start on my report. What I would like to do is get it here and tell you what I am going to say, and if you don't agree with it, make one of your own, but I want a report on the work. I think our work is pretty well concluded, if you want my opinion.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I don't think it has even started, Mr. Chairman.

Senator TYDINGS. You disagree with me?

Senator HICKENLOOPER. I disagree with you.

Senator TYDINGS. But I disagree with you, so there we are.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator, may I mention just one case here?

Senator TYDINGS. Mr. Morris, we can mention cases from now until doomsday.

Mr. MORRIS. It is in the record, Senator. May I just finish?

Mr. TYDINGS. Of course, you are not a member of the committee. When we want counsel to speak, we will ask them, but I am going to let you speak. However, that is a matter for the committee to decide.

Senator LODGE. I would like to hear what he has to say.

Mr. MORRIS. There is a case of a man named Theodore Geiger. He has been an employee of the State Department. He is now one of Paul Hoffman's top assistants. He is doing work that is quasi-State Department in character. I have gone and gotten some witnesses together who will testify that he was a member of the same Communist Party unit as they were, and I think that we would be delinquent if in the face of this evidence that is now on the record——

Senator TYDINGS. Why didn't you tell us this? Why did you wait until this hour to tell me?

Mr. MORRIS. I am not waiting, Senator. One day Senator GREEN made me a witness and I put it all in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. You haven't told me about it. This is the first I have heard about it.

Mr. MORRIS. Senator, I assume that you are aware of everything in the record.

Senator TYDINGS. No. There are some things in the record I haven't been able to read.

Mr. MORRIS. Certainly Mr. Morgan knows it. I have mentioned it several times to him.

Senator GREEN. That wouldn't have anything to do with my motion.

Senator TYDINGS. Turn it over to the FBI or do something else with it. I would like to get a decision here. We don't want to waste this afternoon.

Senator GREEN has recommended that the council prepare a report which will review the work that we have done, and that it may be used as a basis for committee action or individual action upon the matters we have already had under examination. Is that substantially it?

Senator GREEN. That is substantially it, yes.

Senator TYDINGS. Do you want to add to it?

Senator GREEN. No. I accepted that as a basis for conclusions which we may later reach.

Senator MCMAHON. Before voting, I would like to say that I think it is a profitable thing to do, because we have been in existence now for how long, Mr. Chairman?

Senator TYDINGS. We are going on our fifth month.

Senator MCMAHON. Fifth month. I would like to see a review, and in a form that I can very easily digest, of what we have already adduced in the record and, measuring that against our resolution of instructions, to see exactly where, in my mind, we are, and it is for that purpose of being helpful to me that I vote aye on the motion.

Senator TYDINGS. All those in favor will signify by saying "aye."

(Chorus of "ayes.")

Senator TYDINGS. Opposed?

(Chorus of "noes.")

Senator TYDINGS. All those in favor will signify by raising their hands.

(A show of hands.)

Senator MCMAHON. Before we finally take a record vote, can I ask the basis of the objection for getting counsel to submit a brief to us? Perhaps I don't understand.

Senator LODGE. I have many basic objections.

Senator MCMAHON. It seems to me like a sensible thing to make use of our counsel to give us a brief of what we have already done.

Senator LODGE. In the first place, there is the use of the word, "conclusion," or, "concluding," which Senator GREEN inserted into his motion. Senator GREEN is a man who understands the language and uses it very carefully, as I have had occasion to learn many times from my associations with him. The idea of that word, "conclusion," is flatly at variance with my idea that this thing is by no means concluded and will not be concluded until we have a trained bipartisan commission that will make an independent investigation. That is one thing. Secondly, my whole basic assumption about this whole situation is so different that I think I would be misconstruing my own position if I were to vote for this particular motion.

Senator GREEN. We must make some sort of a report, must we not?

Senator LODGE. My position is that the thing we ought to do is to report out a resolution, setting up a trained bipartisan commission of experts to make an independent investigation.

Senator GREEN. That may be a conclusion, but we must make a report of what we have done, surely.

Senator TYDINGS. CABOT, what will we do with what we have already done; take it down and turn it over to them without reaching any conclusions?

Senator GREEN. Conclusions are a separate matter. It doesn't have to be a conclusion, not this report. It is just for a basis.

Senator LODGE. A basis for conclusions.

Senator GREEN. In other words, the conclusion might be that we can't reach any definite conclusion. That might be the conclusion we will reach.

Senator LODGE. I think you have got the votes to carry the motion.

Senator TYDINGS. I don't want to carry any motion by sheer force.

Senator MCMAHON. I tried to frame what I interpret it to be, a working paper to give me the benefit of what has already been done in this committee period. Now, what I do with the working memorandum when I get it and read it is a horse of another color. But I can't see why counsel can't prepare a working memorandum and submit it to us without any vote at all. I am quite willing to vote.

Senator GREEN. I've got to go. It is always a half hour or another hour or 2 hours.

Senator TYDINGS. I know, but this may save you two or three more committee meetings, where we would go over the same ground again.

Let me suggest that counsel prepare a tentative report to submit to the members of this committee, that each man prepare, if he wishes, such report as he wants and such recommendations as he wants, and that we pool those here and see if we can reach collectively or individually a basis for bringing our present hearings to a close and passing it on with recommendations for further action.

Senator GREEN. If it would suit Senator LODGE better, I would just call it an interim report.

Senator LODGE. You see, I start in with this basic assumption.

Senator TYDINGS. Would you object to an interim report?

Senator LODGE. I don't object to your telling Mr. Morgan as counsel to prepare a summary of the testimony to date if you want to, although to me it wouldn't be a document of much significance.

Senator TYDINGS. What I wanted to do was to find out whether we could tell the country what we found out up to now and then go on from there in any other field we want.

Senator LODGE. Let me answer you this way. My basic assumption is that in 1945, at the end of VE-day, those who were running this Government utterly failed to sense the new realities of the situation; that that showed itself in the fact that no reason was ever given for maintaining our Armed Forces; so that a clamor developed to not just demobilize, but to disintegrate our Armed Forces to a point where we had no influence left. In the case of the State Department, that revealed itself in this carrying into the service of the State Department 4,000 people from these temporary war agencies, with no screening whatever, many of whom were totally unfit to be in the Government.

Senator GREEN. That all ought to be in the report

Senator TYDINGS. It is in the report already.

Senator LODGE. That the administration in 1945 totally failed to sense the realities of the world situation?

Senator TYDINGS. Yes, sir, it is all in there.

Senator LODGE. I will be interested to read that.

Senator TYDINGS. It is all in there. We have got a complete explanation of it.

Senator LODGE. I would like to see that report before I vote.

Senator GREEN. Certainly.

Senator LODGE. If it has got that in there, it will be interesting.

Senator TYDINGS. There isn't anything that isn't completely open and aboveboard.

Senator MCMAHON. I deny that it is in the record, that at the end of the war the administration totally failed—I deny that that is in the record.

Senator LODGE. I thought you would.

Senator MCMAHON. I, incidentally, deny the truth of it.

Senator LODGE. I thought you would.

Senator MCMAHON. If you want to say it was the administration, say it was the American people, all the American people, everybody in the world, but that is immaterial to this record.

Senator LODGE. Senator, if the leaders of this country had said to the American people that we must maintain our Armed Forces of a certain size and bear a certain relation to the other armed forces in the world, the clamor to demobilize would never have arisen. It was the lack of real leadership. The reason we are in such trouble today is because of that.

Senator TYDINGS. My dear friend, we have got a proposition before us whereby we have been working going on our fifth month. We have assembled a vast amount of evidence about matters that are pertinent to this inquiry and upon which the public ought to be informed. The suggestion before us is that counsel prepare a report on the evidence we have taken up to now. It doesn't necessarily mean we have to quit there or stop there. We can do whatever we please. But I would like to make a report on what we have done up to now, with recommendations flowing from that about what should be done in the future. Now, could there be any objection to that?

Senator LODGE. I understand that the text has already been drafted of this report; is that right?

Senator TYDINGS. I have asked Mr. Morgan to keep his text as current as he could. He has got a lot of it done. I haven't read it.

Senator LODGE. Why do you need the motion if he is writing it?

Senator TYDINGS. Senator HICKENLOOPER got one current, and you have got one current. Now let me get this straight. All you have got before you is this: Here is our evidence.

Senator GREEN. What are you arguing for?

Senator TYDINGS. Will you let me make this statement?

Senator GREEN. Yes; certainly.

Senator TYDINGS. Here is our evidence. Why shouldn't we make a finding on the evidence we have got up to now, plus such recommendations as we want to make based on the evidence?

Senator GREEN. I want to get the statement of evidence before I make any findings.

Senator TYDINGS. I am not talking about findings.

Senator GREEN. You just said "findings."

Senator TYDINGS. I said we ought to make a report based on the evidence up to now.

Senator GREEN. You said "findings."

Senator TYDINGS. Well, do you want to vote on it?

Senator MCMAHON. Does that include the 81 down at the White House?

Senator TYDINGS. It looks to be like we are just afraid. What are we afraid about?

Senator LODGE. I am not afraid to make my report.

Senator MCMAHON. Nor I mine.

Senator TYDINGS. All those in favor of the Green resolution will signify by saying "aye."

Senator GREEN. Aye.

Senator MCMAHON. Aye.

Senator TYDINGS. All those opposed signify by saying "no."

Senator LODGE. No.

Senator HICKENLOOPER. No.

Senator TYDINGS. Two votes no and two the other way.

Go ahead, Mr. Morgan, and prepare your report. The meeting is in recess.

Senator MCMAHON. I never saw a committee where the committee did not vote unanimously to have a report of its work brought to its attention.

Senator LODGE. That shows how controversial this subject is.

Mr. MCMAHON. Mr. President, as the Senator from Michigan refused to yield to me at one point in his remarks—and I do not complain about that—in order that I might make a comment——

Mr. FERGUSON. I shall be glad to answer any questions which the Senator wishes to ask.

Mr. MCMAHON. In order that I might make a comment at the time about my reaction to a statement which the Senator made in regard to Hiss. The reaction of the Senator from Connecticut had to do with the statement of the Senator from Michigan that the facts in the Hiss case were not known to the American people. I suppose more millions or hundreds of millions of words were written, and properly so, regarding the Hiss case than have been written with reference to any other case in our time. So if the Senator from Michigan chose to describe my reaction as laughter, he was welcome to do so. I only say that it was ironic in nature, because I am sure everyone knows the facts with regard to Alger Hiss. I need make no protest of my own concerning my reaction to the actions of Mr. Alger Hiss. I am sure my colleagues need no such protestations from me as to the correctness of my attitude on communism and its adherents.

Something was said by the Senator from Michigan with reference to propaganda tactics which resembled the activities of Mr. Goebbels. If I were the Senator from Michigan, in view of the nature of the charges made against the State Department and the campaign which was carried on, I do not think I should compare anyone's activities with those of the great and despicable propagandist of the Hitler regime. I do not charge that there were such tactics used in this affair, but I think an interesting comparison might be had between the tactics of Mr. Goebbels and the tactics which were employed in this campaign of vilification against the State Department.

I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan this question: Does he support the charge of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] that there are 205 card-carrying Communists in the Department of State known to Mr. Acheson to be card-carrying Communists?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, the answer is that the Senator from Michigan has no knowledge on that subject except what he finds in the report of the subcommittee and what he found at the time in the Appropriations Committee. He certainly would not take that as being a fact until he could obtain evidence.

Mr. McMAHON. At any rate, the charge made by the junior Senator from Wisconsin that there were 205 card-carrying Communists in the Department of State known to Mr. Acheson to be card-carrying Communists has not been proved, has it?

Mr. FERGUSON. I would say that I find nothing in the report that proves the charge.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator know of any evidence within his knowledge, or within the knowledge of any other person, that there are in the Department of State any card-carrying Communists known to Mr. Acheson to be such?

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator has no such facts, or he would state them on the floor.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the Senator from Michigan have any knowledge, or does he know anyone who has any knowledge, concerning any subversive activity punishable under our criminal statutes which has not been punished?

Mr. FERGUSON. I cannot answer that question, for this reason: I have seen parts of the matter to which I referred in the Marshall memorandum of a report from the FBI on file in the State Department. It has been 3 years ago, and I have no knowledge as to whether any of the persons involved are now in the State Department. It does refer to the preliminary report of the FBI on Soviet espionage activities in the United States, which involves a large number of State Department employees, some of them in high official positions.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator knows, does he not, that the FBI is in charge of investigating subversive activities in the Government?

Mr. FERGUSON. I do.

Mr. McMAHON. I am sure the Senator shares the respect of the citizens of the United States and our colleagues in the Senate for Mr. Hoover, the head of the organization.

Mr. FERGUSON. I have the highest respect for Mr. Hoover.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator knows, does he not, that Mr. Hoover performs his duties as they are laid down for him by statute?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator knows, does he not, that if there were any subversive activities, or any person was guilty of violation of a statute of the United States, Mr. Hoover would make that fact known to the prosecuting authorities of this Government?

Mr. FERGUSON. I cannot answer that because Mr. Hoover has said in committee that there are 22 subjects which he cannot even investigate without specific orders from the Attorney General, and that so far as espionage is concerned, if it involves any outside agencies, he must consult the Secretary of State. Mr. Hoover indicated without any doubt that he has allowed men to escape because he could not prosecute them by orders of the United States Secretary of State.

Mr. McMAHON. I would be obliged to the Senator from Michigan for a specific reference to any such testimony.

Mr. FERGUSON. It is in the testimony before the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. McMAHON. In the meantime I intend to make some remarks on this subject. I would suggest that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] resume his seat for a few minutes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. I decline to yield at the moment. I should like to call the Senate's attention to the fact that the Department of Justice has a very admirable record with reference to prosecuting persons who have violated the laws of the United States. They have a particularly good record, I think, with regard to cases which have been investigated and made against persons who would subvert the United States. It was not the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT], or any other Senator who prosecuted Alger Hiss and brought him to the doors of the penitentiary. It was the Department of Justice. It was not any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives who brought Judith Coplon to justice. It was not the Senator from Michigan, great prosecutor though he may be, who carried on the prosecution against the 11 Communists in New York. It was not the Senator from Ohio or the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY], or the Senator from Michigan, who has been in the process of taking care of Harry Bridges. It has not been the Senator from Michigan, who referred to the Marzani case, who prosecuted that case. It has not been any Member of this body who has prosecuted the persons who refused to answer pertinent questions regarding their communistic affiliations, and who have been sent to jail. If I am not mistaken, some 10 or 15 of them were sent to jail.
